PATNA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 685 OF 1918.

January 7, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Adami and Mr. Justice Sultan Ahmed.

SHONE THAKUR AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

CHANDESHWAR JHA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND RAM DULAR JHA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS 2ND PARTY—RESPONDENTS.

Arbitration, order superseding, confirmed on appeal —Decision on merits—Appeal—Arbitration proceedings held binding—Appeal, second, whether lies—Res judicata.

A dispute was referred to arbitration by the Court, but the arbitration was subsequently superseded and the case decided on the merits The order of supersession was confirmed on appeal In an appeal against the decision on the merits the lower Appellate Court held that a valid award having been made in the arbitration proceedings, the arbitration could not be superseded and that a decree must be passed in accordance with the award:

Held, (1) that a second appeal was competent against the decision of the lower Appellate Court; [p. 2, col. 1.]

(2) that the order superseding the arbitration having been confirmed on appeal, the lower Appellate Court was precluded from re-opening the question, [p. 2, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga

Mr. Chandra Shekhar Banerji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. N. Sinha, L. K. Jha and N. C. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this second appeal arises claimed to have been Kashtkars of certain lands under the Maharaja of Darbhanga. In a suit for rent brought against them by their landlords the lands were sold and bought by the Raj. The plaintiffs wanted a settlement of the land but knowing that it was against the rules of the Raj to re-settle lands with defaulting tenants, they got the defendants 1st party to take settlement as their Farzidars. They asserted that the defendants 1st party had interfered with their possession, and, therefore, they brought a suit for confirmation of their possession or in the alternative for recovery of possession.

About a year after the institution of the suit, the parties agreed to submit their case to arbitration, and further agreed to abide by the decision of the majority of the three arbitrators to be appointed. The time fixed for the award was the 8th May 1916. The arbitrators failed to submit their award on that date and had many extensions of time granted with the consent of the Court and the parties. On the 30th June 1916 the arbitrators submitted their award, but on the 27th July the defendants objected to the form of the award in that each of the arbitrators had given his decision on a separate piece of paper and had signed these papers on different dates and at different places. The Court ruled that the award should be on one single instrument complete in itself and that it should be conjointly signed by the three arbitrators. The arbitrators were, therefore, requested to write their award on a single piece of paper and to sign it, and time was given up to the 3rd of August. On the 15th August two of the arbitrators submited an award signed by themselves, but the third arbitrator put in no separate decision, and time was asked for. Further extensions of time were asked for until on the 19th September 1916 the Court found that no further time could be granted and that such decisions as had already been submitted did not amount to an award, and that, as so much time had been taken, the arbitration must be superseded. The parties were directed to come ready with their evidence for the trial of the case on its merits. Against this order of supersession an appeal was filed before the District Judge. The learned District Judge of Darbhanga, after a discussion as to whether an appeal lay or not, and without coming to any definite finding on that point, held that there was no good reason to hold that the lower Court should have given more time and saw no reason to interfere. He dismissed the appeal with costs.

The Munsif then decided the case on its merits and dismissed the suit. Against the decision of the Munsif an appeal was lodged before the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, who held that, when two of the arbitrators came to the same finding and submitted their award on separate papers, there was no reason for setting aside the award on the ground that the third arbitrator submitted a contrary award and did not sign it. He held that there had been no misconduct and that the award of the two arbitrators was valid and good and that the suit must be decreed in terms of the decision arrived at by these two arbitrators He, therefore, allowed the appeal and set aside the decree of the Munsif and decreed the suit in terms of the award of the majority of the arbitrators.

Before us on appeal against this decision a preliminary point has been raised whether a second appeal arises or not. We have no doubt that, following the cases: Shyama Charan Kramanik v. Prolhad Durwan (1), Ganga Prasad v. Kura (2) and Abdul Taher v. Azmut Bibi (3), an appeal does lie to this Court in the present case. It is clear to us that the fact that the decision of the Munsif superseding the award was confirmed on appeal, precluded the Subordinate Judge on appeal from entering into the question whether the order of supersession was good or not. If the appellant disagreed with the order of supersession and the confirmation thereof by the Appellate Court, he should have taken further steps to have those decisions set aside. No steps were taken by him and it was not open then to the Subordinate Judge to consider the validity of the order of supersession. On this ground we feel that the case must be remanded to the Court of the District Judge for the hearing of the appeal on the merits. Costs will follow the result.

Case remanded.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 2020 OF 1918.

May 3, 1919.

Present:—Sir Henry Rattigan, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.

Musammat BHOLI BAI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Musammat CHIMNI BAI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Widow, right of, to maintenance—Maintenance, arrears of, right to recover.

A Hindu widow is entitled to claim arrears of maintenance at a reasonable rate, regard being had to the status of her deceased husband and to the value of the property left by him, and it is not necessary for her to prove before coming into Court that she made a demand for such arrears and that the demand was refused. [p. 3, col. 2; p. 4, col 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Multan, dated the 16th March 1918.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Bahadur Chand and Shive Ram Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are Khatris of Multan and, as is now admitted, governed by Hindu Law. The following table shows the relationship of the plaintiff, Musammat Bholi Bai, with the defendant Musammat Chimni Bai.

Jhangi Ram (died 1893).
(Widow Musammat Bholi, plaintiff).
|
Hoa Ram (died 23rd April 1909).
(Widow Musammat Chimni Bai).

Hoa Ram died in April 1909, and after his death the plaintiff and defendant appeared to have lived together amicably till

September of the same year. The plaintiff alleges that since the latter date she has been given a small kotha to live in, but that she received no further maintenance from the defendant who had taken possession of all the family property On the 30th of August 1912 the plaintiff applied for permission to sue in forma pauperis, and with her application filed a plaint setting forth that by custom of the parties she was entitled to joint possession with the defendant of all the property left by Hoa Ram. In the alternative she pleaded that she was entitled to reasonable maintenance. Her application was rejected on the 2nd July 1913, and on the 12th of October 1913 the present suit was instituted on full Court-fee stamp.

The claim as now laid was the same as the previous claim, but in the present suit the plaintiff fixed her maintenance at Rs. 100 per mensem, which she claimed to be due to her from September 1909 up to the date of suit, for the period during which the litigation was pending, and thereafter up to the date of her death. This suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge as barred by reason of a previous suit to which plaintiff and defendant were parties, but on the 8th of January 1918 the Chief Court upset the decision of the Subordinate Judge and remanded the case for disposal on the merits. The Sub Judge has now held that the plaintiff has failed to establish the custom set up by her; that under Hindu Law she is entitled to reasonable maintenance; and that Rs. 45 per mensem is a reasonable sum to allow for the future. To enable her to realize this the Subordinate Judge in his judgment assigned to her the income of the Tibbiwala well, which he found to amount to about Rs. 35 per mensem, and decreed her a further sum of Rs. 10 per mensem in cash. He also granted the plaintiff maintenance at the rate of Rs. 40 per mensem from the date of suit to the date of decree. But in his judgment he says nothing as regards her claim for arrears of maintenance from September 1909 up to the date of suit. The plaintiff has accepted the sum of Rs. 45 per mensem as reasonable maintenance for the future, but has preferred an appeal to this Court as regards arrears of maintenance up to the date of suit. She also claims that Rs. 45 per mensum and not Rs. 40 should be allowed her for the period during which the litigation has been pending and that the decree should provide for delivery of possession to her of the Tibbiwala well so as to enable her to realize the income therefrom for herself. Finally, appellant claims that costs have been wrongly assessed in the decree sheet and that she is entitled to proportionate costs both as regards the previous proceedings in this Court and also in the Court below.

Defendant has not appealed from the decree of the Subordinate Judge but Mr. Bahadur Chand on her behalf has urged in reply to the plaintiff's appeal:—

(1) that the plaintiff had been given a kotha for her residence and had been duly supplied with all necessary maintenance from the date of Hoa Ram's death;

(2) that in any event the grant of arrears of maintenance was discretionary with the Court and that no claim for such arrears should be entertained, unless the widow can show that she had been unable to obtain means of maintenance without incurring debts or liabilities to third persons or that her needs and necessities had been urgent;

(3) that in any event the rate of maintenance for the period prior to the institution of suit should be fixed at a rate less than that fixed for her maintenance after decree; and

(4) that in any event, the income of the property had been estimated at far too great a value by the Subordinate Judge.

In support of his arguments the learned Vakil referred to Raghubans v. Bhagwant (1), Rangubai v. Subaji Ramchandra (2), Karbasappa v. Kallava (3), Subramania Aiyar v. Muthammal (4), Manikka Mudaliar v. Soubagia Ammal (5). We have perused these authorities but cannot find that they lay down any general rule for guidance in all cases. It is accepted as a principle, generally applicable, that a Hindu widow is entitled to claim arrears of maintenance at a reasonable rate, regard being had to the status of her deceased husband and to the value of the property left by him, and that it is not necessary for her to prove before coming into Court that she made a demand for such arrears and that the demand was refused. Apart from these general principles which are ordinarily applicable, every case of the kind now before us must be decided with reference to its own particular facts. One circumstance that has frequently been held to disentitle a widow to claim arrears of maintenance is the delay that has occurred in preferring her claim. Upon this circumstance stress was laid in the Allahabad and Bombay authorities cited by Mr. Bahadur Chand. On the other hand, the Privy Council authority, cited in Rangathayi Ammal v. Nelli Munusawmy Chetty (6) for the proposition that arrears will be refused "only in cases where the person liable to make the payment had justifiable grounds for inferring that the claim was abandoned," and had in consequence not set aside any portion of his annual income to meet such a claim, does not appear to us to support so wide a proposition. In the case referred to [Raja Yarlagadda Mallikarjuna Prasad Nayadu v. Raja Yarlagadda Durga Prasadu Nayadu (7)], which we may note in passing dealt with a claim by the younger male members of a family, their Lordships merely remarked: "It may well be that, if he (i. e., defendant) had been misled into the belief that the claim for maintenance was abandoned and had in consequence not set aside any portion of his annual income to meet such a claim, he would have had a good defence to the present action. But, without some such ground of defence, it is impossible to hold that the younger brothers of the defendant have forfeited an undoubted right merely because they were, in the first instance, advised to institute a wrong suit and did not claim their maintenance as it fell due." With every respect to the learned Judges of the Madras High Court we cannot read these remarks as laying down the rule propounded in the case reported as Rangathayi Ammal v. Nelli Munusawmy Chetty (6).

It is clear then from the authorities that we must decide the present claim with reference to the facts proved before us. Defendant in her written statement has admitted that she has enjoyed exclusive possession of the property since the death of Hoa Ram and that plaintiff is entitled to reasonable maintenance. Her answer to the claim is that plaintiff has actually received such maintenance. The burden of proof in the circumstances is clearly on defendant to prove her allegation and in our opinion she has failed to discharge it, while plaintiff, on the other hand, has stated on oath that she has received no such maintenance since September 1909, that she had been dependant on the charity of her brothers, and that her brothers looked to her to recoup them for advances made to her, if she proves successful in the present litigation. We hold, therefore, on the evidence that plaintiff has not received maintenance from the defendant since September 1909.

The question remains whether she has by any act or omission on her part forfeited her right to claim arrears of maintenance for the four years prior to suit. In our opinion nothing has been proved to deprive plaintiff of her right. She has consistently urged from the first that she is entitled to claim maintenance from the person in possession of the family property. She put forward this claim in 1910 when the collaterals were suing Musammat Chimni Bai for possession, and when that suit was eventually settled in May 1912 by a compromise whereby Musammat Chimni Bai acquired the property for her life, plaintiff in August 1912 instituted proceedings with a view to obtaining maintenance from Musammat Chimni Bai. There has thus been no delay on her part in putting forward her claim, and it is conceded that she has throughout been living in a kotha which belonged to her deceased husband Jhangi Ram. We hold accordingly that she is entitled to claim arrears of maintenance for the period from September 1909 up to the date of institution of the suit. Nor do we see any reason to decree that claim at a rate less than the rate fixed for the plaintiff's maintenance for the future. She will thus receive arrears of maintenance at Rs. 45 per mensem from September 1909 to October 1913. In this connection we have merely one or two remarks to make with reference to Mr. Bahadur Chand's contention that the income of the property has been wrongly assessed by the Subordinate Judge. As a matter of fact, we find that a mistake has been made but the mistake is one in favour of the defendant. The Subordinate Judge states that the income as estimated by reference to the revenue papers filed in the case comes to Rs. 862 5 0. As a matter of fact, this sum represents merely the income of the land at Mauza Inayatpur Matha (Exhibit P-30), and the total income of the land belonging to the family in the four villages where the property is situate, amounts to Rs. 1,971-10-0 On this mistake being pointed out to him, Mr. Bahadur Chand had nothing further to urge on this point.

In his judgment the Subordinate Judge states that he allows plaintiff maintenance at the rate of Rs. 40 per mensem from the date of institution of the suit up to the date of the decree but by an oversight this provision has been omitted from the decree sheet. Here again we think that plaintiff is entitled to maintenance for the period in question at the rate of Rs. 45 per mensem and that there was no sound reason for granting her maintenance at a lesser rate for that period.

It is clear from the judgment that the Court below intended to grant plaintiff a decree for possession of the Tibbi wala wall for her life, but the decree is not as clear as it might be on this point. In the decree now to be drawn up we direct that express provision shall be made for the grant of possession of this wall to plaintiff for her life.

Finally, it is urged by Mr. Tek Chand and admitted by Mr. Bahadur Chand that costs have been wrongly assessed in the decree sheet of the lower Court. We hold that plaintiff is entitled to costs proportionate to the amount decreed to her and we direct that these costs be assessed upon that basis, the value of the suit for this purpose being taken to be ten years' maintenance at the rate of Rs. 45 per mensem.

We accept the appeal and grant plaintiff a decree in terms of our conclusions as above expressed.

Appeal accepted.

Hindu Law—Succession—Personal law or law of domicile, whether and when governs migrator—Dayabhaga or Mitakshara—Burden of proof—Presumption—Observance of mixed customs and ceremonies, effect of.

A Hindu family residing in a particular province of India is presumed to be governed by the law of the place where it resides But where it is shown to have migrated from one province to another, the presumption is that it carried with it the laws and customs as to succession and family relation prevailing in the province from which it came This presumption, however, is rebuttable by proof that the family has adopted the laws and usages of the place to which it has migrated. [p. 9, col. 1]

Where there is no proof of migration, the burden lies upon the party making the assertion to prove that a family is governed in matters of succession by some law other than the law of the place where it resides. This burden may be discharged by proof of instances of succession consistent with the former law and inconsistent with the latter law The evidence to support the case that the family has conformed to religious or social rites and usages consistent with the former and inconsistent with the latter law may also strengthen his case because there is in Hindu Law a close connection between religion and succession to property. [p. 9, col. 2.]

A mixture of customs and ceremonies observed by a family can be of no assistance to the party seeking to establish the applicability of a personal law not prevalent in the locality in which the family resides. [p. 13, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 5th of May 1917.

IN No. 330 OF 1917.

Being Title Appeal No. 330 of 1917 in the Court of the District Judge, Dinajpur, preferred on the 14th June 1917 against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 5th of May 1917, and transferred to the file of this Court by an order of Justice Sir Charles Chitty, Kt., and Mr. Justice Smither made on the 30th of November 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babus Profulla Chandra Nag, Indu Bhusan Biswas and Pramatha Nath Banerjee), for the Appellants.—These appeals arise out of two suits for possession on establishment of title to moveable and immoveable properties. The common ancestor of the parties was one Sibu Shaha, who died leaving two sons Jiban and Shibaram. The plaintiffs are the descendants of Jiban and the defendants those of Shibaram. Now I shall first trace the plaintiffs' descent. Jiban had a son Hazura, who had two sons Tilak and Bilak. The latter died childless in 1882 leaving a widow Swarnamoyee, who died in 1891. Tilak had two sons and two daughters. The two sons were Doman who died unmarried in 1902, and Peary who also died unmarried in 1894. Of the two daughters of Tilak Prastarmoyee had two sons, Pitamber who is plaintiff No. 1 and Hemanta who is plaintiff No. 2 in Appeal No. 134. Shilamoyee has one son Sishu, who is the plaintiff in the other appeal. Now as to the defendants the second son of Shibu Shaha Shibaram had one son Satan Shaha, who again had one son Madan Shaha. The principal defendant Nishi Kanta Shaha is the son of Madan Shaha. The dispute between the parties is with regard to the devolution of Peary Shaha's estate.

The plaintiffs' case is that Doman and Peary and their forefathers were residents in Bengal and, therefore, the succession would be governed by the Dayabhaga Law. On Peary's death the plaintiffs would be entitled to succeed as the defendant Nishi had a too distant relationship with Peary. The plaintiffs are the sisters' sons of the propositus, while the defendant is the great-great-grandfather's great-great-grandson.

The case for the defence was that Doman and Peary and all Telies of Rani Sankail were Maghya Telies and were governed by the Mitakshara Law and that the defendant was an agnate of Peary and as such was his heir and would, therefore, be preferred to the plaintiffs who were his sisters' sons. The defendant denied that the widow of Bilak (Swarnamoyee) registered her name and was in possession of his estate which, even if true, would not affect the defendant, as he was insane at the time.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found all the issues in favour of the defendants. Hence this appeal. My points would be that the defendant is no relation of the plaintiffs and is not a member of the family and secondly, that the parties are governed by the Dayabhaga Law. The parties being residents of Rani Sankail in the District of Dinajpur in Bengal, the presumption is that they are governed by the Dayabhaga School. This presumption may be rebutted by proof that the forefathers of Doman and Peary had migrated from up-country where Mitakshara Law prevails, for in such a case the presumption of law is in favour of the retention by the family of the laws and usages of the country of its origin. But this presumption may again be rebutted by proving that the family has adopted the laws and customs of the place of its present domicile and then it will be subject to the school prevailing in that place. Refers to Shastri on Hindu Law (4th Edition) 39, Ram Das v. Chandra Dassia (1), Soorendronath Roy v. Musammat Heeramonee Burmoneah (2). (Reads evidence to show how far the defendant succeeded in rebutting the presumption in favour of the plaintiffs)

By the genealogy set up by the defendant he admits that the plaintiffs are the sisters' sons of Peary and that Peary was the grandson of Hazura. But the principal question in controversy is whether Nishi had any relation with Hazura, which the plaintiffs deny. Then, as to which school of law is applicable to the parties. The defendant contends that the family is governed by the Mitakshara. But there is not a single word in the written statement which would indicate that the family migrated from a place where the Mitakshara Law prevailed. Neither does the evidence adduced by him throw any light as to the original place of residence or as to the time when the migration, according to him, took place. If the fact that the defendant's grandfather came from Purnea is true, it only proves that he and the plaintiffs did not come from the common stock. The party friction that arose out of the marriages of Madhab Shaha's children in Purnea also proves that the Telies of Rani Kankail did not migrate from upcountry. There have been two parties in the society of the Telies both in Purnea as well as in Dinajpur. The burden of proof, therefore, still remains on the defendant to show that the parties adhered to the usages and customs prevalent in places where Mitakshara Law obtains. Let us see, therefore, how far he has succeeded in doing that. (Reads evidence as to the devolution and succession to the family properties.)

I will now place before your Lordships the instances of devolution of properties according to the Dayabhaga. I may at the outset say that on Bilak's death he was succeeded by his widow Swarnamoyee and Tilak who was living jointly with him, which has not been denied by defendant. (Reads further evidence oral and documentary.) Though the onus is not on the plaintiffs to prove that they adopted the Bengal School of Hindu Law, still from the instances just cited it is clear that the Telies of Rani Sankail are governed by the Dayabhaga Law. (Reads further documentary evidence.) Then as to the religious customs and usages, I would show from the evidence I will now place, that the family observed them just like other people governed by the Dayabhaga Law. (Reads evidence as to Pujas, marriages, etc.) I would also point out that the parties—the plaintiffs—at each instance took out succession certificates on the death of a member.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babus Narain Chandra Kar and Debendranath Mondal), for the Respondent.—The primary question to be decided in this case is whether the parties are governed by the Mitakshara or the Dayabhaga Law. Our case is that the family migrated from Behar where the Mitakshara prevails, and that it had never adopted the Dayabhaga Law in the devolution of and succession to the properties of the deceased members. The first Court has accepted our contention and the presumption of law is in our favour. See Parbati Kumari v. Jagadis Chunder (3). Under such circumstances the burden of proving otherwise lies on the plaintiffs. The fact that the family migrated from Behar is supported also by the evidence. (Reads evidence.) There is also sufficient proof on the record to show that the family retained the Mitakshara Law in matters of succession, religious usages, etc, which has been accepted by the Court below. (Reads evidence.) These instances prove that the Mitakshara Law governed the family succession. As regards the succession to Bilak's estate by Tilak and Swarnamoyee which has been made much of by the other side, I would submit that that would not affect the defendant in any way inasmuch as he was then temporarily insane. Further specification of shares in that instance served to effect a severance of interest in the Mitakashara family. See Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh (4), Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiroj (5), Balabux v. Rukhmabai (6). Then as to the religious ceremonies and usages I submit they are all observed strictly according to the Mitakshara. (Reads and cites instances from the evidence.) The defendant is a member of the same family as the plaintiffs, which has also been formed to be true by the trial Court. The defendant, therefore, is entitled to succeed to Peary's estate in preference to the plaintiffs, being an agnatic relation of the deceased. The trial Court found in our favour on all the questions now in controversy and it has been abundantly proved from the evidence that the parties are governed by the Mitakshara Law, even though they have settled in Bengal and that the defendant, therefore, is entitled to succeed, being an agnate of Peary.

PITAMBAR CHANDRA SHAHA v. NISHI KANTA SAHA.

Dr. Basak replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigations which have resulted in these two appeals is the estate of one Peary Mohan Saha Chowdhury, who died unmarried on the 18th February 1904. He left two step-sisters Shilamoyee and Prastarmoyee. The former has a son Sisu Kumar Saha, the latter has two infant sons Pitambar Chandra Saha and Hemanta Kumar Saha. The rival claimants to the estate are, on the one hand, these three nephews of the deceased, and, on the other hand, the great great grandson of the great-great-grandfather of the deceased, by name Nisikanta Saha. The relationship between the parties appears from the following genealogical table:—

The two sons of Prastarmoyee have instituted one of these suits for recovery of two-thirds share and the son of Shilamoyee has instituted the other suit in respect of the remaining one-third share. The contest thus is between the sisters' sons on the one hand, and the great-great-grandfather's great-great grandson on the other hand. If the family is governed by the Dayabhaga Law, the plaintiffs are the preferential heirs; if the family is governed by the Mitakshara Law, the defendant is entitled to succeed. The cardinal question in controversy consequently is, whether the family is governed by the Dayabhaga Law as the plaintiffs allege or by the Mitakshara Law as the defendant asserts. There was also a controversy in the Court below as to whether the defendant was at all a member of the family. Upon that point, as also upon the question of the personal law applicable to the parties, the Subordinate Judge has found against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and have assailed the decision of the Subordinate Judge upon both the matters. As regards the question of relationship, we are of opinion that the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge is amply supported by the evidence on the record. We shall consequently proceed to deal with the question of the personal law which governs the parties in matters of inheritance.

The plaintiffs assert that the family is governed by the Dayabhaga Law, the defendant alleges that the family migrated from Behar, where the Mitakshara Law prevails, and that, notwithstanding migration into Bengal, the members of the family have adhered to the law of their origin. The Subordinate Judge has accepted the contention of the defendant.

Before we proceed to examine the evidence on the record, it is desirable to consider how the question should be approached, as there has been considerable discussion at the Bar upon the subject of burden of proof. It is well settled that a Hindu family residing in a particular province of India is presumed to be governed by the law of the place where it resides. Ram Das v. Chandra Dassia (1). But where a Hindu family is shown to have migrated from one province to another, the presumption is that it carried with it the laws and customs as to succession and family relation prevailing in the province from which it came. Parbati Kumari v. Jogadis Ohunder (3), Soorendronath Roy v. Musammat Heeramonee Burmoneah (2). This presumption, however, is rebuttable by proof that the family has adopted the laws and usages of the place to which it has migrated. Gobind Chandra v. Radha Kristo Das (7), Jagannath v. Narayan Lal (8), Mailathi Anni v. Subbaraya Mudaliar (9), Kulada Prosad Pandey v. Haripada Chattopadhyaya (10).

We start then with the position that as the family is resident in the district of Dinajpur in the Presidency of Bengal where the Dayabhaga Law prevails, the presumption is that the family is governed in matters of succession by that Law. This presumption may be rebutted by proof that the family migrated from a province where the Mitakshara Law prevailed. The case developed in the evidence is that the family migrated from Behar, but no such statement was explicitly made in the written statement of the defendant. There is no evidence, direct or indirect, that this family did migrate from Behar. No evidence is forthcoming as to the original place of residence or as to the time when the alleged migration took place. This is not a matter for surprise. The family is not of sufficient importance to have preserved a history of its antecedents or movements, the origin of the family is unknown, its original place of residence is unascertainable, and the time when the family may have moved from one place to another is equally uncertain. The assertion of the defendant that the migaration took place during the time of his grandfather is not corroborated by independent evidence, and if true, would tend to cast doubt upon his connection with this family as a member of the junior branch. Besides, if the alleged migration was an event of so recent a date, confirmatory evidence, oral or documentary, might have been expected. There is this further difficulty that even if tangible evidence of migration had been available, the time of migration would be a vital point for consideration. It is a historical fact that the Brahmins and Kayasthas of Bengal migrated from Karanj and originally brought with them the Mithila Law; it was after their settlement in this province, that the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law was founded by Jimutavahana about the 14th century (Jolly, Tagore Lectures 22; Sarbadhikari, Tagore Lectures 403), and that is the law which now governs the Hindu population of this Presidency even though they may have originally migrated from North Behar. Consequently, the defendant would have to establish, not merely that the family migrated from Behar, but that the migration took place after the foundation of the Bengal School of Hindu Law by the author of the Dayabhaga. There is no trace of evidence on the record to enable the defendant to meet this requirement. The fundamental fact, which if proved would have shifted the burden of proof from the defendant, thus remains unestablished. The burden consequently lies upon the defendant to prove that the family is governed in matters of succession by the Mitakshara Law. This burden may be discharged by proof of instances of succession consistent with the Mitakshara Law and inconsistent with the Dayabhaga Law. The evidence to support the case that the family has conformed to religious or social rites and usages consistent with the Mitakshara Law and inconsistent with the Dayabhaga Law may also strengthen his case, because as was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Soorendronath Roy v. Musammat Heeramonee Burmoneah (2), there is in Hindu Law a close connection between their religion and their succession to property. We shall proceed now to scrutinise the evidence from this standpoint.

The first instance given by the defendant

to prove devolution of property according to the Mitakshara is that of Doman. The family priest Bisnu Dutt asserts that after the death of Doman, his agnate Gobardhan took his property to the exclusion of Chandra Mohan, the son of his sister Bhagyamani. But Chandra Mohan completely demolishes this case and proves that he succeeded to the estate of his maternal uncle. This is corroborated by rent receipts, of which the genuineness has been established by the evidence of Manindra and Nisikanta. This instance supports the theory of the applicability of the Dayabhaga Law.

The next instance relates to the property of Radha Chaudhuri. Bisnu Dutt states that Madan, the agnate of the deceased, took to the exclusion of the daughter's son Kamalakanta, but he admits that Madan lived in a separate house. If this be true, whether the Mitakshara or the Dayabhaga applies, Madan as a cousin was not entitled to succeed, notwithstanding the assertion of Bisnu Dutt that an agnate even though separate, under the Mitakshara Law, takes in preference to the daughter's son, nor is there any tangible evidence to support the allegation that Radha Chaudhuri had jotes which Madan took by inheritance and sold to Balaram.

The next instance cited is that of Amrita Saha, whose property is said to have been inherited by his agnatic nephew Pabana in preference to his daughter Kalamani and his daughter's son Kandura. This instance is fictitious. Pabana was separate from his uncle and was not a preferential heir even according to the Mitakshara. It is doubtful whether Amrita left any land, but whatever property he had, passed to his daughter Kalamani according to the testimony of Chandra Mohan and Manindra.

The next instance mentioned is that of Belku, wohse property, according to Bisnu Dutt, was inherited by his agnatic cousin Jhulu in preference to his wife, daughter and mother. There can be no foundation for this statement, as Jhulu could have no claim to supersede the wife, daughter and mother, either by right of survivorship or by right of inheritence, according to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhaga.

Another instance adduced is that of Umakanta, whose property is said to have been inherited by his agnate Sudhap in preference to his sisters' sons Lakshmi and Sitaram. But according to Kamal Lochan and Nishi Kanta, Sudhap was the son of Gokul who was the brother of Umakanta. The instance is consequently consistent with the Dayabhaga.

The next instance brought forward is that of Mathur, whose estate is said to have been inherited by his agnate Balia in preference to Nanda Hari, the son of his sister. But Nisikanta admits that Mathur had no land, and according to Manindra, Mathur was a leper and had no property. There is good reason to hold that this instance is spurious, specially as Balia who is alive has not been called.

The next instance offered is that of Naba Saha, whose estate is said to have been inherited by his mother in preference to his daughters. But a mother cannot inherit in preference to a daughter under either the Mitakshara or the Dayabhaga.

The next instance is that of Atmaram, whose estate is alleged to have been inherited by his agnatic nephew Chandra Mohan, in preference to his daughters Ano, Jano and Bhanga. Nisikanta is the son of Ano and Tepa the son of Bhanga. Nisikanta is not corroborated on this point and is obliged to admit that Chandra Mohan was separate from Atmaram when he succeeded to the estate of the latter by inheritance. The principle of survivorship had consequently no application and, even according to the Mitakshara, the daughters were preferential heirs to the separated agnatic nephew. The instance is probably spurious, as Nisikanta admits that Atmaram left no land.

The next instance is that of Laban whose estate, it is alleged, was taken by his nephews living in commensality with him, in preference to his widow. Bhairab, one of the nephews, has been examined for the defendant and admits that Madhab, the elder brother of Paresmani, the widow of Laban, managed the property of Paresmani. This seems to indicate that she inherited her husband's estate, though she lived sometimes jointly with, sometimes separate from, her husband's co sharers.

The next instance is that of Dhanapati, whose estate is said to have been taken by his brothers in supersession of his widow. Bhairab attempts to prove this, but breaks down in cross-examinatson. Dhanapati predeceased his father and his childless widow could not inherit either according to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhaga.

These instances, adduced by the defendant, do not help his case in the least. On the other hand, some of them have the appearance of inventions based upon an inaccurate knowledge of the Mitakshara Law. We pass on to some instances relied upon by the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs lay stress upon the case of Swarnamoyi, the widow of Bilak, the paternal uncle of Peary Mohan whose estate is in dispute. Bilak was joint with his brother Tilak and yet his estate was taken by Swarnamoyi. Her name was registered under the Land Registration Act in place of her deceased husband, Bilak. After the death of Swarnamoyi, the name of Tilak was registered as the next reversioner by right of inheritance. This is supported by the deposition of Tilak in the land registration case and is strengthened by the registered Kabuliat executed by Morad Baksh in favour of Tilak and Swarnamoyi on the 18th September 1885. The balance of oral evidence is undoubtedly in favour of this instance. The defendant was consequently driven to start the story that Tilak was insane, but the evidence on the point is hopelessly contradictory. We may add that in this Court an endeavour was made to negative the effect of this instance by invoking the aid of the theory that specification of shares causes a severance of interest in a family governed by the Mitakshara Law and reliance was placed upon the decisions in Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koer (11), Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh (4), Giria Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (5), but such a theory was not started in the Court below and facts which would have been material to enable the Court to determine the point are not on the record. In our opinion, this instance militates against the view that the family is governed by the Mitakshara Law.

The planitiffs rely upon another instance from the family of Peary, Binod and Lalbihari. They were the sons of Bhuban, who had two brothers Sonaram and Balaram. Balaram married Prastarmoyi, and was the father of Pitambar and Hemanta, the plaintiffs in suit No. 132 and Appeal No. 134. Sonaram had a son Jagabandhu. Peary married Pratibha. Lalbihari had a daughter Milan Dasi. Nimai was the rephew of Lalbihari. The case for the plaintiffs is that Pratibha took the estate of her husband Peary in preference to her husband's brother. In support of this view, reliance is placed upon proceedings in two suits which were instituted against the members of the family by creditors. These are consistent only with the theory that the family was deemed to be governed by the Dayabhaga Law. Subsequently Jagabandhu and Balaram separated, while Pratibha, Lalbihari and Binod continued joint. This is sufficiently indicated by the fact that two conveyances were executed, one in favour of the heirs of Bhuban, the other in favour of Jagabandhu. An endeavour was made to neutralise the effect of these facts by reliance on the proposition laid down by the Judicial Committee in Balabux v. Rukhmabai (6) that the separation of one member of a family operates in law as a disintegration of the entire family. That principle could have no application to the present case. The withdrawal of Jagabandhu from the family could not affect the position of the descendants of Bhuban, if the family was governed by the Dayabhaga Law. There is no need to assume a separation in law followed by an imaginary reunion amongst them. The evidence conclusively shows that Jagabandhu alone went out of the family, leaving unaffected the mutual relation of his cousins as members of a joint Hindu family. This instance is clearly inconsistent with the case of the defendant.

Another instance mentioned by the plaintiffs is that of Harin Dasi, who is said to have succeeded to the estate of her son Gopal living jointly with his brother Ananda. The defendant seeks to minimise the effect of this instance by invoking the aid of the theory that as Gangaram, the brother of Ananda and Gopal, separated, there must have been a complete disruption of the family. But the fact remains that Gangaram left the family during the lifetime of his father, that Gopal and Ananda remained joint with their father and that after his death the two brothers remained joint till Gopal died.

The last instance relied upon by the plaintiffs is that of Chandra Mohan, who succeeded to the estate left by his maternal uncle Doman. The assertion of Bishnu Datt that the property passed to Gobardhan, an agnate of Doman, is not corroborated by independent testimony. On the other hand, the allegations of Chandra Mohan are confirmed by a long series of rent receipts, which are undoubtedly genuine and prove his possession.

It is thus plain that of the four instances mentioned by the plaintiffs, the first and fourth are consistent only with the theory that the family is governed by the Dayabhaga Law, the second and third instances also point to the same conclusion, unless we adopt the theory of the defendant that in each of those cases there was a separation in law, though the parties in fact continued joint. But even on that view, the only result is that the instances become neutral, they become consistent with either school of law and do not advance the case of the defendant that the family is governed by the Mitakshara Law.

Here we may mention that stress has been rightly laid by the plaintiffs on the circumstance that succession certificates have been repeatedly taken out where a succession certificate would be needless if the parties were governed by the Mitakshara Law: Beejraj v. Bhyropersaud (12), Patishuri Partab Narain Singh v. Bhagwati Prasad (13), Jagmohandas v. Allu Maria (14), Subramanian Chetti v. Rakku Servai (15). Amongst relevant instances may be mentioned the following. After the death of Tilak in 1898, the defendant Nisikanta, who was then in the employ of Balaram, took a guardianship certificate for the infants Doman and Peary and a succession certificate on their behalf. After the death of Doman, three years later, Nisikanta took out another succession certificate on behalf of Peary. After the death of Peary, Nisikanta applied for a succession certificate as his heir. The certificate so granted was revoked at the instance of Sisukumar as soon as he attained majority. After the deaths of Binod and Pratibha, Lalbihari took out three succession certificates. Hiramani, the widow of Dhanapati, took out succession certificates on behalf of Jogendra and his minor brother, after the death of their mother, for collection of debts. These instances converge to the conclusion that the parties are governed, not by the Mitakshara, but by the Dayabhaga Law.

The inference deducible from the instances of succession and the grant of succession certificates is in no way weakened by the evidence of alleged peculiarities in religious and social ceremonies, which are said to be consistent with the Mitakshara and inconsistent with the Dayabhaga. The parties, no doubt, have employed a Maithili Brahmin as their priest This, however, is by no means conclusive, and he admits that he uses books on ceremonial matters, which are in use in Bengal, such as Hindu Satkarmamala and Purohit Darpan. The evidence as to the performance of special ceremonies is of an entirely inconclusive character. In connection with marriages, a ceremony called the ring ceremony is mentioned which consists in the sprinkling of vermilion as soon as marriage proposal is finally settled This evidence shows that this is common amongst Bengal Telis and is not peculiar to Madhya Telis (the sect to which the defendant claims that the family belongs). The only peculiarity alleged is a conversation carried on ostensibly for the purpose of ensuring that the marriage is not contracted with a person outside the sect. Other ceremonies stated to be prevalent are Astamangal, Kankanbandhan, Telhalud, Patrakaran, Nandimukh, Satpak, Maladan, Bason, Kusundika and Saptapadigaman. But it is plain that these are in vogue equally amongst Bengal Telis. Indeed, some of them, such as the Nandimukh Sradh on occasions of marriage and rice ceremony, Saptapadigaman at the time of the marriage ceremony, and the Yajna are obligatory under both the Dayabhaga and the Mitakshara Schools. Some stress was laid on the period of impurity resulting from the death of a relation, and the defendant sought to prove that the Sradh was performed on the 32nd instead of the 31st day. The attempt was futile, because the same period of impurity is prescribed by the Bengal and Benares Schools. The evidence of Bishnu Datt is on these matters singularly unreliable; he has endeavoured to substantiate imaginary differences in religious and ceremonial matters between the two schools which have no real existence,

(15) 20 M. 232; 7 M. L. J. 100.

But his attempt in this direction has been quite as futile as in the case of instances of succession which were alleged to be in conformity with the one school and not the other. It may be a matter for argument whether this is due to his ignorance or is a deliberate departure from truth; in any view, we cannot place the same reliance upon his assertions as the Subordinate Judge did.

It is worthy of note that whatever differences may or may not exist in matters ceremonial, there are several instances of the performance of Sradhs by persons who were entitled to the property of the deceased according to the Day bhaga School. Thus, Sisu Kumar performed the Sradh of Peary. Dharani, the daughter's son of Gangaram, performed his Sradh and the estate was inherited by his mother. Bhairab had to admit that on the death of his own agnatic cousin Bigaroo, the widow performed the Sradh, although he himself and other agnates were present at the time of his death.

An attempt has been made to show that the Maghya Telis are of the same class as Purnea Telis and that there is social intercourse between the two sects. There is no reliable evidence in support of this assertion. On the other hand, the evidence indicates that an attempt at such intercourse on the occasion of a marriage in the family of Madhab led to acute caste disputes. The truth seems to be that there may have been some commingling of customs, as Purnea in Behar and Dinajpur in Bengal are not separated by an impassable barrier. But as pointed out by the Sadar Court in an early case, such mixture of customs and ceremonies can be of no assistance to the party seeking to establish the applicability of a personal law not prevalent in the locality. Raj Chunder Narain v. Gocul Chund Goh (16). Reference may in this connection be made also to Chundro Sekhur Roy v. Nobin Soondur Roy (17), Ram Bromo v Kaminee Soonduree (18), Junaruddeen v. Nobin Chunder (19), Obunnessurree v. Kishen (20), Sonatun v. Katun (21), Pirthee Singh v. Musammat Sheo Soonduree (22), Bhagabati Koer v. Sohodra Koer (23), Kulida Prasad Pandey v Haripala Chattopadhyaya (10), Gobind Chandra v. Radha Kristo Das (7), Jagannath v. Narayan Lal (8), Soorendronath Roy v. Musammat Heeramonee Burmoneah (2) which reversed the decision of Trevor, Seton, Karr and Jackson, JJ., in Heeramonee v. Nuffaree (24). If we apply the principle deducible from these cases, it is plain that the defendant has failed to discharge the burden which rested on him, namely, to prove that the family came from a province where the Mitakshara Law prevailed, into Bengal and that it has adhered to Mitakshara Law in matters of succession. But we may add that even if the family be assumed to have migrated into Bengal and to have retained some of its religious rites and ceremonies, the evidence points to the conclusion that the family has acquired a course of devolution of property in accordance with the common course of descent of property in the district under the Bengal School of Hindu Law. In either of these views, the defendant cannot successfully resist the claim of the plaintiffs.

The result is that these appeals are allowed and the decrees of the Subordinate Judge set aside. The suits are decreed in respect of the immoveable properties mentioned in the schedules to the plaints. The claim to moveables is dismissed, as we agree with the Subordinate Judge in his finding that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their claim to the moveables; the evidence in regard to the alleged moveables and their values in scanty and unsatisfactory. The plaintiffs will be entitled to half their costs in both the Courts.

MOHAMMAD KHAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

FAZAL DAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Abadi, whether liable to partition.

The right to partition being an incident of joint ownership, all joint property is liable to partition.

In effecting partition of village abadi, however, it is necessary to exclude the portions occupied by the houses of the villagers and portions used for public purposes.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gardaspur, dated the 4th May 1918.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ram Das Seth, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Six of the proprietors of the village of Bhati sue in this case for a partition of the village abadi. The lower Courts have dismissed the suit, following Hira Singh v. Mohar Singh (1) in which the following passage occurs: "In suits for partition of the whole village site, though the Civil Courts may technically have jurisdiction to go into the question of partition, they are usually well advised to decline to attempt what is an almost impossible task. There is no basis for the theory that each individual proprietor is entitled to a certain portion of the abadi area calculated with reference to village shares, whether determined by pedigree or revenue payments. The only safe ground to take is that the distribution of such vacant land as there may be attached to the abadi should be left in the hands of the Lambardars, who alone can determine whether it should be divided up or kept intact for the common purpose of the village."

With all respect I am unable to agree with this view. According to the Civil Law, as was held in Radhu v. Musammat Nando (2), all joint property is liable to partition, the right to partition being an incident of joint ownership.

It would no doubt be necessary to exclude from the partition the greater part of the abadi, such as the portions occupied by the houses of the villagers and portions used for public purposes. The distribution of such portions among the proprietors would be practically out of the question, as was pointed out in Ishwar Singh v. Atma Singh (3). But it was also observed in that case that over and above such land there may be empty sites unoccupied by any individual and not used by the community for any purpose, and that there would be no objection to a partition of them according to the rule applicable in the particular case. In the village to which the parties belong there are 16 kanals of vacant land, and it is only this portion which the plaintiffs wish to have partitioned. If this is joint property and no reasons exist which require that it should remain joint (on which points the lower Appellate Court has not yet come to any finding), it does not appear why a decree for partition of such land should not be passed.

The learned District Judge says at the conclusion of his judgment that no partition can be made of property the shares in which cannot be defined, but I do not see why it should be impossible to decide whether the rule of ancestral shares or that of revenue payments is to be followed, and to determine the shares of the proprietors accordingly.

I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for disposal on the merits. Stamp on appeal to be refunded. Other costs to be costs in the case.

It is not right for a Court, when considering the accounts submitted by a Receiver, to go into the question of his liability to account for periods other than the period covered by the account itself. [p. 16, col. 1.]

An order construing an order of appointment of a Receiver does not fall either under rule 1 or under rule 4 of Order XL of the Civil Procedure Code and is not appealable. [p. 15, col. 2.]

Mr. Khurshed Husnain, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sivanandan Rai, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant is a Receiver appointed in a title suit at the instance of the defendants. After the termination of the suit he asked for his discharge, the Munsif holding that the Receiver must give an account for the crops of 1916. Against that order an appeal was filed before the Subordinate Judge, who held that the applicant Receiver was liable to account not only for 1916 but also for the two subsequent years.

The facts which are relevant for the purposes of a decision on this application may be shortly stated. On the 23rd of September 1916, the petitioner was appointed Receiver and on the 25th of September security was taken from him and a writ was issued in which it was distinctly stated that he was to take possession of the crops. On the 29th of November 1916, the suit in which the petitioner was appointed Receiver was disposed of. On the 2nd July 1917, the opposite party put in a petition to the effect that the petitioner was not the Receiver, having been appointed only for the crops of 1916. Subsequently the Receiver also put in an application for his discharge, and submitted the accounts of 1916. After certain proceedings which are not relevant, the Munsif on the 18th of December 1918, held that the petitioner was liable to submit accounts for 1916 only. Against this decision, as I have already said, an appeal was preferred and the Subordinate Judge in appeal enlarged the order by directing that the accounts of 1917 and 1918 should also be taken.

The first objection that has been taken to the order passed by the Subordinate Judge is that no appeal lay to him and I now proceed to examine this contention. Order XL relates to the appointment of Receivers and appeals are provided under Order XLIII, rule 1 (s) only against orders under rule 1 or rule 4 of Order XL. It is urged that the order of the Munsif is not covered by rules 1 and 4 of Order XL. Rule 1 refers to the appointment of Receivers, that is, all that happens at the time when the Receiver is appointed. If the appointment itself is challenged or anything relating to the appointment, as for instance the powers which may be conferred upon the Receiver, in that case an appeal will lie. Rule 4 refers to enforcement of Receivers' duties. Under it, where a Receiver does not submit accounts when he is directed to do so, or fails to pay any amount that may be due from him, or in any way does anything which may cause loss to the property by negligence or otherwise, a Court may attach and sell his property and an order under this rule would be appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (s). Rule 4 admittedly does not apply. The opposite party relies upon rule 1, clause (d). I confess I do not follow the contention of the learned Vakil. The Receiver was appointed on the 23rd of September 1916, and all the powers which were conferred upon the Receiver were mentioned in the order of appointment. Nothing under that order or relating to that order is objected to,. The order appealed against is dated the 18th of December 1918, which is an order which construes the order of appointment, dated the 23rd of September 1916. Therefore, in my opinion, it does not come under Order XL, rule 1, at all. Under these circumstances I hold that no appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge.

I am, however, asked to hold that I have no powers to interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or under section 107 of the Government of India Act, inasmuch as the learned Subordinate Judge has decided a question of law and he may be right or wrong, yet my hands are tied by the authorities and I cannot interfere though an illegality may have been committed. Here again, with great respect to the learned Vakil, I fail to see how it is simply a question of erroneous decision on a point of law. The question is of jurisdiction, pure and simple. The question is whether the learned Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to entertain an appeal or not and to consider the merits of the case. No one has an inherent right of appeal. This right must be expressly conferred by Statute. If it had been a question of limitation or any other question of law on which the Court had gone wrong, I would have been unwilling to interfere, though even then I am not prepared to say that this Court's powers cannot come into play provided a suitable case is made out. I, therefore, do not accept the contention of the learned Vakil that this is a matter in which I cannot interfere. I hold that the learned Subordinate Judge acted entirely without jurisdiction in entertaining the appeal.

This disposes of the application, but as submissions have been made to me by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the petitioner on the merits of the application which have not been challenged by the learned Vakil appearing for the opposite party, I should like to express my views thereon.

The writ of appointment was issued on the 2 th of Septen b r 19.6. It appears that under that writ the Receiver was appointed to take charge of the crops of the disputed lands, and this has not been controverted by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the opposite party. I, therefore, take it that the appointment was for the purpose of taking charge of the crops of the disputed lands. That being so, in my opinion it would be illegal to call upon the Receiver to account for the period subsequent to 1916. The simple question is whether it would be right for any Court, when considering the accounts submitted by a Receiver, to go into the question of his liability to account for periods other than the period covered by the account itself. This question has been mooted before not only in the other High Courts but also in this Court and, in my opinion, it is concluded by authorities. The case of Ganesh Lal v. Kumar Satya Narayan Singh (1) and the case of Coomar Sattya Sankar Ghosal v. Ranee Golapmonee Debee (2) are authorities on the point. The result is that this petition is granted and the order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 17th day of July 1 19, ordering the lower Court to take accounts from the Receiver after 1916 must be set aside. The order of the Munsif, dated the 18th of December 1918 is restored. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 11, 17—Application for execution not properly drawn up, whether should be rejected—Amendment, duty of Court to allow.

The law casts upon an executing Court the duty to ascertain whether an application for execution complies with the requirements of the rules and, if it does not, to do one of two things, either to reject the application or to allow it to be amended then and there or within a fixed time. [p 17, col. 2.]

An application for execution of a decree was verified by the decree-holder's son and presented on the last day of limitation by an oversight the Pleader engaged omitted to sign it and consequently it was rejected by the Court. The decree-holder appealed:

Held, that it was the duty of the Court to give the applicant an opportunity of putting in a proper application and the decree-holder could not be made to suffer for this omission on the part of the Court. [p. 17, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, dated the 14th March 1919, rejecting the application for execution of decree.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath for Mr. D. C. Kalli, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that on the last day of limitation an application was made on behalf of the decree-holder to execute a decree. By an oversight the Pleader engaged omitted to sign the application. He should have done so on behalf of the decree-holder. By the power-of-attorney given him he was empowered to take out execution as the agent and on behalf of the decree-holder. The application was verified by the decree-holder's son. The lower Court admitted the application and it was duly entered in the register maintained for the purpose. On a subsequent date when the parties or their Counsel appeared, the lower Court rejected the application on the grounds that "the application for execution does not bear the signature of the decree-holder nor of his Pleader. Moreover, it does not bear the signatures of the decree-holder under the verification." It appears to me that the lower Court has acted in a most perfunctory manner. For the respondent it is not now contended that the application should have borne the signature of the Pleader as such. The lower Court has not paid due regard to the provisions of Order XXI, rules 11 and 17. Rule 11 provides that the application shall be signed and verified by the applicant or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case. The lower Court was apparently under the impression that only the applicant could legally sign and verify the application. The decree-holder's son is joint with him and is acquainted with the facts. The lower Court has not dealt with this last matter or brought its mind to bear on it.

Rule 17 (1) provides that on receiving an application for the execution of a decree as provided by rule 11 the Court shall ascertain whether such of the requirements of rules 11 to 14 as may be applicable to the case have been complied with; and if they have not been complied with, the Court may reject the application or may allow the defect to be remedied then and there or within a time to be fixed by it.

Rule 17 (4) provides that when the application is admitted, the Court shall enter in the proper register a note of the application and the date on which it was made and shall, subject to the provisions thereinafter contained, order execution of the decree.

The law clearly casts upon the Court the duty to ascertain whether the application complies with the requirements of the rules and, if it does not, to do one of two things, either to reject the application or to allow it to be amended then and there or within a fixed time. The Court did not perform this duty. All it had to do so was to point out to the Pleader who presented the application that it was not signed and the Pleader would have signed then and there.

As pointed out in Fusloor Ruhman v. Altaf Hossen (1), it was the duty of the Court to give the applicant an opportunity of putting in a proper application and the decree-holder should not be made to suffer for the omission on the part of the Court.

The order of the Court indicates that it has not considered whether it should reject the application or allow an amendment. It does not purport to exercise any discretion or assign any reasons for not allowing an amendment. An amendment was apparently not thought of. I accept this appeal and set aside the lower Court's order and direct it to give the decree-holder an opportunity to remedy the defect in the application and thereafter to dispose of the application according to law.

Appeal accepted.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal, delay in filing—Extension of period of limitation—Sufficient cause—Negligence of servant.

Under section 5 of the Limitation Act an Appellate Court has power in proper cases to extend the time for filing an appeal, but that can and ought only to be done in cases where sufficient cause has been shown. [p. 18, col. 2; p. 19, col. 1.]

The negligence of a servant in the performance of the duties entrusted to him does not amount to sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act. [p. 18, col. 2]

Miscellaneous judicial application from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Chota Nagpur.

FACTS.—The judgment under appeal was passed on 14th September 1917. The decree was signed on 24th September 1917. The following dates appeared on the back of the copy of the judgment:—

Date of application for the copy.	Date of notifying the requisite number of folios and stamps.	Date of delivery of the requisite stamps and folios.	Date on which copy was ready for delivery.	Date of making over the copy to the applicant.
21-9-17.	26-9-17.	26-9-17.	31-10-17.	1-11-17.

The same dates appeared on the back of the copy of the decree appealed from under similar headings. The memo. of appeal was presented to the Registrar of the High Court on 4th February 1918, with a report of the Stamp Reporter that the time for filing the appeal expired on 29th January 1918. In calculating the time requisite for obtaining the copies the Stamp Reporter had excluded the time from 21st September 1917 to 23rd September 1917, as 21st, 22nd and 23rd of September 1917 were prior to the 24th September 1917 when the decree was signed and from when the limitation began to run. He had also excluded the 24th of September, the date of signing the decree, in computing the period of limitation. The appeal, being prima facie barred by limitation, was ordered by the Registrar to be placed before the Bench.

Mr. P. E. Lal, for the Appellant.

Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application asking that the time for filing and registering an appeal should be extended notwithstanding that the period of 90 days within which the appeal can be filed in accordance with the Limitation Act has expired. An affidavit has been put in to the effect that the petitioner instructed an old and trusted servant to take copies of the judgment and decree appealed from and to send the record to Patna for appealing to the High Court. The decree was passed on the 24th September 1917, and the judgment was delivered on the 14th September. According to the record an application was made for papers in the lower Court and on the 1st November the copies were made over to the old and trusted servant upon whom the appellant was relying. It appears that on a correct calculation of the period of 90 days that period expired on the 29th January, and nothing whatever was done by way of filing the necessary papers and the fees until the 4th February, the 3rd being a Sunday. The affidavit, which has been put in in support of this application, says that the servant upon whom he was relying generally stays in Ranchi and consequently the applicant was under the impression that the papers had been sent to Patna in proper time, and that on the 1st February 1918 he sent another servant to Ranchi to find out what was going on, when he discovered that the servant upon whom he had been relying to obtain these papers and send them to Patna had fallen ill and gone away to his home in a village in the district of Hazaribagh, some 70 miles or so from Ranchi, without sending the papers to Patna. No explanation whatever is given why no steps were taken earlier than the 1st February to discover what was going on, the 1st February being in fact after the period of limitation had expired. We are not told either, in the affidavit, when the servant fell ill, or anything more about the circumstances except that on the 1st February it was discovered that he was ill. It seems to me that this explanation is altogether insufficient to entitle us to grant any indulgence to the applicant in this case, although undoubtedly under section

5 of the Limitation Act we have power in proper cases to extend the time. But that can and ought only to be done in cases where sufficient cause has been shown. In the present case it seems quite clear that although these papers were obtained as long ago as the 1st November, the applicant sat still and did nothing, as so often happens in these cases, until the very last moment and in fact even after the last moment during which the period was running when he might file the necessary appeal, and if parties to suits in this Court choose to act in that way and take no steps to see that the servants upon whom they rely are carrying out their duties and take no personal interest in the matter themselves or see that the necessary formalities are fulfilled and delay until the very last moment, if then they find themselves in a difficulty because of their own delay, they only have themselves to blame. In this case it does not seem to me that any indulgence ought to be granted for the reasons which have appeared in the affidavit.

The applicant has also endeavoured to make out that he is entitled under the Limitation Act to exclude some 42 days from the total period of 132 days which expired between the 25th September, that is the day after the decree was made and the 3rd February upon which but for the fact that it was a Sunday his appeal would have been filed. In arriving at the 42 days which he seeks to exclude, he in fact seeks to exclude 10 days in September, that is to say, from the 21st to the 20th September because he says he applied on the 21st September for the judgment, but at that time the decree had not been drawn up and in fact his 90 days had not begun to run against him at all. It does not seem to me that although the rule provides that the time during which he is endeavouring to get the papers shall be excluded from the period of limitation, that time can possibly be counted from a period before the period of limitation in fact begins. As in this case the 90 days did not begin to run until the 25th September, which brings it up excluding the days which ought not to be counted to the 29th January, I cannot possibly see how the applicant can seek to claim to exclude from that period some 3 or 4 days which occurred in September before the period of limitation began to run. This application will be dismissed and the memorandum of appeal will be rejected. The respondents who have appeared will be entitled to their costs. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 35 (2), 36, object of—Execution of decree—Delivery of possession—Symbolical possession—Warrant, failure to affix copy of, effect of.

Under rules 35 (2) and 36 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, it is imperative that a copy of the warrant of the Court for delivery of possession should be affixed in some conspicuous place on or near the property, the object of the provision being that the co-sharers and tenants may know that possession has been transferred to the decree-holder. [p. 22, col. 2.]

Failure to comply with the procedure laid down in the Code is fatal to the delivery of possession. [p. 22, col. 2.]

Dhan Singh v. Ganpat, 24 Ind. Cas. 850; 10 N. L. R. 60, distinguished.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 14th March 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Hissar, dated the 30th May 1918, dismissing the claim.

FACTS.—On 28th August 1902, defendant No. 1 and the father of defendant No. 2 sold land measuring 104 bighas odd to the plaintiffs out of a joint Khata by a registered deed. Possession of the land sold was not delivered to the vendees and they brought a suit for possession against the vendors and obtained a decree on 26th February 1909. In execution of that decree the decree-holders were, on 7th May 1909, given what was described as symbolical possession of the land under Order XXI, rule 35 (2), of the Civil Procedure Code. They failed, however, to get actual possession and on 27th August 1917 they brought the present suit for possession on the ground that they had been dispossessed after they had obtained possession in execution of their decree. Defendants pleaded that possession had never been delivered to the plaintiffs and that, therefore, the suit was not maintainable. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that in execution of the decree, dated 26th February 1909, the requirements of rule 35 (2) of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code had not been complied with and that, therefore, the plaintiffs had never obtained even symbolical possession of the land in dispute. The District Judge dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal on the same ground. They appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Balwant Rai, for the Appellants.—The only question is whether the plaintiffs obtained legal possession in execution of their previous decree. The girdawar went to the fields in dispute and made delivery of possession on 7th May 1909 in the presence of the judgment debtors. The lower Courts have applied Khub Ram v. Surat (1) to this case. But I submit that that case is distinguishable. In that case the judgment-debtors were not present when possession was delivered; in this case the report of the girdawar shows that possession was delivered in the presence of the judgment-debtors and in spite of their protest. Under the circumstances the affixing of a warrant to some conspicuous part of the property was not necessary. There was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of rule 35 (2) of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code.

The judgment-debtors cannot now turn round and say that the execution proceedings were a nullity. So far as they were concerned, possession was delivered to the decree-holders.

Dhansingh v. Ganpat (2), Hari Mohan Shaha v. Baburali (3).

Mr. Zafrulla Khan, for the Respondents.—As the record of the execution proceedings is available, the Court has to see what actually took place in those proceedings. There is no presumption that the requirements of the law were fulfilled. Khub Ram v. Surat (1).

The record shows that the girdawar went to one of the fileds in dispute; the judgment debtors objected to the delivery of possession; the girdawar returned to the village where he drew up his report, which was signed by several witnesses. This report says that proclamation was made in the village, but it does not say that a copy of the warrant was affixed to some conspicuous part of the land in dispute. Three of the witnesses who signed the report were produced in Court, and none of them deposes either that the warrant was affixed or that the proclamation was made. In this case actual possession could not be delivered, was not delivered and is not alleged to have been delivered. As regards symbolical possession the requirements of clause (2) of rule 35 of the Civil Procedure Code were clearly not complied with. Khub Ram v. Surat (1) lays down that these requirements must be strictly complied with and that any omission must be regarded as material. My learned friend has sought to distinguish Khub Ram v. Surat (1) on the ground that inasmuch as the judgment-debtors were present when possession was delivered, this was sufficient notice to them and that the affixing of a warrant was not necessary. Your Lordship will observe that the affixing of a warrant is required only when the land is either joint or in the possession of somebody other than the judgment-debtor. The object of the procedure laid down in clause (2) of rule 35 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code is to give notice to the persons other than the judgment-debtor who are interested in the land, so that the presence of the judgment-debtor does not dispense with the affixing of the warrant.

(3) 24 C. 715 at p. 719.

Dhansingh v. Ganpat (2) and Hari Mohan Shaha v. Baburali (3) were cases under section 263 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, which corresponds to clause (1) of rule 35 of Order XXI of the present Code. These cases have no application to a case under clause (2) of rule 35, which is a new rule. In those cases the judgment-debtor himself was in possession of the property which was not joint, and, it was held that even symbolical possession was sufficient as against him. But in this case only symbolical possession could be delivered, and I submit that it was not delivered according to law.

Even if it is held that possession was delivered to the plaintiffs, I submit that such delivery was illegal, inasmuch as execution had been stayed by the Appellate Court before the delivery of possession. Possession is said to have been delivered on 7th May 1909; an order was passed by the Appellate Court staying execution on 4th May 1909,

[SCOTT-SMITH, J.—Was the order communicated before possession was delivered ?]

It reached the executing Court on the 7th May 1909, that is, the day on which possession is alleged to have been delivered. But whether it was communicated to the lower Court or not, all proceedings taken subsequent to the date of the order were without jurisdiction.

[SCOTT-SMITH, J.—The order was ex parte and was only an ad interim order.]

It has been held that an ad interim order staying execution proceedings takes effect from the date on which it is pronounced, and not from the date on which it is communicated to the executing Court. Kahan Chand v. Jawandi (4). In this case, however, the order reached the executing Court on the day on which possession was delivered.

[SCOTT-SMITH, J.—Kahan Chand v. Jawandi (4) only lays down that proceedings taken subsequent to the order staying execution are liable to be set aside. It does not say such proceedings are void.]

It says they are without jurisdiction, and a proceeding taken without jurisdiction, I submit, is void.

Mr. Balwant Rai, in reply.—The judgment-debtors having been present when possession was delivered, they are estopped from contending that such delivery was not legal. Dhansingh v. Ganpat (2), Hari Mohan Shaha v. Baburali (3).

[SCOTT-SMITH, J.—Those cases only lay down that as against the judgment-debtor even symbolical possession is sufficient, but there must be symbolical possession at least. Those were not cases in which the land was part of a joint khata.]

I submit that it is inequitable on the part of the defendants to deny that possession was delivered to the plaintiffs.

[SCOTT-SMITH, J.—The case might be a hard one for the plaintiffs but the law is clear on the point.]

JUDGMENT.—The brief facts of the case out of which the present second appeal arises are that on the 26th February 1909 the plaintiffs got a decree for possession of the land in suit on the strength of a sale-deed executed in their favour on the 28th August 1902 by Peman, defendant-respondent, and Kallu, the deceased father of Nathu, defendant-respondent. In execution proceedings a warrant of possession issued, and on the 7th May 1909 the bailiff reported that proprietary possession, dakhal i malikana, had been given to the decree-holders. In his report he stated that part of the land, viz., Khasra No. 204 was in the cultivating possession of Jai Kishen, a co-sharer, and Man Singh, a tenant, and that out of Khasra No. 38, of which a part was sold, vendors were cultivating 56 bighas out of 68 bighas. The plaintiffs alleged that they had obtained symbolical possession in execution of their decree, but that they were dispossessed by the defendants. They, therefore, brought the present suit for possession. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs in execution proceedings never obtained lawful possession of the land, the formalities required by rules 35 and 36 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, not having been carried out. The Court states that it is imperative under these rules that a copy of the warrant of the Court for delivery of possession should have been affixed in some conspicuous place on or near the land, and the substance of the decree proclaimed in the village so that the tenant might have known that the land was to be vacated by him. But this was not done. Khub Ram v. Surat

(4) 41 Ind. Cas. 752; 53 P. W. R. 1917.

(1) is an authority in support of the lower Appellate Court's decision, wherein it was held that as the record of the execution proceedings was forthcoming, there could be no presumption that the provisions of sections 263 and 264 of the Code of Civil Procedure had been complied with and as the record showed that no warrant, as required by section 264, had been affixed on any conspicuous spot at or near the land in question, and this had not been proved aliunde, the plaintiffs had failed to discharge the onus, which was on them, of proving that they had been given possession in a legal manner. Mr. Balwant Rai on behalf of the appellants seeks to distinguish the present case on the ground that at the time when symbolical possession was given, Peman and Kallu, the judgment-debtors were actually present and objected to the decree-holders getting possession, but that their objection was overruled, possession being given in spite of it. He relies upon the case reported as Dhansingh v. Ganpat (2), in which it was held that where the provisions of section 263 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, are substantially complied with, transfer of possession, in the eye of the law, is complete, whether it is called symbolical possession or not. Section 263, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, corresponds to Order XXI. rule 35 of the present Code, but the second clause of rule 35 is new and deals with the case of a decree for the joint possession of immoveable property and lays down that such possession shall be delivered by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property, and so on. Now all that Dhansingh v. Ganpat (2) lays down is that symbolical possession having actually been given in the presence of the judgment-debtors was a sufficient delivery of possession in the eye of the law. In that case there was no question of joint possession or of the land decreed being in the possession of a tenant, and therefore, there was no necessity for a copy of the warrant to be affixed in some conspicuous place on the property. The ruling, therefore, does not help the present appellant in any way.

Counsel argues that in the present case the co-sharers and the tenant are not raising any objection, that the judgment-debtors were present when possession was given, and that they are not affected by the defect in procedure pointed out by the lower Appellate Court. The judgment-debtors, no doubt, knew perfectly well that a warrant for possession had issued, and that the bailiff went to the spot to deliver possession, but they are entitled to take advantage of any defect in the procedure. The object of the provision that a copy of the warrant should be affixed in some conspicuous place on the property is that the co-sharers and tenants should be aware that possession had been transferred to the decree holders. This was not done, and in accordance with Khub Ram v. Surat (1) the defect is a fatal one.

I accordingly hold that possession was not given to the plaintiffs-appellants under the decree, and that their present suit is, therefore, time-barred. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Shamnath Mushran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

BANERJI, J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by one Sitlu Rai for establishment of his right to and possession of certain immoveable property consisting of shares in 16 villages, on the allegation that he was the reversioner of the last male owner of that property and that Musammat Parkali Kuar, the principal defendant, had no interest in that property. The lower Appellate Court found the facts in favour of the plaintiff and decreed his claim in respect of three villages. As regards the remaining villages that Court dismissed the claim on the ground that in its opinion section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure barred it.

The way in which the section was applied to the case was this:—The name of the defendant Musammat Parkali had been entered in the revenue papers along with the name of the plaintiff. The plaintiff and the Musammat jointly applied for partition of the villages in respect of which the claim has been dismissed and the shares recorded in their names were formed into a separate Mahal. The Court below has held that, as both of them had applied for partition and obtained partition, the matter became res judicata in consequence of the order for partition passed by the Revenue Court. This decision of the lower Appellate Court was affirmed by a learned Judge of this Court in second appeal.

During the pendency of the appeal Sitlu Rai died. A question was raised before us as to whether the present appellants were the legal representatives of Sitlu Rai and were entitled to maintain the appeal. An issue was referred to the Court below on the point and it has been found that they are the legal representatives of Saitlu Rai. This finding has not been questioned.

It is urged on behalf of the appellants that the Court below has erred in holding that section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a bar to the claim as regards the villages in respect of which the claim has been dismissed. This contention seems to be valid. In the Revenue Court when an application for partition was made no question of title was raised and no question of title was determined, therefore, the mere fact of a partition having been effected by the Revenue Court does not amount to a decision of the question of title by that Court, which might have the effect of res judicata upon the question of title to the property as between Sitlu Rai and the defendant Musammat who were arrayed on the same side as applicants for partition.

The only other question to be considered is whether the present suit offends against the provisions of section 233K of the Land Revenue Act. No papers relating to partition were produced in this case, but the plaintiff in his deposition admitted that an application for partition had been made by him and Musammat Parkali Kuar jointly on the one side as against other co-sharers and a separate Mahal was formed. The object of the present suit is not to take out of the other Mahal any land which has been allotted to that Mahal or to interfere with the share of Government revenue which has been declared to be payable by each Mahal, but what the plaintiff seeks is that he should be declared to be the owner of the Mahal which has been jointly recorded as a separate Mahal.

The case, therefore, does not seem to be a case to which section 233K applies, the matter not being a matter relating to the union or separation of Mahals. The Mahals as formed by the Revenue authorities would remain as they are. The only claim of the plaintiff is that he should be declared to be the owner of one of the Mahals formed by the Revenue authorities as a separate Mahal. As has been already stated, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that title to the property is in the plaintiff. As section 233K of the Land Revenue Act or section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure is no bar to the present suit, the plaintiff's claim ought to prevail and the decree of the lower Appellate Court ought to be reversed to this extent that the claim of the plaintiff should be decreed in respect of all the property claimed by him.

KARMAN v. BISHNA.

KNOX, J.—I agree.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal be allowed, and the decree of this Court and of the two lower Courts be reversed and in lieu thereof a decree be made in favour of the plaintiff decreeing the whole of his claim with costs in all Courts, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

case. The other document, which was in English, contained the grounds of appeal. The grounds were not set out in the vernacular document, but that document mentioned that they were entered in the English "Chitta." The vernacular document was signed by the appellants' Pleader, but not the English one.

The Additional Judge has dismissed the appeal, holding that there was no valid appeal before him, as the vernacular memorandum, which alone was signed by the appellants' Pleader, did not contain the grounds of objection to the decree, as required by Order XLI, rule 1 (2), Civil Procedure Code.

The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court.

It appears to me that the vernacular memorandum and the document attached to it containing the grounds of appeal in English must be taken together as constituting the memorandum of appeal, and consequently the objection as to there being no valid appeal before the Additional Judge has no force. Even if the vernacular memorandum alone could be regarded as the appeal, the omissions in it could be supplied under Order XLI, rule 3, by amendment and there would be no need to throw out the appeal for a mere technical defect.

I accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for disposal of the appeal before it according to law. Stamp on the appeal in this Court to be refunded. Other costs to be costs in the case.

AMIR SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Court-fees—Mesne profits, application for. Court-fee payable on.

RAM BILAS SINGH v. AMIR SINGH.

On an application for mesne profits the Court-fee payable is an ad valorem fee.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukherji, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been referred to this Bench on a question of Court-fees. It appears that during the course of the suit the plaintiffs, having obtained a decree for possession and declaration of title, filed an application for mesne profits and that application was filed upon a Court-fee of annas 8. This appears to have been done in accordance with the practice which appears to have prevailed in the Subordinate Courts in this Province until the matter was brought to the attention of a Bench of this Court in the case of Nand Kumar Singh v. Bilas Ram Marwari (1). In that case it was decided that on an application for mesne profits the Court-fee payable was an ad valorem Court-fee. It was also pointed out that there had been a practice in the Subordinate Courts of paying the smaller Court-fee on applications of this sort, but since that decision, by which we are bound and with which we agree, there can be no doubt that the proper Court-fee payable in such cases is an ad valorem Court-fee. In the present case the applicant having obtained his decree made this application for mesne profits on the 13th July 1916 and following the ruling in the case just referred to, it appears that the Court-fee based upon an ad valorem value is short by Rs. 118-12 0. We are asked to say that as the matter was not finally decided by this Court until February 1917 and as his application was made several months before that, that, therefore, the practice which was understood apparently to be right before that date ought to be applied to the present case. In support of that contention we have been referred to a Privy Council ruling reported as Abdul Aziz Khan v. Appayasami Naicker (2). That case is based upon an entirely different principle and does not appear to us to have any bearing upon the matter with which we are now asked to deal. That case dealt with the interests which were acquired by purchasers of an impartible estate at a time when it was understood that the Zemindar could only transfer a life-estate, and it having been decided subsequently by the Privy Council in another case that the Zemindar of an impartible estate had power to transfer an absolute interest it was sought by the plaintiffs in the earlier case to set up a title to an absolute interest in respect of a sale made before the law had been so interpreted. The only question which had to be decided in that case was what did the seller purport to sell and what did the purchaser understand that he had bought? That, of course, was a question affecting title, affecting interest in land and affecting the title, of third parties and as it was understood, before the Privy Council otherwise decided, that the Zemindar could only transfer a life-interest, it was quite clear that what was sold and what was purchased was a life-interest only. In the present case what has happened is that there has been some sort of practice or understanding that notwithstanding the Court Fees Act, the proper fee payable on applications for assessment of mesne profits was only the smaller figure which the applicant in this case paid whereas in truth and in fact he ought to have paid the larger sum. It seems to us that it is not competent for him to come here and say that "although it is quite true that the law is not such as I thought it to be, nevertheless as other people have been allowed to pay the smaller fee I also ought to be allowed to do so." In our opinion the deficit Court-fee of Rs. 118-12-0 ought to be paid but as there has been a bona fide mistake in this case owing to the practice which prevailed, we think some time should be given to the applicant to pay the extra Court-fee. Two weeks' further time will be allowed for the purpose.

Order accordingly.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 13th June 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Jullundur, dated the 22nd December 1915.

Moulvi Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din Khan, for the Hon'ble Mian Fazl i-Hussain, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree-table explains the relationship of the persons interested in this litigation:—

KALYAN KHAN

- Bolaqi Khan, — Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4.
- Nur Khan, — Defendants Nos. 5 and 6.
- Taj Muhammad, — Defendants Nos. 7, 8 and 9.
- Kapur Khan, — Bakar Khan, — Alaf Khan, — Shahab Khan,
  - Mahdi Khan, — Banne Khan.
    - Musammat Miro, married Banne Khan.
  - Jehaz Khan, (died 40 years ago) married Musammat Biman.
    - Musammat Minan, plaintiff, married Jamma Khan, — Rahmat Khan.
    - Nawab Khan.

The property in dispute belonged originally to Jehaz Khan, a Muhammadan Rajput of the village Hiun in the Nawanshahr Tahsil of the Jullundur District. Jehaz Khan died some time after the Settlement of 1850 and was succeeded by his son Nawab Khan, who died in 1893. Upon Nawab Khan's death his mother Musammat Biman inherited the estate, who in turn was succeeded by Nawab Khan's first cousin Banne Khan, who was married to the latter's sister Musammat Miro. Banne Khan died in 1890, and his widow Musammat Miro, who inherited the estate, died about a year prior to the institution of the present suit, which was brought by Musammat Minan, the other sister of Nawab Khan.

The defendants are the collaterals of Banne Khan in the 7th degree, and the question for determination is whether Musammat Minan is entitled to inherit the property in preference to the collaterals. The Courts below have entirely misapprehended the case by treating Musammat Minan as the daughter of Jehaz Khan. On the facts set out above it is quite clear, and indeed it is not disputed, that Banne Khan was the last male owner of the property, and it seems to us that the succession is to be traced from him. Musammat Minan, being only a female cousin of the deceased male proprietor, has no right of inheritance against the collaterals, and it is immaterial whether the property is or is not ancestral qua the defendants.

The learned Advocate for the plaintiff contends that the certificate granted by the learned District Judge is confined to the question of custom relating to the succession of a daughter as against the collaterals of her father and that that is the only question which can be determined in this second appeal. This contention we cannot accept. As stated above, there has been a complete misapprehension in the Court below as to the status of the plaintiff, and we have no doubt whatsoever that the defendants are fully justified in attacking the judgments of the lower Courts on the ground that the plaintiff can come in only as the cousin of the last male owner, and as such she has no right of succession. There is really no answer to this contention, and upon the record there is no evidence to show that custom favours the succession of a female cousin as against collaterals.

It is to be observed that issue No. 2, which includes the question of plaintiff's superior right to that of the collaterals of Banne Khan, gave her an opportunity to adduce such evidence as she could produce to substantiate her right of succession to Banne Khan's estate to the exclusion of the latter's collaterals; and we do not consider that she is entitled to a remand for further enquiry into this matter. Indeed, we are of opinion that a remand would be wholly infructuous, because we do not think that the plaintiff would be able to cite any instance in support of her right of succession.

We accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the decrees of the Courts below dismiss plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), ss. 208, 215—Sale in execution of decree—Sale certificate, when to be issued—Appeal against order granting sale certificate, whether lies.

Under section 208 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act as soon as the auction-purchaser pays the purchase-money in full, he is entitled to the sale certificate and no appeal lies against an order granting a sale certificate to an auction-purchaser under this section. [p. 28, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Deputy Collector, Ranchi.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This is an appeal against an order granting a certificate of sale under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The facts of the case are shortly that certain property was sold under section 208 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. After the whole of the purchase money had been paid, the Court on the 25th June 1918 ordered the case to be put up on the 18th July 1918 for confirmation of sale. On the 16th July 1918, however, objection under section 213 was made to the sale by Lal Nilmani Nath Sahi Deo, a sub-tenure-holder. Subsequently, on the 10th August 1918, the auction-purchaser prayed for a certificate of sale under section 208 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, read with section 11 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. To this grant of sale certificate Lal Nilmani Nath Sahi Deo objected, on the ground that the sale had not been confirmed and that his objection under section 213 had not been disposed of. The learned Deputy Collector, after hearing the objection, has directed that the sale certificate should be granted and Lal Nilmani Nath Sahi Deo has filed this appeal.

The first question that arises is whether any appeal lies. The learned Vakil for the appellant, Mr. Kulwant Sahai, strongly urges that an appeal lies to the High Court under section 215, clause 1 (c) and clause (3) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. An appeal would certainly lie to the High Court if the order of the learned Deputy Collector were an order passed after decree and relating to the execution thereof. The order of the Deputy Collector, however, is not, in my opinion, an order relating to the execution of the decree. To come within this category the order would have to be one made on a question arising between the parties to the suit or their representatives. Here, however, the decree has been fully executed and the question is not one arising between the parties to the suit, the application for sale certificate not being made nor its grant objected to by any party to the suit. The case, therefore, cannot come within section 215 (c) and no appeal lies.

In any case, however, an appeal must fail. There is no provision in the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act for confirmation of sale under section 208 and this section, read with section 11 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865, leaves no discretion with the Court as to grant of sale certificate. That section expressly states that when the purchase-money has been paid in full, "the officer holding the sale shall give the purchaser the sale certificate." The section is mandatory and there is, therefore, no option. As soon as the purchase-money is paid in full, the sale certificate must be granted. In this case the purchase-money had been paid in full and the auction-purchaser was consequently entitled to the sale certificate at once. It has been pointed out that in section 209 (a) the expression 'upon expiration of two months from the confirmation of sale' occurs and shows that confirmation of sale is necessary. How this expression 'confirmation of sale' came to find a place in section 209 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act I am unable to say, but there is no provision for confirmation and in the absence of such provision it seems to me clear that there the expression can refer only to the completion of the sale proceedings by deposit of the balance of the sale money under section 11 of Act VIII B. C. of 1865, and if, as is suggested, the practice of the Court is to confirm sales in cases of this kind, the practice is not warranted by the Act.

On all grounds, therefore, this appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which the present second appeal has arisen are as follows:—

DAULAT RAM v. CHAMPA.

Jiwan Lal, son of Basdeo and father of Suraj and Raghbir Saran defendants, mortgaged the house in dispute to Arjan Das for Rs. 800 on the 15th February 1911. After Jiwan Lal's death Narain Das and Mulchand defendants obtained a decree against his sons on account of his debts and in execution of the decree attached the equity of redemption of the aforesaid house. The equity of redemption was purchased at auction by Nazir Ahmad on the 12th April 1917, and he assigned his rights to Daulat Ram defendant on the 4th August 1917. The present suit was brought by Musammat Champa and Musammat Chambeli, widows of Kalyan Singh and Narain Das, brothers of Jiwan Lal, for a declaration that two-third share in the house belonged to them and was not liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of the decree. The lower Appellate Court held that Jiwan Lal and his brothers constituted a joint Hindu family, that Kalyan Singh predeceased his father Basdeo and that Narain Das was not adopted by his uncle. In accordance with these findings it was of opinion that the widows were not co sharers in the house but had merely a lien on it on account of their maintenance and residence. It accordingly gave them a decree for a declaration that two-thirds of the house in dispute was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree. In granting this decree the Court appears to have overlooked the fact that what was sold was the equity of redemption of the house and not the house itself. Daulat Ram, Nazir Ahmad and the decree holders have filed a joint appeal from this order, and the main point urged on their behalf by Rai Moti Sagar is that the maintenance of the widows is not a charge upon the estate of their deceased husbands, as it was not fixed and charged upon the estate by a decree or by agreement. In support of this contention he refers to Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, page 422; Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, paragraphs 461-63; Sham Lal v. Banna (1), Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai (2) and Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei (3). In the last named it was held, in agreement with the two previous rulings of the same Court, "that the right of a Hindu widow to maintenance is not a charge upon the estate of her deceased husband, unless and until it is fixed and charged upon the estate by a decree or by agreement; and if such estate has been alienated and is in the hands of a bona fide transferee, the widow cannot follow the property, even though it be the case that the transferee had notice of her claim for maintenance." There is no contention here that Nazir Ahmad was not a bona fide transferee for value, and in accordance with the authorities quoted I am clear that it must be held that the plaintiffs cannot ask that their maintenance should be made a charge upon the property in dispute. Mr. Devi Dayal for the respondents has referred to paragraph 465 of Mayne's Hindu Law and has argued that the widows, at all events, have a right of residence in the house. It appears to me, however, that the question of their right to reside in the house has not yet arisen. What has been sold is merely the equity of redemption of the house, and I do not see how the widows can challange this sale merely on the ground that they have a right to reside in the house. They can put forward this right if and when the purchaser seeks to oust them from the house. They cannot, in my opinion, object to the sale of the equity of redemption, which has been sold subject to any right which they may be able to establish to reside in the house.

I accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Mortgage, suit on—Joinder of parties as representatives of mortgagor and in their own right—Failure to plead, non-liability of interest in mortgaged property—Suit to establish non-liability, maintainability of.

In a suit on a mortgage, persons who had not joined in the mortgage were impleaded not only as the representatives of the mortgagor but also as liable in their personal capacity; they did not plead that their shares in the hypotheca were not properly mortgaged, and should be exonerated, but subsequently brought a suit for a declaration that the decree in the mortgage suit was not binding on any personal rights of theirs in the property:

Held, that having omitted to set up their rights in the mortgage suit, they were barred by res judicata from setting them up in a separate suit.

Girja Kanta Chackrabutty v. Mohim Chandra Acharjya, 35 Ind. Cas. 294; 20 C. W. N. 675, 23 C. L. J. 587, distinguished.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 98 of 1918, preferred against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 1452 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, for the Appellants.—The appellants' personal rights are not affected by the previous mortgage decree. They were, no doubt, impleaded in that suit, but only as representing their brother, Venkata Goundan and not in their personal capacity. In that mortgage suit appellants were not bound to set up their personal rights. The decision in that suit is not res judicata against them.

See Girja Kanta Chackrabutty v. Mohim Chandra Acharjya (1).

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.—In the previous mortgage suit the whole property including the appellants' shares were sought to be sold. The plaint states that the appellants were impleaded because they were the mortgagor's brothers. They could have raised the plea in that suit that their shares were not liable and should be exonerated. The failure to do so constitutes the matter res judicata.

JUDGMENT.— It is contended before us that the previous mortgage decree, though it became final against the plaintiffs when their application to set aside the ex parte decree was dismissed, is not binding on any personal rights of the plaintiffs in the property as it is urged that they were made parties to the previous litigation only as representatives of their deceased brother Venkata Goundan and not in their personal capacity. It is further argued that they were not bound to put forward their individual right to the property in that suit and that the decree in it cannot be held to be res judicata against them in this case where they claim in their own personal right. Reliance is placed for this argument on the case in Girja Kanta Chackrabutty v. Mohim Chandra Acharjya (1).

But, on turning to the plaint and the decree of the previous suit, we find these plaintiffs were made parties not only as representing their brother Venkata Goundan but also in their own personal capacity apparently with a view to bind them by the decree. The cause title mentions nothing of their representative character, and it is only in paragraph 6 that it is referred to at all. Paragraph 5 alleges that they are made parties because they are the brothers of the mortgagors. The property mortgaged and the property sought to be sold was the whole house and not any share in it, nor merely the interest of the mortgagors; and the decree, as we read it, directs the sale of the whole house. It is not denied that these plaintiffs could have raised in the mortgage suit the plea that their shares were not properly mortgaged and should be exonerated. We think that the plaintiffs, having been put on record not merely as representatives of Venkata Goundan but also in their own personal capacity as well, they ought to have set up their right in that suit and that they are now barred by res judicata under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, read with Explanation IV, from setting them up.

The present case is clearly distinguishable from the case in Girja Kanta Chackrabutty v.

(1) 35 Ind. Cas. 294; 20 C. W. N. 675; 23 C. L. J. 587.

Mohim Chandra Acharjya (1), as in that case the disputing defendant C was added to the mortgage suit only as a representative of his deceased brother. We may observe that, with all respect, we are unable to follow the dictum of the learned Judges in that case that the question of the validity of the mortgage as against C who was not a party thereto could not have been properly raised and determined in the suit to enforce the security, even if he had been put on record as a person interested in his own right in the mortgaged property. This view seems to be based on the opinion expressed on the authority cited there, viz., Jaggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (2), that the term 'mortgaged property' means "the interest the mortgagor is competent to transfer by way of mortgage by his deed." In our view, the present plaintiffs were proper parties to the mortgage suit as they claimed an interest in the house mortgaged and they are bound by the decree directing its sale. In this view, it is not necessary to express any opinion on the question of limitation. No argument has been addressed to us based on the ground of fraud as vitiating the decree.

In the result, the second a appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Where an entry in a wajib-ul-arz gives a right of pre-emption to a co-sharer in a zemindari in the case of a sale by another co-sharer of his right, and expressly states that the owners of miscellaneous plots may sell as they please, the custom of pre-emption is inapplicable to such owners.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 25th of January 1918.

Messrs. Gokul Pershad, and Kanhaya Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. K. Malaviya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal. The property in suit is a bit of land lying within the limits of the village Yahyapur which forms part of the town of Allahabad. The plaintiff is a co-sharer in the Zemindari, sixteen annas mahal of Yahyapur, and he claims that he has a right of pre-emption in respect of this plot. Both the Courts below have decreed the claim. The defendant comes here on appeal and he urges that, on the face of the documentary evidence put forward to prove the case, the plaintiff has no right of pre-emption whatsoever as against him. The land in question is part of what is known as the hakkiyat mutfurriha; that is to say, the miscellaneous plots within the boundary of the village. An examination of the khewat shows clearly that the Zemindari part of the village now consists of an area of only 11 bighas 15 biswas, that the miscellaneous plots total to 26 bighas 4 biswas and that the inhabitated site covers 158 bighas 11 biswas. In the wajib-ul arz, on which the plaintiff depends, a right of pre-emption is given in clause 3 of Chapter I clearly to a co-sharer in the Zemindari in the case of a sale by another co-sharer of his right. In Chapter III, clause 3, there is also a distinct statement that the owners of the miscellaneous plots have a right to sell their property as they please without the permission of the Zemindar. The Court below appears to have overlooked this portion of the document and it is quite clear that the custom of pre-emption prevailing in the village is one only as among the owners of the Zemindari, and the owners of the miscellaneous plots have a full right to sell their property to whom they please without even asking the permission of the Zemindar, a right which they would not have had if the custom of pre-emption included them, In our opinion, the appeal is a good one. We allow it and set aside the decrees of the Courts below. The plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Held, that the suit brought by the plaintiff was competent. [p. 35, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Gurdaspur, dated the 2nd January 1915, dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., and Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl i-Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit giving rise to this appeal are as follows. One Nathu, son of Devi Ditta, was the sole proprietor of Mouza Shahzada Mangal in the district of Gurdaspur. He had no issue and apparently no relatives who could claim to be his reversioners. He had money dealings with one Jiwan Shah between 1880 and 1890 and during this period a Pleader named Ram Saran Das succeeded in acquiring from Nathu 7/24ths of this village. Of this 7/24ths Ram Saran Das became the sole owner and obtained possession, a separate number being given to his acquisition, and this 7/24ths is not now in suit.

Ram Saran Das, Ali Ahmad and Jiwan Shah appear then to have endeavoured, each for himself, to acquire the remaining 17/24ths and 11/12ths of this remaining 17/24ths forms the subject-matter of the present litigation.

Between 1890 and 1895 Ram Saran Das succeeded in getting mortgages of 63/64ths of Nathu's share in this village but the mortgages were without possession. During the same period Ali Ahmed also succeeded in acquiring certain mortgage rights in connection with a part of the property. In 1898 Ram Saran Das instituted a suit for possession of the 63/64ths that were mortgaged to him and obtained a decree on the 13th April 1899. Ali Ahmad was a party to that suit, he being interested to the extent of 14/16ths. In August 1900 Jiwan Shah brought a suit against Nathu for the money due to him and, on the 19th August 1900, Nathu mortgaged to Ram Saran Das the remaining 1/64th of the village. On the 18th August 1900 Ram Saran Das filed an ikbalnama to the effect that he had obtained possession of the 63/64the mortgaged to him. On the 10th September 1900 Jiwan Shah obtained a decree against Nathu for Rs. 1,600. In this litigation Ram Saran Das acted as Counsel for Nathu, and, it is said, was also a witness on behalf of Jiwan Shah from which it may be concluded that Ram Saran Das had knowledge of Jiwan Shah's claim. On the 2nd October 1900 Jiwan Shah applied for an attachment order to issue attaching the moveable property belonging to Nathu. This order was served on the 13th August 1900, and on that date Ram Saran Das obtained a sale to him from Nathu of the equity of redemption qua the whole of Nathu's holding in this village. The sale-deed, however, was not registered at the time and on the 24th December 1900, Nathu sold the equity of redemption of 11/12th of his holding to Jiwan Shah. This deed was duly registered and under it Jiwan Shah had to pay off Ram Saran Das, Ali Ahmad and certain other creditors. On the 28th

LABHU RAM v. NATHU.

February 1901 Ram Saran Das applied for compulsory registration of the sale-deed in his favour but failing to secure registration had to have recourse to a suit for that purpose. He succeeded in obtaining a decree on the 27th May 1902, on a compromise and the sale-deed of the 30th October 1900 in his favour was duly registered on the 28th May 1902.

On the 17th March 1904, Jiwan Shah and Labhu Ram, who are brothers, partitioned their property, and the property now in suit which was purchased as said above by Jiwan Shah, fell to Labhu Ram's share. Labhu Ram is also a Pleader and it is clear that both he and Ram Saran Das then set to work to reduce the property now in suit to possession. Proceedings both in the Civil and Revenue Courts took place and on the 26th May 1911 Ram Saran Das obtained an order from the Settlement Officer, Mr. Kennaway, sanctioning mutation of the whole holding in his favour. The order of the Settlement Officer was upheld by the Financial Commissioner on the 18th March 1912, and on the 28th January 1913, Labhu Ram instituted the present suit in which he asked for a declaration to the effect that he is the sole owner of the property in suit free from incumberances and in possession thereof as such owner. Objection was taken by Ram Saran Das that the suit as framed was not maintainable. He alleged that he was, in fact, in possession of the whole of the property and that the revenue records showed the correct state of affairs, and it was urged that Labhu Ram should bring a suit for possession and not for a declaration. The question involved was not a difficult one but it was not decided till the 2nd of January 1915, when the trial Court came to the conclusion that inasmuch as Ram Saran Das was in possession of all the property in suit Labhu Ram could not ask for the declaration contained in the plaint and should sue for possession. Labhu Ram's suit was, however, dismissed. It should be noted that throughout these proceedings Labhu Ram has stoutly maintained that he was in possession, if not of all the property, certainly of portions of it and that, therefore, a declaratory suit was competent. He never asked for permission to be allowed to amend his plaint so as to make it a suit for possession. Against this order of dismissal Labhu Ram has preferred the present appeal and on his behalf we have heard Mr. Moti Sagar while Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain has addressed us on behalf of the representatives of Ram Saran Das who died during the pendency of the appeal.

Put briefly Mr. Moti Sagar's contention was that a declaratory suit lay, first, because Labhu Ram was in possession of a part of the property himself and through tenants; secondly, that in any case Nathu was in possession of a part of the property and Labhu Ram, having a share in Nathu's state, was a co-sharer with Nathu and Nathu's possession, therefore, must be regarded as that of Labhu Ram, thirdly, that as it was not clear who was in possession of the property, Labhu Ram could only bring a suit such as the present one; fourthly, that inasmuch as the Revenue Officers had acted under sections 36 and 45 of the Land Revenue Act, the present suit was competent and was not barred by the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act; and finally that in the event of it being held that a declaratory suit was not competent Labhu Ram should be allowed to amend his plaint converting his suit into one for possession. In support of his various contentions he has cited Lachhmi Bai v. Hondi Bai (1), Chinnammal v. Varadarajulu (2), Abdul Karim v. Sahib Jan (3), Rama Das v. Hanumantha Row (4), Nirmal Chunder Banerjee v. Mahomed Siddik (5), Pars Ram v. Muhammad Yasin Khan (6), Sher Singh v. Devi Dyal (7), Ali Gauhar v. Sardar Khan (8) and Civil Appeal No. 2412 of 1915. v. Bishen Singh (10) in support of his contention that his client should be allowed to amend his plaint even at this stage.

On the other side Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain contended that it had rightly been decided by the Court below that Ram Saran Das had been in possession of the whole estate in suit and that, therefore, the suit as laid was bad. Further he contended that sections 36 and 45 of the Land Revenue Act did not override or render nugatory the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and that the analogy of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, relied on by Mr. Moti Sagar was not applicable. As to the permission to amend at this stage Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain contended that to allow an amendment was a concession and that no case had been made out for such a concession in the present case. He emphasized the fact that throughout the proceedings in the Court below Labhu Ram never asked the Court to be allowed to amend his plaint.

A certain amount of oral evidence has been led by both sides. A perusal of this evidence indicates that both Labhu Ram and Ram Saran Das have been endeavouring to induce the various tenants to attorn to them. Labhu Ram certainly succeeded in getting some of the tenants to pay him rent but Ram Saran Das successfully obtained decrees against such tenants and recovered rent from them. From 1911 it would appear that Labhu Ram's efforts in this particular direction were not successful, doubtless due, as Mr. Moti Sagar urged, to the fact that the Revenue Authorities having recognised Ram Saran Das as owner in that year, the tenants refused to get mixed up with any further litigation.

The property in suit bears different khasra numbers and the Court below has dealt separately with each khata. The first of these is Khata No. 2. A portion of this had been mortgaged by Nathu to Ditta. Ram Saran Das in 1906 brought a suit against Ditta claiming to be a prior mortgagee. In that suit Ditta stated that Labhu Ram had redeemed the land from him and Labhu Ram was accordingly made a party. The suit was ultimately disposed of by the Chief Court and Ram Saran Das succeeded in getting possession in June 1911. With regard to this Mr. Moti Sagar contended that as Labhu Ram was entitled by purchase to the whole and Ram Saran Das only got a decree for possession of 63-64th of this khata, Nathu or Labhu Ram must, therefore, have been in possession of the remaining 1-64th and that his client was, therefore, a co-sharer in this khata through Nathu.

Khata No. 3 comprises an area of 1800 kanals, and on the 26th August 1907 Ram Saran Das obtained a decree for possession of this number with the exception of 27 ghumaons and bagh khasra No. 457, which had been reserved for the use of Nathu for his lifetime and which was in Nathu's possession. The trial Court writes that symbolical possession was given to Ram Saran Das on the 18th November 1907, but as pointed out by Mr. Moti Sagar there is some error here, for on the 16th December 1908, there is an order, printed at page 22 of the paper-book, passed by Mr. Kennaway, Settlement Officer, pointing out that possession could not be given inasmuch as in accordance with the terms of the decree partition of the 27 ghumaons and bagh had first to be carried out and that such partition had not been effected. According to an order of the 18th May 1910 the partition had not been effected up to that date. Nathu certainly must be regarded as in possession of a part of this khata, and inasmuch as Labhu Ram has purchased 11-12ths of the whole area, it would seem that he is a co-sharer with Nathu in this khata.

Khatas Nos. 3, 4 and 6 may be taken together They had been mortgaged to Ali Ahmad and Labhu Ram had to redeem this mortgage before he could get possession. It appears that Ram Saran Das brought a suit for redemption on the 27th April 1908 and obtained a decree on the 21st November 1908 so far as khata No. 4 is concerned. No suit relating to khata No. 6 was instituted. The defendant certainly could not be in possession of khata No. 6 even if he got possession, in execution, of khata No. 4, and if Labhu Ram is entitled to the equity of redemption as he alleges, so far as these khatas are concerned, t seems that a declaratory suit would lie.

Khata No. 5 comprising an area of 12 kanals must be regarded as in the possession of Ram Saran Das. It would seem that Labhu Ram at any rate was not in possession of this land.

Finally there is Khata No. 13. This Khata represents 206 kanals of shamilat land, and according to the judgment of the trial Court there has been no decree or suit relating to this plot. An abortive attempt to partition this property took place in 1908, and it would, therefore, seem that this Khata is still joint. Ram Saran Das, no doubt, is a sharer in it, but so also is Nathu who has sold his rights, or a portion of them, therein to Labhu Ram. In addition to this there is evidence to show that Labhu Ram is in possession of a Kharas and a kotha.

From the foregoing it appears to us that the possession of the land in dispute has been for some time in a state of flux and that while Ram Saran Das is undoubtedly in possession of certain portions, Labhu Ram has also been in possession of others and is a co-sharer with Nathu in those portions that are in the actual possession of Nathu. Mr. Fazli-Hussain has referred us to Hakim v. Ghulam Jannat (11), Ishwari Singh v. Narain Dat (12), Abdul Ghafur v. Musammat Mehar un nissa (13), Shiv Ram Das v. Musammat Bhag Devi (14). We do not consider it necessary to discuss the various rulings cited at the Bar as we are in agreement with the principles enunciated in them. Each case has to be decided on its own set of circumstances, and in the particular circumstances of the present case we are of opinion that the suit brought by Labhu Ram is competent. No doubt the matter is not free from difficulty, but that on the whole we consider is the correct conclusion to arrive at after a consideration of all the documents and evidence in the case.

We accordingly accept this appeal and setting aside the order appealed against remand the case to the Court below for a decision on the merits. Costs will follow the event.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 870 OF 1918.

December 18, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Tudball and Mr. Justice Rafique.

JAIPAL RAI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

SAHDEO RAI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Pre-emption—Co-sharers, preferential rights of, inter se—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Village held on Bighadam tenure.

The wajib-ul-arz of a village held on bighadam tenure provided that when a co-sharer wished to sell, he must first offer his share to his near co-sharer and in case of his refusal to any other co-sharer in the village, and if they refuse, he may sell to a stranger:

Held, that the custom thus recorded meant that a near co-sharer had the first right to purchase as compared with the more distant co-sharers in the village, and that the co-sharers had preferential rights of pre-emption inter se. [p. 36, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 9th March 1918.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kamlakant Varma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre emption. It has been dismissed by both the Courts below. The plaintiff, the vendor and the vendee are all co-sharers in the village. The plaintiff and the vendor are co-sharers in the same khata. The vendee is a co-sharer in another khata. The village is one held on Bighadam tenure. The question is whether or not the co-sharers have preferential rights of pre-emption inter se. The wajib ul-arz states that when a co-sharer wishes to sell or mortgage, he offers his share first of all to his near co-sharer and in case of his refusal to any other co-sharer in the village and if they refuse then he may sell to a stranger. The record then goes on to say, "if he sells it to a stranger in spite of the willingness of a co-sharer, the latter will be at liberty to enforce his right of pre-emption and to take the property at the market value." Both the Courts below have held that on the face of a custom expressed in these words the right of pre emption only arises in the case of a transfer to a stranger. They have based their opinion on certain old rulings of this Court to be found in the case of Narain Saran Singh v. Sidh Narain Singh (1) and in the case of Sheobalak Singh v. Luchmidar (2). There are other rulings to the contrary effect. It seems to us that the custom clearly means that when a co-sharer wishes to sell he has to offer it first of all to his near co-sharer. In other words a near co sharer has the first right to purchase the property as compared with the more distant co-sharer in the village. We do not think that the subsequent statement that in case of a sale to a stranger a willing co-sharer may pre-empt affects the statement of the rights of co-sharers inter se. The case is somewhat similar to the case of Gurdial v. Mathura Singh (3). We do not think that there is any doubt in the case that the plaintiff has a preferential right of purchase as compared with the respondents-vendees. There is an issue as to what is the true sale price. This issue was not decided by either of the Courts below. It is the third issue in the first Court. This must be decided before we can pass a final decree in this case. We, therefore, remand the issue to the Court below for decision at a very early date on the evidence which is already on the record before us. The usual ten days will be allowed on receipt of the finding.

ANANT PRASAD JHA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

BANKE LAL KUMAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Rent, suit for—Rent never paid—Lost grant—Presumption.

Where in a suit for rent the plaintiff fails to prove that he has ever taken rent from the defendants, the Court is entitled to presume a lost rent-free grant. [p. 37, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Bhagulpore.

Messrs. Naresh Chandra Sinha and L. K. Jha, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Ganesh Dutt Singh and S. N. Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These second appeals arise out of 20 suits, which where tried together, wherein the plaintiff as landlord, claimed assessment of rent in respect of homestead lands only. It seems that these homestead lands fell in the plaintiff's patti through partition, while the defendants' cultivated lands fell within other pattis. The plaintiff claimed that formerly the defendants and their ancestors used to pay rent in the form of services and that they were always ready to obey the malik and meet his demands; that for this reason, as a matter of favour only, Basowri money was not realised from them; the defendants ceased to render any services and, therefore, in 1321 F. S. the plaintiff demanded rent for the first time. The defendants refused to pay rent and, therefore, these suits were instituted. Rent was claimed at the rate of Rs. 1/8 per Katha. In the Record of Rights the holdings in suit are recorded as belagan, that is to say, as not paying any rent. The defendants denied that they had ever paid rent for the lands either in the shape of services rendered or in any other way that no rent had ever been paid and that the holdings were not liable to assessment of rent. They said that the lands being held by them rent-free from generation to generation the plaintiff was not entitled under the law and custom to the rent thereof.

Both the lower Courts have found that the plaintiff failed to show that rent had been ever paid to the plaintiff as landlord in the shape of services or otherwise. Both Courts also held that having in view the circumstances of the case the Court might presume a lost grant and the conditions making the holdings rent free. On these findings the plaintiff failed in both the lower Courts. The learned District Judge found that the suits were barred by limitation. Before me it is urged that the Courts below were not justified in coming to a finding as to a lost grant because the defendants had not rested their defence on that basis in their pleadings. It is urged that the defendants had pleaded custom and had failed to succeed on that plea. The findings of both the Courts are that the defendants have not paid rent and the plaintiff admits that they have never paid rent. The Courts below have relied on the ruling in Nawab Ali v. Maharaja Birendra Kishore (1) and Jafar Ahmed v. Maharaja Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur (2) to the effect, that long possession without payment of rent justifies a presumption of a rent free grant and a rent-free title. There are other decisions to a like effect reported in the same Volume* of the Calcutta Law Journal but by reason of the fact that they refer to cases where the defendants were alleged to be trespassers they are not equally applicable to the present case. In my opinion the fact that the plaintiff failed to prove that he had ever taken rent from the defendants and did not show that he had ever been in possession through taking rent, entitled the Courts to presume a rent-free grant though this was not the case of the defendants in their pleadings. The defendents merely said that they and their ancestors had held the lands without payment of rent for generations.

The learned Vakil for the respondents has argued that the defendants never acknowledged the title of the plaintiff as their landlord but the District Judge has come to the finding that the relationship of landlord and tenant did exist. The probable facts, though this is not asserted in the pleadings, are that the ancestors of the defendants held the lands as homestead attached to their cultivated lands and paid no rent for the homestead portion of them but then the partition came and the homestead lands fell in one patti and the cultivated lands in the other, and the defendants continued to hold the homestead lands without any payment of rent. There is no reason to hold that the defendants should now be made to pay rent for these homestead lands. I agree with the ground given by the learned District Judge for holding that there was justification for finding that the Munsif was correct in presuming a lost grant. It is unnecessary to consider the contention of the learned Vakil for the respondents that the suits ought to have been instituted in the Small Cause Court in that there had been a contract between the landlord and the tenants whereunder the tenants should perform certain services in consideration for holding the land and that the tenants having ceased to perform those services the suits should be suits for compensation. In the circumstances of this case I hold that the Courts were correct in holding that the lands were not assessable with rent and I dismiss these appeals accordingly with costs in each case.

Appeals dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 318 OF 1916.

SHIAM LALL AN OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Pre-emption—Sale including portion of pre-emptor's property—Pre-emptor joining in sale, effect of—Right to pre-empt.

A person cannot pre-empt a sale in which a portion of his own property has been legally and validly transferred, and to which sale he was a party.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 5th July 1916.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iswar Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit brought by two sons of a Hindu father primarily to set aside the sale of certain property on the ground that it was joint family property and that the father was not empowered to part with it. In the alternative a claim was made to a right of pre-emption in the property. In this appeal we are concerned only with one portion of the property, namely, the five-annas, four-pies share in Mauza Gahla Dudhaula. The lower Court has found that the sale made by the father was one made for legal family necessity and that it was a sale binding upon the sons. It, however, has given the plaintiffs a decree for pre-emption in respect to the five-anna, four-pies share in Mauza Gahla Dudhaula on condition of payment of Rs. 9,000 within a period of three months. The defendant-vendee appeals and it is urged with considerable force on his behalf that in the circumstances of the case the plaintiffs have no right to pre-empt seeing that they practically were parties to the sale and that part of the property consists of their own interests. This is not a case in which property has been sold by the manager of the family against the wishes of the other members. The lower Court has found that the defendant has failed to establish the fact that the plaintiffs consented to the sale, but it has clearly held that the father had full power to transfer the property as it was for legal and valid necessity. The property is joint family property. The plaintiffs have not appealed against the decision of the Court below nor have they filed any cross-objections. The sole question, therefore, for us to decide is whether on the facts as found the plaintiffs are entitled to pre-empt. In our opinion they are not. Part of the property which they seek to pre-empt is their own property which has been validly transfered to the vendee by a person who is legally empowered so to transfer it. The rest of the property consists of the interests of the father and of another step-brother. The interests of all were joint and to allow the plaintiffs to pre-empt would be tantamount to allowing a man to be both a vendor and a pre-epmtor one after the other. There has been a good deal of discussion as to whether a member of a joint Hindu family can purchase a specific part of the joint family property from the joint family. It is in our opinion unnecessary to come to any decision on that point. We may assume for the purposes of the case that this can be done, but this, however, does not help the plaintiffs respondents for it leaves untouched the question whether a man can pre empt a sale in which a portion of his own property has actually been legally and validly transferred, and in which case he is practically a vendor. Our attention has been called to the case of Raghu Nath v. Musammat Rahat Begam (1) but an examination of the judgment in that case will show that this point, which is now before us, was not raised in the case. At page 642 the learned Chief Justice said:—"Badle was the owner of the entire Mahal and also the Lambardar." There is nothing in the judgment to show that the property sold was the property of a joint Hindu family, although the father and the son were joint. Nor was the point which has been discussed before us, even mentioned in that judgment. Even the custom under which the claim was preferred in that case was a custom which gave the members of a Lambardar's family a right to pre-empt when the Lambardar sold his share. It was a very peculiar custom and we do not think that the case is any authority or any guide to us in the present case. The decision in the case of Gandharp Singh v. Sahib Singh (2) does not help us either in the present case in any way. In our opinion the plaintiffs have no right whatsoever to pre-empt in the circumstances of the present case. We, therefore, allow the appeal. The plaintiffs' suit will stand dismissed with costs in both Courts. Costs in this case will include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—For many generations the family to which this suit for partition relates has lived at Rajura in the Basim Taluq of the present Akola District. Taking their surname from their place of residence, the Rajurkar Naiks have long been known as an influential and wealthy family. Wanjaries by caste, in pre-British days they were the wardens of the passes of the Patoor Hills, a position of trust and honour, and have more recently supplied energetic and loyal servants to the state. It is unfortunate that family dissentions have reduced their wealth and influence and that these quarrels should terminate in a suit for the division of property that had been joint for at least a century.

The following genealogical tree explains the relation of the principal parties to the suit:—

The suit is filed by Rustomrao and his two sons claiming an eight-annas share in the ancestral and family estate. Defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and No. 15 are members of this joint Hindu family. Defendants Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 15 are widows of deceased members of the family and joined as they are said to be in possession of certain family property, and entitled to maintenance.

The 8th defendant Krishnaji Pandurang is the family Gumastha in possession of some of the estate and account books and papers of the family. Narayanbhat is the priest of the Balaji temple, a Sansthan belonging to the family said to be in possession of gold and silver idols of the temple and laying claim to a house belonging to the joint estate.

Defendants Sonaji, Jan, and Bheosan

Library,
7542A

Nos. 10, 11 and 12 are joined on the ground that they claim ownership over a family Gadhi and Baithak at the village of Agikheda. The 13th defendant Bhawanrao is in possession of a house known as the Gend Bungalow at Basim claiming an independent title to it, and defendant No. 14 is in possession of a factory site which he claims as his own. Some of the immoveable property in suit is said to have been given to Madhorao, the grandfather of plaintiffs, and manager, for his services as such. These came to Narayanrao, the father, as his personal property. He succeeded his father as manager, and was, it is alleged, also given land for himself. This land plaintiffs claim sole ownership of. The Sansthan possesses certain Inam fields, and as the temple has always been managed by the senior branch of the plaintiffs, plaintiffs claim this right and possession of the temple land. Some of the land in suit has formed the subject of proceedings under the preventive section of the Criminal Procedure Code and in other fields sole ownership is claimed.

After every effort had been made to delay the suit by procrastination and technical objections finally the contentions of the parties led to no less than 31 issues, dealt with by the lower Court in a lengthy judgment of sixty-five paragraphs. It is unnecessary for us to enter into much of the defences raised as it will be sufficient if we confine ourselves to such matters which have been pressed in appeal. It was pleaded inter alia that Dinkarrao, the natural son of Uttamrao, had been given in adoption to Dharrao the son of Vyankatrao, and that Vishwasrao the second son of Uttamrao had been adopted by Hanwantrao and that these adoptions had been with the first plaintiff's consent. Consequently the share claimed by the plaintiffs' branch in the family property was a one-sixth and not a one-third. These pleas have prevailed and in a preliminary decree, the share of the plaintiffs has been fixed as a 1/6th.

The lower Court's findings may be summarised thus:—

Plaintiffs' allegation of gifts of certain lands to Madho and Narayan by the family has been held not established. Part of field survey No. 18 of Rajura was found not to belong to the family. The family has failed to establish any case against defendant No. 9 but the Gadhi and Baithak at Agikheda in possession of defendants Nos 10 to 12 are the ancestral property of the Rajurkar family. The Gend Bungalow at Basim was held to belong to the family as was the factory site at Akola. The plea that some fields were the self-acquired property of Dharrao was held not proved and the sites and houses shown in list (101) and the Hall, Diwankhana, Sopa and Parkot of the house at Rajura are held family property. In the absence of proof the admissions of parties as regards joint moveables were accepted, and the property in possession of the criminal Court held liable to partition. The allegations that plaintiff No. 1 had received Rs. 25,000 worth of ancestral ornaments, and had recovered outstandings to the extent of Rs. 16,000 were held not established nor had it been shown that defendants were in possession of certain pawned property. S. No. 53 of Ansing said to have been sold by plaintiffs was held to be family property, the sale not being proved and S. Nos. 63 and 64 of Regaon alleged to be the self-acquired property of Bahadur Rao, the nine fields at Dholi, S. Nos. 5 and 90 of Akot Gadhi said to belong to Hanwantrao exclusively and Nos. 29 and 36 of Regaon and S. No. 52 of Chelka claimed with the property mentioned in lists 3 and 4 by the plaintiffs as their own were held to be joint family property.

Radhabai defendant No. 15 was found to be the legally married wife of Dharrao and a belated plea that the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 have no locus standi, they being the children of an illegal marriage of Rustumrao with a distant cousin was brushed aside on the ground that involving as it did questions of fact it had been made too late.

The 28th issue running "Did any of the members of the family commit waste of the joint family property? If so, by which of the members and what is its value? Is such member not liable to account for it?" was held not proved.

As the evidence gave no idea as to the value of the property, cash, ornaments, cattle or money lent, the actual account was left to be made in the proceedings preceding the final decree.

Defendants Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 15, the widows of the family were given Rs. 30 a month as maintenance with arrears, the said amount being a charge on the family property, and they are allowed to live in the family houses. The name of the third plaintiff was struck off on the ground that having been adopted into another family he had no place in his own.

The 13th defendant Bhawanrao appealed, First Appeal No. 44-B of 1917, against the decision in reference to the Gend Bunglow at Basim and on the 5th July 1918, we directed that the case as regards this bunglow be tried de novo. We have before us for decision two appeals, one No. 48-B of 1917, filed by the plaintiffs and the second No. 50-B of 1917 filed by Anandibai and Radhabai widows of Bhanwanrao and Bahadurrao respectively. In the former appeal cross-objections have been filed by Dinkarrao, Vishwasrao and Ramrao, and Sitabai wife of Bakarrao and in Appeal No. 50 B by Dinkarrao and his two brothers.

For the plaintiffs the factum of the adoption of Dinkarrao and Vishwasrao is admitted but it is argued that the widows could not legally adopt as Uttamrao on the 27th January 1905 gave notice demanding a partition, and as Dinkarrao was adopted on the 16th May 1905, and Vishwas on the 19th April 1905, namely, after notice, it is contended the adoptions are not valid. We see no force in this contention. The genuineness of Exhibit D-1 dated the 1st March 1870, by Dharrao authorising his widow to make an adoption is denied. At the time of the adoptions Rustumrao was the only adult male with the exception of Uttamrao in the family, and it is argued that Rustumrao's consent was not obtained to it. The document was not mentioned until 1905 being with Radhabai for all these years and given to Uttamrao at the time of adoption. The length of time between the authorisation and the adoption throws, it was argued, great suspicion on the letter This letter runs:—

"It is hereby informed from Dharrao Yeshvantrao Naik, Tarf Rajur that I have no male issue. If any male child is born to any of my four younger brothers Madhoraoji, Trimbakraoji, Govindraoji and Hanwantraoji and if there are more sons than one to any of them you should make a choice of one of those sons and take him in adoption according to the caste custom. If unfortunately my four brothers have not got two sons and if my nephew has got two sons you should make a selection of a good boy out of them and take him in adoption for me and continue my name. By doing so it would amount to having secured room in the spritual world according to Hindu Law. My mind convinces me that my four younger brothers would give their consent to this act of mine and they would make their signatures on the writing which is written below and Trimbakraoji and Govindraoji would also make their signatures and return this writing to me."

"We the undersigned younger brothers of Dharrao. We are not against the wishes of Dharrao. As stated by him he has executed a writing in favour of Radhabai Wahinisaheb (brother's wife) to make the adoption and we all accept the same. We shall not interfere in any way. We shall not act against the wishes of Dada Saheb (elder brother)."

It is argued that Madhorao had two sons at the time Narayanrao and Uttamrao who were born in 1870. That, however, is the year of the letter, and there is nothing to show that Madhorao's sons were born before or after the date of the letter. It is further contended that the fact of the letter not having been mentioned in the deed of adoption points to it being manufactured after that ceremony took place. That document which was drawn up by a well-known Berari Pleader Panduring Govind certainly does not mention the letter but it does mention Dharrao's permission to adopt.

Much the same arguments are advanced against Exhibit D-2 which has been translated as follows:—

"Anandi widow of Hanwantraoji Naik Rajurkar is hereby informed that I have got no male issue. Therefore, if Narayanrao or Uttamrao gets any male issue, you should take one boy of them in adoption for me and continue my name, as I am not keeping good health, you are informed by this writing. Therefore, you should keep in mind the above and take proper action." *

"My elder brother Govindraoji Raosaheb and my nephew Narayanraoji would give their full consent to what is stated above and I am quite sure that they would make their signatures."

Hanwant is said to have died three years later, and the fact that the document did not mention the sons of Narayanrao and Uttamrao is commented on. But these are apparently born in 1870, but when is not clear. It is further contended that Hanwantrao as a Sub Registrar would have known that the document required registration for the registration of this document as held by the lower Court is compulsory; Somasundara Mudaly v. Duraisami Mudaliar (1). It is further contended that oral evidence cannot be admitted under section 91 of the Evidence Act, for the document comes under the term grant. We do not think that the document can be termed a grant but it is clearly not admissible in evidence and cannot be proved.

Much can be said against the two letters on the grounds that there was no reason for Dharrao or Hanwantrao to adopt. But it seems that at the time Narayanrao and Uttamrao were the only sons, if they were then alive, to the six brothers. The estate being a large and historical one the two men may well have looked ahead. The length of time allowed to lapse before the permission was taken advantage of is another fact against the authenticity of the letters and their late production, they were not filed with Exhibit D-8 until the 22nd December 1913, also raises suspicion. On the other hand plaintiff has made no attempt to show that the signatures on Exhibit D-1 are in fact forged. Hanwantrao was a Sub-Registrar and Treasurer, Govindrao a Tahsildar and Trimbakrao an Extra Assistant Commissioner, and hundreds of signatures of each must be in existence, a fact that would make the work of a forger difficult, for the opinion of an expert in handwriting could have been taken. There is, however, evidence and from persons well known to the signatories whose evidence it is difficult to disbelieve. D. W. No. 2, Dawlatrao, a Tahsildar who knew both Hanwantrao and Govindrao well, swears to their signatures. D. W. No. 12, Narayan, identifies Hanwantrao's signatures on the same document; D. W. No. 13, Kondu, identifies both signatures as does D. W. No. 14, Punjaji, a Sub-Inspector of Police and there is further the evidence of Musammats Anandibai and Radhabai as to the permission from Hanwantrao. We cannot hold that this mass of evidence is unreliable, or that all the witnesses are mistaken. There is no rebutting evidence and we think with the first Court that the authority of Exhibit D-1 has been sufficiently established and also that Hanwantrao did give permission. There is, moreover, evidence which shows that Rustumrao did in fact consent to the two adoptions. It must be borne in mind that Uttamrao and Rustumrao with their sons were then the surviving members of the family and the fact that Rustumrao consented to the adoption against his own interests points to his considering himself bound by the authorization given by his grand uncles. Though Exhibit D-2 is inadmissible in evidence we know of nothing to prevent the widow from proving that consent in fact was given. It is contended for appellants that Exhibit D 8 is a forgery. It is a letter from Rustumrao to Uttamrao dated the 11th April 1905, that is, just before the two adeptions in which his consent to the coming adoptions is very clearly expressed. It is argued that because Rustumrao gave the notice Exhibit D 17 to Uttamrao on the 27th January 1905, he could not have sent the letter Exhibit D 8 in April, but there is no valid reason why he should not. Rustumrao admits that in this case the signature is like his, but cannot state positively; now surely he must know whether it is his signature or not and the absence of a direct denial makes us believe that he signed the letter. There is also other evidence; Exhibit D 5 dated the 8th October 1914 is an application by Rustumrao to the Deputy Commissioner in which he states that the wife of Dharrao had with Dharrao's permission taken Dinkarrao in adoption. The application asks that Dinkarrao may, therefore, be given the Patelki and Patwarishp of certain villages. The respondent relies on Exhibits D-5, D-6, D 7, D-8 and D-18. D-6 is the examination of Rustumrao taken in Revenue Case No. 25-XI of 1915. He there admitted that Radhabai had permission from her husband to adopt a child from the family and D 7 is the Tahsildar's report in the case. D-18 is the statement made by Rustumrao on the 18th May 1916, in Civil Suit No. 72 of 1912. He there admitted his signature on Exhibit D 8 and stated with reference to his statement before the Tahsildar that it was made under the influence of liquor. Exhibits D-5 and D-6 were admittedly made in view of a compromise then being considered but that fact does not warrant the assumption that they contain false statements.

Mahadeo (D. W. No. 9) swears to the signature on the letter of the 11th April 1905, being Rustamrao's. We have no hesitation in finding that Rustumrao gave his consent to both adoptions.

It is next contended that the consent of the two husbands, Dharrao and Hanwantrao does not extend beyond their own lives, and that any consent given by Rustumrao would not bind his minor sons. We are referred to Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (2), Mani v. Subbarayar (3), Rao Rama Rao v. Narasimha Nayanini Varu (4) and Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo Kesari v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (5) as authorities for determining what family consent is required to an adoption by a widow in a oint family. We have no doubt that the husband's authority, provided the assent of the nearest members of the joint family is obtained, continues after the husband's death; see Bachoo Burkisondas v. Mankorebai (6), Chandra v. Gojarbai (7), Surendra Nandan v. Sailaja Kant Das Mahapatra (8). The consent of Rustumrao to the two adoptions has been proved and there is authority for the proposition that his consent binds his minor sons. The consent of every kinsman is not essential. The assent of the head of the family would suffice: Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (2) and in the case of an undivided family it may be that the assent of the senior Sapinda having the status of managing member would be equivalent to the assent of the family and sufficient: Subrahmanyam v. Venkamma (9). It seems to us that the law is that a Hindu widow who has not the family estate vested in her and whose husband was not separated at the time of his death is competent to adopt a son with the husband's authority and the consent of the senior surviving co-parcener Kundukuri Veerabasavaraju v. Kundukuri Balasurya Prasada Rao (10). It has been here held that both widows had the authority of their respective husbands, and adopted with the consent of Rustumrao, the senior member of the family. Rustumrao, it is clear, has admitted the validity of Dinkarrao's adoption. We find Rustumrao's consent to the adoption binds his sons. Rustumrao is said to be a drunkard and every act attributed to him in the present case has been ascribed to his being under the influence of liquor. We cannot accept this as a reasonable explanation. There is no force in ground No. 6 of the memorandum of appeal for appellants called no evidence on the 4th, 5th, 7th or 27th issue. It is not here contended that Radhabai was not the legal heir of Dharrao, and it is not denied that if both adoptions are held valid, appellants are only entitled to a 1/6th of the estate they being entitled to a-fourth should either of the two adoptions be held invalid. The main appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

With regard to the cross-objections the parties are agreed that as regards the last four items in lists both R and V of the decree the 1st defendant should be held liable only for such incomes as he may have actually received. The items mentioned in V do not seem to have been arrived at after a judicial inquiry but seem to have been copied from the plaint. The use of the word "about" negatives the idea of this being a judicial finding and is not to be treated in further proceedings as a binding adjudication. We understand the word "now" in item V in the following sentences "now taken by the defendant" to mean "taken since his appointment as a Receiver." This should be corrected to "if received by the defendant". Objection is taken to item J of the decree which deals with cattle in the possession of the 1st defendant. Issue No. 14 deals with this question and the Judge's decision is to be found in paragraph 46 of the judgment, but despite the fact that the defendant admitted possession of only one pair of bullocks, two buffaloes, one pony and a cow, the decree mentions no less than thirty-seven animals in accordance with the schedule attached to the plaint. In lieu of these items the decree should show the animals admitted together with the value now put down by the respondents under R, that is, one pony Rs. 25, one pair of bullocks Rs. 50, two she-buffaloes Rs. 60 and one cow Rs. 15—total Rs. 150.

As regards the ornaments in schedule L of the decree this was the subject-matter of issue No. 15 and the lower Court's finding is in paragraph 27 of its judgment, namely, that no evidence has been given on this point. The defendant No. I admitted possession of certain ornaments to the value of Rs. 1,000 claiming them to be his wife's Stridhan. No details have been given as to the ornaments, and it is impossible in the absence of evidence to find that they were his wife's Stridhan. Defendant No. 1 should be held responsible for the Rs. 1,000 (one thousand), the value of the ornaments admittedly in his possession. In place of the items in the schedule the following should be shown "ornaments valued at a thousand rupees of their value."

Schedule Q of the decree deals with profits from a money-lending business. The items are shown as in the possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 9. We understand from both parties that defendant No. 9 is Krishnaji who is now No. 8. On this head defendant No. 1 only admitted receiving Rs. 1,000 (one thousand) prior to the institution of the suit, and no account has yet been taken of subsequent recoveries. The valuations shown against the items in Q are again copied from the plaint. In the absence of evidence defendant No. 1 can be held liable to the amount he has admittedly recieved before suit, namely, Rs. 1,000 (one thousand). Accounts should be taken in the further proceedings to ascertain as to what was realised since the institution of the suit.

The heading of list III of the decree runs:—

"List of the property on which plaintiffs alone have got their right and which is in possession of defendant No. 1."

This heading which is again copied from the plaint without advertence to the findings in the suit is misleading. As regards the B list "Balaji's temple with idol and other articles worth about Rs. 1000" is clearly not a divisible asset. It should be declared as belonging to the family.

Again the description given in A of this item has been copied from the plaint. This should be struck out. As regards C in Schedule III, if this is not already included in the somewhat vague description of R in the list 1, the 1st defendant has no objection to it, except that the value put down in an approximation we accept the plaintiffs' contention that the Judge meant to include in the income under the heading of all fields mentioned in the planitiffs' Schedule 1. No alteration need, therefore, be made in C of list III.

Objection is taken to the non-inclusion in the decree of the fields covered by issues Nos. 25 and 26. It is clear on the findings embodied in paragraphs 57 and 58 of the judgment that survey Nos. 29 and 56 of Rajura and survey No. 52 of Chelka are to be divided. They were through inadvertence not shown in the decree. They will be now entered in a new list IV as property to be divided.

The 5th objection in the memorandum is abandoned. As regards the 6th it is contended that as plaintiff No. 3 Jagdishrao had been given to another family in adoption he should be struck off from the present suit. We can dispose of this contention on the short ground that the decree can be executed by Jagdishrao or on his behalf only as long as he is the son of his natural father. If he has been validly adopted out of the family, he cannot execute the decree. The matter of the validity of the adoption is, we understand, now pending before the High Court in Bombay. Objection is further taken to certain observations made in paragraph 61 of the judgment which deals with issue No. 30, a general issue. We understand the learned Judge to mean that the value of the money-lending business is to be subsequently ascertained. We do not agree with him that any further inquiry can be made with regard to cash and ornaments. That further inquiry must be confined to what has been received subsequent to the institution of the suit. We think it fair to make each party to bear its own costs of the cross-objections.

There remains the appeal of Anandibai and Radhabai who claim that their maintenance be raised to Rs. 500 a year. The cross-objection of Sitabai is to the same effect. Dinkarro, Vishwasrao and Ramrao file a cross objection contending that the allowance be reduced from Rs. 30 to 20. The direct evidence on the yearly income from the estate is not very convincing but what there is shows it to be some ten thousand rupees a year: see statements of D. W. No. 2 Dawlatrao and D. W. No. 5 Rajaram; D. W. No. 14 Punjaji makes the income as high as Rs. 17,000 to 18,000 per annum but there is no corroboration of this statement. We take the income to be Rs. 10,000 and looking to the status of the family think that the allowance for each of the four widows should be Rs. 40 a month from the date of our decree and direct accordingly. We understand that these widows have hitherto lived with members of the family.

The decision of the lower Court is dated the 20th August 1917, and on the 2nd October 1918, Rustumrao and his brothers put in an application stating that Ramrao respondent No. 3 was dead and claiming that Ramrao's 1-6th share now comes to them. As Ramrao was alive when this decree was passed and the decree of the lower Court effected a severance of the joint status the plaintiff-appellants are not entitled to any increment of their shares by reason of his subsequent death; his widow in a divided family such as the family must be regarded since the date of the lower Court's decree is the preferential heir and she is joined as Ramrao's legal representative. The point is settled by authority; we refer to Thandayuthapani v. Raghunatha (11) and Mahadev Laxman v. Govind Parashram (12). We, therefore, hold that there is no force in the petition of the appellant dated the 2nd October 1918.

We dismiss the appeal of Rustumrao and his sons with costs. We allow the appeal of Anandibai and Radhabai and modify the decree of the lower Court. So far as Anandibai is concerned she will get her maintenance from the date of this decree from her adopted son and the amount of future maintenance decreed will be a charge upon the share of the property to be allotted to her adopted son. Similarly, Radhabai, the widow of Bahadur Rao, will get her future maintenance from the widow of Ramrao and the plaintiffs and the amount of future maintenance decreed to her is made a charge on the property to be allotted to the plaintiffs and the widow of Ramrao. The amount of future maintenance decreed to Sitabai, widow of Bakarrao, will be a charge on the entire property in suit. The costs of Anandibai and Radhabai's appeal and Sitabai's cross-objections are to be paid out of the estate.

The costs of the cross-objection of Dinkarrao, Vishwasrao and Rambhabai widow of Ramrao are to be paid by the parties incurring them.

return goods on demand—Possession of bailee or depositee, when unlawful—Suit by owner, nature of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 49, 60, 145—Suit to recover property bailed or deposited—Contract or tort—Limitation.

It is an implied term of every contract of bailment or deposit that the goods bailed or deposited shall be returned on demand, and the failure to return them is a breach of contract. If a demand for the return of the goods is not complied with, the possession of the bailee or depositee becomes unlawful and the owner may sue in detinue but it is also open to him to sue in contract or in tort. [p. 47, col. 2.]

A suit to recover specific coins entrusted to a bailee, or their value is for the purpose of limitation governed by Article 60 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 47, col. 2.]

The period of limitation for a suit against a depository to recover property,—pictures and manuscripts,—is provided by Article 145 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, but when upon demand the property is not forthcoming, the suit may be treated as one in tort and Article 49 of the Schedule would furnish the period within which the suit must be brought. In the latter case limitation would begin to run from the date on which the goods are demanded and are refused. [p. 47, col. 2; p. 48, col. 1.]

Civil miscellaneous reference, under section 18 of the Ajmere Courts Regulation No. 1 of 1877.

FACTS.—The plaintiff brought this suit in forma pauperis against Rai Bahadur Seth Sobhag Mul and Musammat Chun Kuer the parents of Kuar Kalyan Mal and Musammat Raj Bai the present applicants to recover Rs. 9,200 the equivalent of 400 gold mohurs entrusted to Musammat Chun Kuer through her hasband Rai Bahadur Seth Sobhag Mul and Musammat Raj Bai and certain silver articles and pictures, etc., alleged to have been entrusted to Rai Bahadur Seth Sobhag Mul or Rs. 2,827 on account of their price.

The suit being in forma pauperis an enquiry was first instituted as to the truth of the plaintiff's pauperism but the application for permission to sue as a pauper was rejected by the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, II, Ajmere, on 29th March 1912. This order was, however, set aside on revision side by the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner, Ajmere Merwara, on 22nd August 1912, and the plaintiff was allowed to sue as a pauper During the pendency of the revision in the Court of the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner, Musammat Chun Kuer (defendant No. 2) died on 25th May 1912 and her son (Kuar Kalyan Mal) and married daughter were brought on record as heirs of Musammat Chun Kuer under that Court's order, dated 21st July 1912.

On the 6th February 1913, the plaintiffs suit was registered by the Court of first instance for trial.

4. The defendants (applicants) filed a joint written statement contesting that the claim was barred by time that the suit was untenable for want of a competent and subsisting cause of action that the suit was bad for multifariousness, misjoinder of defendants and of causes of action; that the allegations made in the first four clauses of the plaint were not admitted, that Kuar Kalyan Mal and Musammat Raj Bai were not the legal representatives of their deceased mother Musammat Chun Kuar.

The Court of first instance framed seven issues. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 6 were as under :—

(i) Did the plaintiff entrust 400 gold Mohurs to the defendants as alleged in paragraph 1 of the plaint?

(ii) Did the plaintiff entrust to the defendants pictures, books and other silver articles valued at Rs. 2,827 ?

(iii) If so, when, and are these transactions in the nature of trust and exempt from the operation of the Limitation Act? If they are not of the nature of trust is the suit within time?

(vi) Are the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 legal representatives of their deceased mother Musammat Chun Kuer ?

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff did entrust 400 gold mohurs and other articles as alleged in the plaint that the transactions were in the nature of trust and governed by section 10 of the Limitation Act or if they were not of the nature of trust they were of the nature of deposit and were governed by Article 60 of the Limitation Act: that the plaintiff had a cause of action against all defendants that the suit was not bad for multifariousness and for misjoinder of defendents and of causes of action, that the defendants Kalyan Mal and Musammat Raj Bai were the legal representatives of their mother Musammat Chun Kuar and that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief claimed and accordingly it decreed the plaintiff's claim with costs against all the defendants.

KALYAN MAL v. KISHEN CHAND.

In appeal the Appellate Court confirmed and upheld the findings of the Court of first instance on the said issues and dismissed the appeal with costs.

As the judgment of the original Court decreeing the plaintiff's claim was confirmed by the Additional District Judge, Ajmere, on questions of law the case is submitted on the motion of the defendants to the High Court, Allahabad, for favour of opinion on the following points:—

(i) Whether the transaction relating to 400 gold mohurs is on facts found a case of an express trust within the meaning of section 10 of the Limitation Act or is it a case of a deposit with the Banker ?

(ii) If the latter (i e. a deposit with the Banker) by what article of the Limitation Act is it governed ?

(iii) Is the order of the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner appointing the applicants to be the legal representative of Musammat Chun Kuer not binding in the further proceedings in the case ? And are the applicants not legal representatives under section 2 (11) of the Civil Proeedure Code and the Hindu Law ?

(iv) Whether the Original and the Appellate Courts have rightly construed Exhibits A and B (letters written by Musammat Chun Kuar and Seth Sohbag Mul)?

10. With regard to my opinion on the points under reference I beg to state that I adhere to the views expressed in my judgment, dated the 20th June 1917.

Messrs. M. L. Agarwala and Bhagwan Das, for the Petitioner.

The Hon'ble Dr. T. B. Sapru and Mr. Kamla Kant Varma, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 18 of the Ajmere Courts Regulation I of 1877. In our opinion, on the facts which have been found, the case is remarkably clear and simple. The Courts of Ajmere have taken the right view though they have not expressed very happily the precise articles under the Limitation Act which they think destroy the defence set up. The facts show that there were originally two contracts of bailment under section 43 of the Indian Contract Act ; 400 gold mohurs having been entrusted to Musammat Chun Kuar, to some extent, through her husband, and certain pictures and manuscripts to Sobhag Mal, for specific purposes. Those contracts of bailment or deposit conferred upon the person to whom the goods were entrusted, variously called the bailee or the depositee, lawful possession, to entitle the owner to sue and re-possess himself by suit of the goods, or to recover damages for their loss; if they are not restored to him he must make a demand. He may, of course, sue in contract. It is an implied term of every such contract that the goods shall be returned on demand. The failure to return them is a breach of contract. On the other hand he may sue in tort, and from the moment he makes a demand for the return of the goods, if that demand is not complied with, the possession of the person, the depositee or bailee, becomes unlawful, and the owner may sue in what is called detinue. To constitute a cause of action for detinue he must make a formal demand for the goods. Once these principles are understood the application of the appropriate article of the Statute of Limitation becomes simple. We do not think that section 10 of the Limitation Act has anything to do with it. So far as the gold mohurs are concerned, we think Article 60 applies. The plaintiff elected to treat them as money. Specific coins entrusted to a bailee for a given purpose to be returned in specie may constitute moveable property. They are also money. We do not agree with the Courts below that the case has anything to do with deposit with a banker, but so far as the claim for the gold mohurs or their value is concerned, it is clearly a suit for money deposited under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand. The Statute begins to run when the demand is made. The demand in this case was made within three years of the commencement of the suit. So far as that portion of the suit is concerned the defence failed.

With regard to the pictures and manuscripts we think that the contract was clearly one of deposit and that the suit is covered by Article 145 being one against the depository to recover the moveable property deposited. The period for that suit provided by the Limitation Act is 30 years. This suit is, therefore, within time so far as the pictures and manuscripts are concerned. Inasmuch as a demand for the return of the goods has been found to have been made and they are not forthcoming, the suit may be treated equally in the alternative, as one in tort, and Article 49 would apply to such a suit, being a suit for the return of specific property wrongfully detained. The period for that suit begins to run when the detainer's possession becomes unlawful. Being lawful in its origin it does not become unlawful until a demand is made and rejected.

The answers to the questions in reference must, therefore, be as follows :—

(1) With regard to the 400 gold mohurs Article 60 applies.

(2) The answer to question No. 2 is: It is not a deposit with a banker, but Article 49 or Article 145 are equally applicable.

(3) The answer to question No. 3, namely: Is the order of the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner appointing the applicants to be the legal representatives of Musammat Chun Kuar, not binding in the further proceedings in the case? and are the applicants not her legal representatives under section 2 (11) of the Civil Procedure Code and the Hindu Law?

The answer is No.

(4) The answer to question No. 4 is Yes.

One matter has been brought to our attention which is not referred to us and which, therefore, the Courts at Ajmere can, if they please, disregard entirely. The legal result of the suit obviously would be applying the principles of common law, if Musammat Chun Kuer were sui juris and she and her husband were separate, and parties to separate contracts, bound by their own rights and obligations in respect of their respective estates, that the suit in regard to the 400 gold mohurs should be decreed against the heirs of Musammat Chun Kuer in respect of her estate in their hands, and the suit as regards the manuscripts and the pictures should be decreed against the heir of Sobhag Mul in respect of the estate in his hands. But it is needless to point out to the Courts at Ajmere that if the family is in fact a joint Hindu family and the Musammat had no separate estate of her own, the question does not arise.

Our attention has been drawn to the form of the decree which seems consistent only with the family having been either found as a fact or treated as a common ground between the parties, as being a joint family in which case, the decree, no doubt, is right. If, on the other hand, this is not the case, the Courts at Ajmere, if they choose to pay any attention to these observations, have complete powers under section 153 of the Civil Procedure Code to amend the decree in accordance with the rights of the parties.

The costs of this reference must abide the result of the suit. We fix the fees in this Court at the sum of Rs. 550 for the respondents and at Rs. 400 for the appellants.

Order accordingly.

Mesne profits, suit for, recovery of—Defendant not in possession—Trespass, not abetted by defendant—Liability, extent of.

Where the ground of an action for mesne profits is the bare fact of possession, damages can only be recovered for the time possession was actually retained by the defendant. But if he is himself out of possession he cannot be held liable for the profits which he has not received unless he has abetted the trespass by the person in actual possession of the land. Mr. M. V. Abhyankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only point for decision in this second appeal is whether the defendant is liable for the mesne profits of survey No. 30 for the years 1914-15, 1915-16, 1916-17, he having admittedly lost possession in 1911.

One Ragho was the Jagirdar of Nimbhori and the defendant was a tenant. He claimed to be an ante-Jagir tenant but this he failed to establish. There was a dispute between the Jagirdar and the defendant which was settled by a lease, dated the 7th September 1887. Under the terms of this lease the defendant was to hold the land so long as the Jagir was to last on payment of Rs. 32 in addition to the assessment on the land. On the 14th June 1893, the defendant executed in favour of one Shriram Shaligram a mortgage in which field No. 30 in the Nimbhori Jagir was included. In 1897 Ragho died and the Jagir lapsed to Government. Under the rules the Jagirdar is made an occupant of his home-farm land and the tenants of their own holdings. The Deputy Commissioner, however, declared Ragho's daughter, the plaintiff's predecessor, occupant of the land held by the defendant under his lease. In 1903 the plaintiff's predecessor filed a suit for the ejectment of the defendant which was dismissed in the Courts below but was eventually decreed in Second Appeal No. 210-B of 1915, on the 16th December 1916. In that judgment it was held that the defendant's remedy lay in an appeal from the Deputy Commissioner's order to the higher Revenue authorities and that it was not for the Civil Court to interfere with the decision of the Revenue Officer when he after investigation declared a person entitled to be an occupant of land in a Jagir which has lapsed to Government. The mortgagee obtained a sale decree in Suit No. 30 of 1905. Survey No. 30 was sold at an auction and possession given to the purchaser in 1911. The Courts below have decreed the claim for mesne profits notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff has been out of possession and that his rights have been sold to a third party at an auction-sale. When the previous suit for ejectment was instituted the defendant was in possession but he lost possession subsequently and hence the plea was not raised in the previous suit that Shriram the purchaser should be made a party as regards the claim for this field.

Two reasons are given in the judgments of the Courts below for awarding mesne profits. The District Judge says:—

"But the mortgaging of the property which did not belong to him was in my opinion a wrongful act on the part of the defendant, and for this unlawful act he would have been deriving profits from field survey No. 30 and would have been liable for the same to the plaintiff.* * * * * *

By mortgaging field survey No. 30 the defendant raised money on property which was not his, indirectly he derived benefit therefrom and should account to the plaintiff for this benefit."

Both these reasons appear to me to be unsound. There is no law which prevents the defendant from mortgaging his rights as a tenant in a Jagir: his act was neither wrongful nor unlawful. There is also no reason to suppose that the mortgagee did not know the nature of the defendant's title. Its nature was known to be uncertain in the sense that the Jagir would lapse after the death of Ragho and that it would be for the Deputy Commissioner to decide who should be allowed to cultivate the land after such a lapse. It is, therefore, to be presumed that the mortgagee advanced only so much as a prudent man would advance upon such uncertain tenure. I think it is far fetched to say that the defendant has received the profits in anticipation for the years in suit.

The defendant was lawfully in possession as tenant up to 1897. It was after the order passed by the Deputy Commssioner that his continuance in possession became wrongful. The following passage from Mayne on "Damages" (8th Edition, page 524) would probably apply to such a case:—

"But when the ground of the action is the bare fact of possession, damages can only be recovered for the time possession was actually retained."

In Haradhun Dutta v. Joy Kisto Banerjee (1) it was held that a judgment-debtor against whom there was a decree for wasilat was not liable for the period subsequent to his dispossession from the land after its sale in execution of another decree That decree does not appear to be a mortgage decree as in the case before me. I do not think this makes any difference, for the test laid down by Jackson, J., is that it would be impossible to hold that the defendant would be liable for the profits which he had not received and never could have received.

(1) 11 W. R. 444.

KADIR BAKHSH v. GHULAM MOHAMMAD.

The respondents rely upon Mudun Mohun Singh v. Ram Dass (2). The defendant has not here joined the auction-purchaser in keeping the plaintiff out of possession nor has he leased the land to the actual occupier, in which case he may be deemed to be in possession through his lessee and would, with due diligence, receive profits.

Rajah Pudmanund Singh v. Madhu Singh (3) was a case of discontinuance of possession without notice to the decree-holder and not a case of dispossession by a third party.

Both parties rely upon the following passage in the judgment in Abbas v. Fassih-ud-din (4):—

"It is complained that it would be hard upon a plaintiff to expect him to be continually enquiring whether a wrong doer had ceased to be in possession, but in the case of every wrong, the liability of the defendant is limited to damages for the wrong which he himself has done. He is not a surety for damages resulting from the acts of other wrong-doers who are independent of him."

The plaintiff's contention is that the wrongful act of the auction-purchaser is not independent of the defendant. In a sense it is not. But I do not think the learned Judges intended to lay down that an act, however remotely connected with the trespass, makes a person responsible for damages. His mortgaging the property, as I have already said, was perfectly legitimate: his inability to pay the mortgage money led to a sale decree and the sale was in invitum. The decision in the Calcutta case is based upon the definition of mesne-profits given in the Civil Procedure Code. To adapt the words of their Lordships:

"If the defendant was excluded from possession, he can scarcely be said to have been in wrongful or any possession. He cannot be said to have actually or even impliedly received the profits, nor could he, with ordinary or extraordinary diligence, have received them."

That definition is not exhaustive of the law regarding liability for mesne profits. For it has been held in Ghoogly Sahoo v. Chundee Pershad (5) that a party who has been active in wrongfully keeping another out of the possession and enjoyment of property, is liable for consequential damages, whether he derived any profit himself from the possession of the land or not. But there has been no abetment by the defendant of the trespass by the person in actual possession of the land.

For the reasons given above, I hold that the defendant is not liable for the mesne profits for survey No. 30 for the years in suit. The appeal succeeds and the decrees of the lower Courts are modified by reducing the decretal amount by Rs. 800. The plaintiffs will pay the defendant's costs on this amount in all three Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1—Receiver, when to be appointed—Discretion of Court—Appellate Court, interference by.

Before appointing a Receiver in any particular case the Court must take the whole circumstances of the case into consideration and then decide whether it would be just and convenient to appoint a Receiver [p. 52, col. 2.]

Primarily this discretion is to be exercised by the Court in which the case is pending and to which the application is made. That Court has full discretion to appoint or remove a Receiver, and the Appellate Court will not as a rule, when the first Court has acted after considering all the circumstances, interfere with the exercise of that discretion. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the lower Court refusing to appoint a Receiver. The suit out of which it has arisen was originally instituted by one Hafiz Amir Bakhsh plaintiff, against his brother Haji Kadir Bakhsh, defendant No. 1, and some others, for partition of property both moveable and immoveable which was alleged to be joint. This property according to the plaint comprises of (1) houses and shops, (2) agricultural land and (3) partnership business styled "Haji Karim Bakhsh Hafiz Amir Bakhsh" of which there are two branches, one managed by the plaintiffs and the other by the defendant No. 1. Relief in respect of each item of property is claimed according to its nature. The last item of the property being a partnership business the plaintiffs claim that the same may be dissolved and that each party be called upon to render accounts of the branch of the business under its management. The defendant admitted the allegation of the plaintiff as to the branch managed by the latter to be a joint concern and agreed to its dissolution and to the accounts to be rendered by the plaintiff, but as regards the rest of the property in suit he totally denied the allegation as to its being joint. After the institution of the suit plaintiff died and his three sons (1) Ghulam Muhammad, (2) Ghulam Husain and (3) Ghulam Hasan were brought on the record as his heirs and legal representatives and are now the plaintiffs in this case. On the death of Amir Bakhsh, a petition for the appointment of a Receiver was made on behalf of the defendant No. 1 on the allegation that owing to the death of the sole plaintiff a dissolution of the partnership had taken place according to law. This petition was presented on the 21st of February 1919, and objections were filed on behalf of the plaintiff, on the 14th of March 1919. The Court by an order dated the 22nd of March 1919, having rejected the petition for reasons set forth in its judgment, Qadir Bakhsh has preferred the present appeal.

The main arguments on behalf of the appellant urged by his Counsel may be summarised as below:—

(1) that the suit relating to the joint firm being one for the dissolution of a partnership, the Court ought to have appointed a Receiver according to the general practice prevailing in England and in this country;

(2) that in any case by reason of the death of the plaintiff, Hafiz Amir Bakhsh, the partnership being dissolved according to law, the present plaintiffs are mere strangers and the Court according to the recognised practice of the Courts of Equity ought to have appointed a Receiver.

The following authorities have been relied upon to support the above contentions:—

Pini v. Roncoroni (1), Lindley on Partnership, page 578, seventh edition. The following passage is particularly relied upon: —

"When the contest as to a Receiver arises between a partner on the one hand, and the executors, administrators, or assigns of a late co-partner on the other, the first thing to be considered is, whether the person sought to be excluded from interference is a partner or not. For whilst the Court is reluctant to exclude a partner from the management of the partnership affairs, it will readily interfere to prevent other persons from intermeddling therewith." The reason given for this is, that each "partner is at the outset trusted by his co-partners, and has confidence reposed by them in him; and until it can be shown that he ought not to be allowed to take part any longer in the management of the partnership affairs, the Court will not interfere with him. But this reasoning has no application to persons who acquire an interest in the partnership assets by events over which the partners have no control, e. g., the death or bankruptcy of one of the members of the firm. Whilst, therefore, even in an action for a dissolution, or winding up, a Receiver will not be granted against a member of the firm at the instance of the executors, administrators, or assigns of a late partner, unless some special grounds for the interference of the Court can be established; it is a matter of course to appoint a Receiver where all the partners are dead, and an action is pending between their representatives or where such appointment is sought by a partner against the representatives of his late co-partner."

A passage from Woodroffe is also relied upon, which has a material bearing on the question raised on behalf of the appellant. It is to be found at page 134 and sums up in a few words all the principles directly applicable to the contentions raised before me and runs thus:—

"For the appointment of a Receiver operating in fact as an injunction against the members, there must be some ground for excluding all who oppose the application. If the object is to exclude some or one only from intermeddling, the appropriate remedy is rather by injunction than by a Receiver. The death or bankruptcy of one of the members of a firm is not of itself a ground for the appointment of a Receiver as against the surviving or solvent partner or partners. In such case the right to wind up the concern is vested in the surviving or solvent partner or partners, and before the Court will interfere, some breach or neglect of duty on their part must be established. But the representative of a deceased partner and the assignees of a bankrupt partner are not strictly partners with the surviving or solvent partner or partners. It is consequently a matter of course to appoint a Receiver when all the partners are dead, and a suit is pending between their representatives or where such appointment is sought by a partner against the representatives or assignees in bankruptcy of his late co-partner. If the partnership is already dissolved, the Court usually appoints a Receiver as a matter of course."

In reply to this argument it has been contended on the other side that according to the authorities both English and Indian, the powers conferred upon a Court to appoint a Receiver are not to be exercised as a matter of course and that those powers should be exercised with a sound discretion on a view of the whole of the circumstances of the case, not merely the circumstances which might make the appointment expedient for the protection of the property, but all the circumstances connected with the right which is asserted and has to be established. It is further contended that the case in which all the co-partners of a partnership business are dead and the dispute is between their heirs and representatives, stands upon a different ground than that where only one or some of the partners have died and the dispute arises between the surviving partners and the heirs of the deceased partners. In this particular case no charge of mis-appropriation or bad management is established against the present plaintiffs or their father. The only ground upon which the Court is asked to exercise its discretion and appoint a Receiver is that one of the two partners having died the business is dissolved in the eye of the law. No authority has been quoted which may go to the extent of holding that on the death of a co-partner the Court must in every case appoint a Receiver. The Court is still to take into consideration the whole circumstances of the case and then to decide whether it will be proper to appoint a Receiver. In this country powers for the appointment of a Receiver in a pending suit are given by the Code of Civil Procedure. Order XL, rule 1, makes the following provision:—Where it appears to the Court to be just and convenient the Court may by order appoint a Receiver of any property etc. etc.:" In every case, therefore, it is to be seen with regard to its particular circumstances whether it would be just and convenient to appoint a Receiver.

The Court below having taken the circumstances of this case into consideration came to the conclusion that it was not a case in which the discretion of appointing a Receiver should be exercised. Primarily the discretion is to be exercised by the Court in which the case is pending and to which the application is made. The Appellate Court seldom interferes with the exercise of the discretion by lower Courts. It has been held that the Court has full discretion to appoint or remove a Receiver, and the Appellate Court will not as a rule, when the first Court has acted after considering all the circumstances, interfere with the exercise of that discretion [See Sant Ram v. Ram Chand (2), Sivagnana-thammal v. Arunachelam Pillai (3) and Mathuria Debya v. Shibdayal Singh Hasari (4)].

Now what are the facts of the present case? The suit is not a suit for the dissolution of a partnership business but it is admittedly a suit for the partition of joint property belonging to the brothers. The partnership branch which was under the management of the deceased brother and which is now being managed by his sons forms only a small fraction of the whole joint property. The other branch is under the management of the defendant No. 1 himself but he does not want a Receiver to be appointed for the management of his own branch, although both the branches form part of the same joint firm. Again the bulk of the property, both immoveable and moveable, is in the hand of the defendant No. 1 which he does not admit to be joint. In fact it has been contended on his behalf that having regard to the fact that the joint right of the present plaintiffs in the bulk of the property is not admitted, a Receiver cannot be appointed so as to dipossess him from it at this stage of the suit. The upshot of this argument is that while the defendant seeks to keep the major portion of the property in his possession, he wishes to deprive the plaintiffs even of a small item of it. The branch which is managed by the plaintiffs carries on the business of purchasing, curing and selling of hides. It is easy to perceive that this business is sure to suffer if it is taken out of the hands of the plaintiffs who are apparently managing it satisfactorily. As stated in the judgment of the Court below the plaintiffs have undertaken the responsibility for rendering the accounts of the business and this ought to be a sufficient safeguard for the interest of defendant No. 1. Under the above circumstances I am not prepared to interfere with the order of the lower Court.

Accordingly I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, West Berar, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 49 of 1918, dated the 12th February 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 111 of 1916, in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Khamgaon, decided on the 1st March 1917.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises some interesting points of law.

The plaintiff's suit though dismissed by the Sub-Judge, has been decreed in full by the District Judge. The case is that plaintiff's husband and the defendant, now appellant, Motiram, belonged to the same family and were distantly connected, plaintiff being looked on as the defendant's aunt. After her husband's death plaintiff lived on the proceeds of $2\frac{1}{2}$ fields left her by her husband. Her case is that sometime in 1910 the defendant persuaded her to transfer her property to him, he promising to give her maintenance. The transfer was not direct but the sale-deed was taken in the name of a relative of the plaintiff by name Kisan. On 25th April 1912 Kisan conveyed the fields to the defendant. The house which had been sold by the document of Kisan was not so transferred. On the 22nd May 1912 defendant executed in the plaintiff's favour a Kararnama by which he agreed to maintain plaintiff during her lifetime. That document did not disclose the true facts of the case. It made no mention of the transfer of plaintiff's fields to defendant but merely stated that as a matter of grace and charity the defendant had agreed to maintain plaintiff. One Janu was also mentioned as a purchaser in the sale-deed to Kisan.

The defence raised was that the sale to Janu and Kisan was a genuine transaction and that the Rs. 600 consideration mentioned therein was duly paid to the plaintiff. Defendant then purchased from Kisan and Janu, the consideration again being paid to the sellers. As for the Kararnama it was contended that there being no consideration for the same it could not be enforced

The District Judge remanded the case for a trial of the following issues.—

1. Had the defendant agreed to maintain the plaintiff during her lifetime on her transferring her property to him?

2. Was the sale-deed, executed by the plaintiff in the names of Kisan and Janu, really benami for the benefit of the defendant and did no consideration mentioned in it pass for it, as alleged by the plaintiff?

3. Was the sale deed, taken by the defendant from Kisan and Janu, a real transaction for consideration paid, or did the two sale-deeds (1) by the plaintiff to Kisan and Janu and (2) by the latter to the defendant, form in reality one transaction, that is transfer from the plaintiff to the defendant, in consideration of the defendant agreeing to maintain the plaintiff?

The trial Court found these issues against plaintiff but the District Judge on a full and careful consideration of the evidence has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's story is the true one. He finds that charities such as the one evidenced by the Kararnama are seldom reduced to the shape of a formal document and that there was no reason for the plaintiff to divest herself of the property as she was able to live on the lease money of the fields and pay her debts therefrom. There was no reason for her to sell her house nor was there any pressure which necessitated the sale of all her immoveable property. Consideration for the sale he held had not been established and finds that the other co-purchaser Janu strangely enough says that he had absolutely no knowledge of his name being put in the sale-deed. He denies contributing anything towards the purchase-money thereof. He had not even seen the fields.

According to Kisan, Janu's name was entered at the suggestion of one Nyahaji, the latter contributing Rs. 200 on Janu's behalf. Nyahaji, however, supports the plaintiff. The Judge holds that the first purchase deed in the name of Kisan and Janu was really for the defendant's benefit and benami. No consideration passed except the payment of Rs. 150 to the plaintiff's lessees to break their lease of the fields. The house is still in plaintiff's possession.

As regards the Kararnama the Judge thinks the defendant is attempting to behave dishonestly. He finds that Rs. 60 a year is a fair maintenance allowance and gives plaintiff arrears at this rate for three years and directs that she is entitled to receive from the defendant Rs. 60 per annum in future as maintenance. He makes the arrears and her future maintenance a charge on the fields in suit and fixed the defendant's liabilities to the extent of these fields only.

It is argued that the lower Appellate Court has erred in law in admitting the Kararnama in evidence for that document purporting to be an agreement by which maintenance was promised through love and affection, without consideration, must be registered under section 25 of the Contract Act. It is clear that on the findings of the lower Court there was consideration for the document, the consideration being the transfer of the woman's immoveable property to the defendant through Kisan and Janu. The finding of fact as regards the true nature of this transaction cannot be questioned here in second appeal. It is further argued that assuming that there was any consideration for this Kararnama, then sections 91 and 92 of the Evidence Act preclude the giving of any evidence for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms. The plaintiff alleges that the execution of the Kararnama was due to a separate agreement where by the defendant promised to give her maintenance if she transferred her property to him and proof of that oral agreement seems to me provable under the second and third provisos of section 92 of the Evidence Act, The principle enunciated in Gujarmal Ramlal v. Sitaram 'Arjun (1) does not, in my opinion, in the present case prevent the plaintiff from establishing with reference to the Kararnama the facts she alleges. Evidence is certainly allowable to show that the Kararnama was executed because the plaintiff had fulfilled her part of the contract: G. M. Cutts v. T. F. Brown (2). It is settled law that in the case of a deed of sale it is open to the vendors to prove that no consideration was actually paid, and section 92 of the Evidence Act does not enact that no statement of fact in a written instrument is to be contradicted by oral evidence: see Sah Lal Chand v. Indarjit (3). It was open to the plaintiff to show that it was not love and affection that prompted the execution of the Kararnama but the agreement that she should convey her property to the present appellant and that he in turn was to give her maintenance.

The Judge's decision in fixing the maintenance as a charge, upon the land is objected to. I am referred to sections 55 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act and it is argued that as a charge can only be created by a contract or operation of law in the present case the maintenance allowance cannot be a charge upon the land. The form of words employed in the Kararnama is immaterial provided it is clear that there was an intention that the person in whose favour the document was executed should have benefit of the security of the land. The facts here are that the plaintiff was induced to transfer her land on the undertaking that defendant should provide her with maintenance and there is no reasonable doubt that that maintenance was to be paid out of the profits defendant obtained from the plaintiff's land in his possession. Under these circumstances it seems to me that plaintiff has been rightly given a charge on the property made over to the defendant for her unpaid and future maintenance. I am aware that the ordinary right of maintenance under Hindu Law does not create a charge in favour of the person entitled but the present case is not based on Hindu Law but on agreement.

It is next argued that compensation is an adequate relief in the present case. It is not clear how this can be so. The agreement found was that the transfer of the property was to provide plaintiff with the maintenance and the claim for maintenance under these circumstances cannot be adequately met by compensation unless of course the amount offered as compensation would provide the amount of maintenance which the plaintiff has been found to be entitled to. No offer of this nature has been made. It is true that making the maintenance a charge upon the land affected the appellant's interest in the land but that was part of his agreement and he, therefore, cannot complain.

The 4th ground of the memorandum of appeal has not been argued and as to the 5th ground it was never raised in the first Court that the appellant was justified in stopping maintenance because the plaintiff was of a bad character. This plea is an afterthought for it was stated for the defendant that he declined to give any reason for not acting up to the agreement and the fact that plaintiff has been outcasted long before the date of the execution of the Kararnama shows the falsity of this plea.

The 8th and 9th grounds of appeal have been abandoned.

It seems to me that the case has been rightly decided by the lower Appellate Court. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Court—Period, whether can be enlarged—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, 151, scope of—No adjudication on point of law—Revision, whether competent.

The provisions of Article 163 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act are intended to be strictly followed and the Court has no discretion to enlarge the period of 30 days therein prescribed. [p. 57, col. 1.]

Plaintiff's suit was dismissed in default by the Munsif, 1st class, Jagadhri. Plaintiff applied to have this order of dismissal set aside within the prescribed period of limitation, but the Munsif had only second class powers then and returned the application for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff filed another application in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, after the expiry of the period of limitation:

Held, that the Court had no power to enlarge the period and that the application must, therefore, be dismissed. [p. 57, col. 1.]

Makund Ram v. Ramraj, 35 Ind. Cas. 292; 14 A. L. J. 310, followed.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code gives no new powers to the Courts relating as it does merely to powers that are inherent in all Courts. [p. 57, col. 1.]

Where there has been no adjudication on a question of law but a distinct burking of the issue and a refusal on the part of the Court to follow a Statute of the Legislature the High Court will interfere in revision. [p. 57, col. 2.]

Application under section 44 of Act IX of 1919, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 10th May 1919, reversing that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 24th February 1919, rejecting the application for restoration of the case dismissed in default on 8th August 1918.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Petitioner.

Lalas Jagan Nath and Hira Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A suit instituted by the respondent-plaintiff against the petitioner-defendant was dismissed in default on the 8th of August 1918 by a Munsif of Jagadhri exercising first class powers. On the 1st of October 1918 the respondent-plaintiff filed an application in the Court of the Munsif at Jagadhri asking for the order of dismissal in default to be set aside. On the 1st of October 1918, however, the Munsif at Jagadhri had only 2nd class powers and the application in question is said to have been returned to the respondent-plaintiff for presentation in he proper Court. On the 2nd of October 918, the respondent-plaintiff filed another pplication for the setting aside of the r der of dismissal in default in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge at Ambala. In this second application reference was made to the fact that an application to the same effect had been filed at Jagadhri in the Court of the Munsif there on the 1st of October but had been returned for want of jurisdiction. This second application to which the first application was apparently appended was sent to Lala Munshi Ram, Junior Subordinate Judge, for disposal and, on the 24th of February 1919, that officer held that the application for restoration was barred by the Statute of Limitation and dismissed it accordingly. Against this order of dismissal the plaintiff-respondent preferred an appeal to the Court of the District Judge at Ambala (Mr. Tapp) who on the 10th of May 1919 accepted the appeal and returned the application to the first Court for disposal under Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code. Against this order on appeal the defendant-petitioner has come up to this Court on the revision side ond on his behalf I have heard Mr. Manohar Lal while Lala Jagan Nath has addressed me on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent.

The point for determination is a fairly simple one and but for the manner in which the learned District Judge has thought fit to deal with it, would not require any lengthy judgment. The learned District Judge, however, has thought fit to comment adversely on the manner in which the first Court dealt with the application and with the point of limitation. The strictures passed on the first Court are wholly erroneous and in my opinion were uncalled for. The learned District Judge has chosen to deal with the matter from what he calls a common sense point of view and in doing so has wholly disregarded the provisions of the Statute of Limitation. Indeed it appears that he had deliberately disregarded them, for he says:—

"It is true that the law of limitation is an imperative law, but I do not think we should apply the provisions in the present case."

The law being an imperative law the Courts have no option but to apply the said law when it is applicable. Here the first Court realised its duty and, recognising the hardship that the application of the Statute of Limitation might cause, followed the law. The learned District Judge on the other hand while apparently realising the same difficulties has chosen to ignore the existence of this particular Statute, a position that he was not authorised to adopt. It has been repeatedly laid down that the provisions of Article 163 are intended to be strictly followed and that the Court has no discretion to enlarge the period of thirty days therein prescribed, vide, inter alia, Sahib Ditta v. Roda (1). The first application was filed on the 1st of October by applying the provisions of section 4 of the Limitation Act had the application been made in the proper Court it would have been within time. As a matter of fact it was presented to a Court not having jurisdiction and that Court very rightly and properly returned it to the applicant for presentation in the proper Court. This was the ultimate period that could be allowed and the second application made on the 2nd to the Senior Subordinate Judge was clearly out of time: [Makund Ram v. Ramroj (2).] The learned District Judge seems to have realised this difficulty and for that reason decided to ignore the Statute of Limitation and accepted the appeal holding that the Munsif at Jagadhri on the 1st of October might and ought to have acted under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, and sent the papers to the Senior Subordinate Judge, and that, therefore, he (the learned District Judge) chose apparently to act under that section of the Civil Procedure Code. Now as a matter of fact section 151, Civil Procedure Code, gives no new powers to the Courts relating as it does merely to the powers that are inherent in all Courts. The Munsif, 2nd Class, Jagadhri, not having jurisdiction to entertain the application could not, under any inherent powers he possessed or powers granted by section 151, Civil Procedure Code, have done other than what he did. The action of the learned District Judge, therefore, was wholly unwarranted. Lala Jagan Nath, however, referred me to Sayad Mir Shah v. Atar Singh (3), Faqir Chand v. Musammat Balkaur (4) and Ghasita v. Sultan (5) and contended that even when an error of law had been committed this Court would be very careful in exercising its revisional powers. I have carefully considered those decisions and am in complete accord with them but, as pointed out by Mr. Manohar Lal, the circumstances in the present case are not such as are contemplated by the said decisions. Here there has been no adjudication on the question of limitation but a distinct barking of the issue and a refusal on the part of the learned District Judge to follow a Statute of the Legislature. It may be that to interfere will cause hardship to the plaintiff-respondent but for this he has himself to blame. I consider that the order of the learned District Judge is wrong and is one which should be set aside and I accordingly accept this petition and setting aside the order of the District Judge, dated the 10th of May 1919, restore that of Lala Munshi Ram, Subordinate Judge, dated 24th February 1919. Parties will pay their own costs throughout.

Appeal against the order of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in Insolvency Case No. 110 of 1917, dated the 10th December 1917.

Mr V. Bose, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. V. Abhyankar and D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order setting aside a sale at the instance of the Receiver in Insolvency Case No. 110 of 1917. An application was made on the 11th August 1917, by one of the creditors to have Punjaji Narayan adjudged an insolvent. The order of adjudication was passed on the 10th December 1917. The sale which is sought to be set aside was effected on the 16th June 1917.

The vendee is the son-in-law of the insolvent. The insolvent has admitted that he conveyed the whole of his estate to his son-in-law by the sale-deed.

It has been found by the lower Court that the consideration for the sale was Rs. 12,000 made up as follows:—

Rupees 4,770 was paid to one Bajirao who had a mortgage over the property.

Rupees 1,027 paid to the vendee as the amount due on a bond.

Rupees 200 earnest money.

About Rs. 6,000 paid before the Registering Officer.

The lower Court has also held that the whole of Rs. 6,000 was applied by the insolvent in discharge of his debts.

It is no longer contended that the sale was a nominal transaction or that the consideration was inadequate. The creditors say that the sale is void under sections 36 and 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

As regards the applicability of section 36, the question depends on whether or not the sale was made in good faith, for it is now conceded that there was valuable consideration.

As regards section 37, this can only refer to Rs. 1,027 paid to the purchaser on a bond for Rs. 1,000, dated the 17th March 1917 which was not repayable till the 28th November 1917.

The purchaser has not gone into the witness-box to show under what circumstances he came to purchase the whole of the immoveable property of his father-in-law who is an agriculturist nor has he stated that he did not know that his father-in law was heavily indebted at the time. It is not pretended that there was any moveable property of any value still available to the creditors. The whole case rests upon the finding of the lower Court recorded in paragraph 6 of its judgment. It is to the following effect:—

"The vendee is the son-in-law of the vendor and it is very unlikely that he should not have been aware of the financial position of the vendor."

The fact that the purchaser has avoided the witness-box justified the conclusion of the learned Judge who has wide knowledge of the ways and habits of the people in this part of the country. I am not prepared to differ from him on this point.

Once this finding is accepted the conclusion of the lower Court is inevitable.

The sale was practically of the whole of the debtor's property available to the creditors. The payment of the mortgage money was not under pressure of any impending sale or foreclosure and the money under his own bond was not due till five months afterwards. The balance was handed over to the insolvent and so far as the purchaser is concerned he took no steps to see that it was applied in payment of other creditors. Where the effect of a conveyance of the whole of the debtor's property is to defeat and delay the creditors it is presumed that the debtor acted with intent to defeat and delay the creditors. Here the financial position of the debtor was known to his son-in-law. In making the purchase he cannot, therefore, be said to be acting in good faith. In Jukes, In re, Official Receiver, Ex parte (1), Wright, J., says:—

"I cannot help thinking that if a creditor of a debtor takes the whole, or substantially the whole, of the property of his debtor in payment of a past debt, and knowing that there are other creditors, he cannot be said to be acting in good faith."

By parity of reasoning where a near relation of a debtor purchases the whole, or substantially the whole, of the property of a person in insolvent circumstances with notice of the insolvency he cannot be said to be acting in good faith.

I have no doubt that the repayment of a debt, not yet due, by a person in insolvent circumstances is a case of undue preference shown to a near relation.

The result is that the case having been correctly decided, the appeal is dismissed with costs. I fix Rs. 200 as Pleader's fee to be divided equally between the two sets of respondents who have appeared by Counsel in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

ADAMI, J.—The plaintiffs in the case out of which this second appeal arises are the 16-annas maliks of Touzi No. 999. They gave a thicca of the whole 16 annas to the defendants for a period from 1892 to 1909. During the continuance of the thicca the defendants bought lands, 33 bighas odd, from certain tenants and were entered in the survey papers in respect of those lands as holding them bakasht. The thiccadari came to an end in 1910. The defendants then gave up the lands comprised in the thicca except these 33 bighas. The plaintiffs gave notice to them to relinquish them, and as they refused to do so, brought this suit for recovery of possession of the 33 bighas, 11 kathas, 7 dhurs as being their bakasht lands.

In the first Court and also in the lower Appellate Court it was found that the lands were not the bakasht lands of the maliks as had been claimed but were raiyati lands. It was held also that with regard to 17 bighas, 11 kathas, 7 dhurs out of the 33 bighas the co-sharer proprietors had taken rent from the defendants after the expiry of the thicca and recognised them as tenants and, therefore, with regard to these 17 bighas the plaintiffs' suit could not succeed. With regard to the rest of the land, however, both the lower Courts have found that the defendants by virtue of their purchase from the raiyats gained no rights which subsisted after the expiry of the thicca and that they then became trespassers and were liable to ejectment.

Before us it is now contended that the lower Courts in coming to their decision as regards the rest of these lands in suit failed to notice that the purchase from the raiyats were made by the defendants prior to the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1907, and that, therefore, the decision in Ramrup Mahto v. H. Manners (1) should have been applied. In that case it was decided that section 22, subsection (3) related only to the acquisition of an occupancy right by occupation and not to an acquisition by purchase or otherwise, and that, therefore, it was possible for an ijaradar to purchase an occupancy right from a raiyat during the subsistence of the ijara.

The decision in Ramrup Mahto v. H. Manners (1) was delivered in 1903, and it seems clear that it was by reason of the interpretation put upon section 22 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the Calcutta High Court that the section was amended by the Legislature in 1907 in order to prohibit the purchase of occupancy rights by an ijaradar, thus acknowledging that prior to the amendment such purchase was valid or at least that any doubts as to its validity had been removed by the ruling of the Court.

Under the circumstances we consider that the appellants' contention must be supported and we hold that in this case the purchase having been made prior to 1907 the right of occupancy passed by the sales to the appellants.

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the respondents that in any case the sales having been sales of an occupancy holding such sales would be void, or voidable by the plaintiff malik, if made without the consent of the landlord, unless the defendant could prove a custom of transferability, and that, there being no proof in this case that the occupancy holdings are transferable without the landlord's consent, and there being no consent by the landlord, the defendants bought nothing at all and could not even have a right as non occupancy tenants.

This contention does not seem to be sound in the circumstances of this case. Under the terms of his lease the ijaradar had obtained from the whole body of the co-sharer landlords their entire rights as maliks for the period of the ijara with regard to the whole of the 16-annas. He stood in the place of the maliks and during the term had the power to grant consent in the same way as they would have been able to do had they been direct landlords. The plaintiffs remained the proprietors, but ceased to be landlords of the raiyats who held immediately under the defendants. It is true that in the lower Courts it has been found with regard to the other 17 bighas the plaintiffs could have no case, because the landlords after the expiry of the lease had shown their consent to the tenancy of the defendants by receipt of rent. But the question of transferability was never raised in either Court and as I have said, it does not properly arise here, because the ijaradars in their position of landlords over the tenants gave consent to the sale, being themselves the purchasers

We find that the defendants are not liable to be ejected from these lands, as prayed for by the plaintiffs in this suit.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal with costs. So much of the decree of the lower Appellate Court as refers to the lands now the subject of this appeal must be set aside, and the suit be dismissed in its entirety.

ATKINSON, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—Payment made by one person on behalf of another, whether can be recovered.

Although section 69 of the Contract Act does not require the person making the payment to be compellable to make it, or that it should be made at the opposite party's request the person making the payment nevertheless must establish some material interest in making the payment, that is to say, he must show that by the payment he averted some loss or detriment to himself. [p. 63, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Nimar, in Civil Appeal No. 128 of 1918, decided on the 25th September 1918, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Harda, in Civil Suit No. 13 of 1918, on the 14th May 1919.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to the suit out of which this second appeal arises reside in the town of Harda, the plaintiffs being tailors and the defendants moneylenders. Roberts and Owers were Guards on the G. I. P. Railway at Harda and with each of them the parties respectively had dealings. The plaintiffs obtained the following decrees:—

Serial No.	No. and year of suit.	Description of Court.	Defendants.	Amount decreed.	Date of decree.	Corresponding Exhibit in this case.
1	228 of 1910	Subordinate Judge, Harda	Roberts and another,	250—4—3	5—3—1910	P-1
2	246 of 1914	"	Roberts and Owers.	572—2—9	28—10—1914	P-2
3	247 of 1914	"	"	701-12—0	"	P-3
4	147 of 1912	Munsif, Seoni, Malva.	"	407—0—0	23—4—1912	P-4

The defendants obtained one decree against Roberts only and another against Owers only of which particulars in the above form are as follows :—

Serial No.	No. and year of suit.	Description of Court.	Defendants.	Amount decreed.	Date of decree.	Corresponding Exhibit in this case.
1	156 of 1915	Small Cause Court, Harda.	Owers	540—0—0	13—3—1915	P-6
2	1170 of 1914	"	Roberts	83—2—3	16—11—1914	P-5

Besides the above decrees it is necessary to mention one obtained by the plaintiffs in Suit No. 216 of 1912 in the Court of the Munsif, Harda, on the 4th September 1912 by which Roberts was directed to pay Rs. 71-10-0 in all. On the 23rd May 1912 Robers and Owers applied to the High Court of Bombay to be adjudged insolvent and obtained the desired order on the 23rd December 1912, being finally discharged on the 19th February 1913 with a direction that the discharge extended to all debts incurred prior to the 23rd May 1912. In 1913 or 1914 the plaintiffs endeavoured to execute their decree in Suit No. 216 of 1912. Their application was dismissed by the executing Court, but its order was upset by the District Judge. In revision (No. 310 of 1914) this Court on the 21st December 1915 restored the order of the Subordinate Judge, holding that the discharge of Roberts by the Bombay High Court precluded the plaintiffs from taking further action, they having been parties to the insolvency proceedings and the decree under execution having been scheduled therein.

Roberts then moved the High Court of Bombay to take action against the plaintiffs and on the 5th October 1916 a notice (Exhibit P-10) was issued to the plaintiffs to show cause why they should not be committed to jail for contempt for having caused Roberts' salary to be attached in execution of the decree in Suit No. 216 of 1912; in Exhibit P-10 the suit number is wrongly given as 260. On the 1st November 1916 the plaintiffs apologized to the Court and obtained an order (Exhibit P-14) that on their paying to Roberts the monies recovered by them in execution of decrees and paying the costs of and incidental to the rule issued against them the rule should be discharged. On the 22nd idem the plaintiffs paid Rs. 501 to Roberts in full settlement of the amount to be refunded by them to him in pursuance of the High Court's order: the receipt of the payee is Exhibit P-16. It appears from Exhibits P-13 and P-15, dated respectively the 6th and 14th November 1916 that Owers took advantage of the action of Roberts to demand from the plaintiffs a refund of the sums they had improperly collected from Owers. The Exhibits thus mentioned are letters written by Owers' Solicitors Messrs. Dubash and Co. The first letter demanded repayment of all salaries recovered by the plaintiffs in execution of decrees scheduled in the insolvency proceedings of the Bombay High Court and threatened in default of payment to proceed against them for contempt. In the interim the plaintiffs addressed Messrs. Dubash and Co, a letter of which no copy has been filed. It appears, however, from Exhibit P-15 that the plaintiffs endeavoured to lessen their liability by alleging that the defendants had received from them a part of the monies which they had realized in execution of their decrees. This letter expressly states that as the plaintiffs had recovered all the money, Owers could look to them alone. The result of the correspondence was that the plaintiffs paid Owers Rs. 501 who authorized them to recover any sum which the defendants had obtained under the attachments affected by the plaintiffs against him. Owers' receipt is Exhibit P-17 and bears date the 23rd November 1916.

Neither Exhibit P-16 nor Exhibit P-17 gives any details of the sums respectively acknowledged therein.

On the 15th November 1916 the plaintiffs sent the defendants a notice requiring them to refund what they had obtained by way of rateable distribution under their decrees against Roberts and Owers: a copy of the notice is Exhibit P-27. The defendants sent no reply to it.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted on the 7th February 1918 and we are concerned here with a part only of the claim. That part sets out that in rateable distribution the defendants received under attachments of pay effected by the plaintiffs sums aggregating Rs. 229 from Owers and others aggregating Rs. 45-12-9 from Roberts. The plaintiffs thus claimed refund of Rs. 274-12-9 on the ground that they had paid this sum for the defendants under pressure of legal proceedings. In this connection, the following issue was framed by the trial Judge:—

"Can the plaintiffs get back the money which the defendants received as rateable distribution in case they had to refund the whole amount realized from Roberts and Owers?"

The Judge held that the payments to Roberts and Owers were purely voluntary on the plaintiff's part and could not be considered as covered by section 69, Indian Contract Act, the plaintiffs not having been really interested in paying for the defendants. The suit was, therefore, dismissed and an appeal to the District Court failed. The District Judge held that the defendants were in no danger of being committed to jail or otherwise dealt with for contempt by the Bombay High Court and that the payment on the demand by Owers' Solicitors was still less one which could be treated as made on behalf of the defendants. The learned Judge remarked that the plaintiffs might have taken advantage of the fact that they did not benefit by all the sums realized from Roberts and Owers and so confined their payments to what they had themselves received.

In appeal in this Court the plaintiffs are said to be entitled to refund either under section 69 or section 70, Indian Contract Act. The terms of these sections are as follows :—

"69. A person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other.

"70. Where a person lawfully does anything for another person, or delivers anything to him, not intending to do so gratuitously, and such other person enjoys the benefit thereof, the latter is bound to make compensation to the former in respect of, or to restore, the thing so done or delivered."

With reference to section 69, Indian Contract Act, I am referred to sub-section (2), section 73, Civil Procedure Code, which is in the following terms :—

"Where all or any of the assets liable to be rateably distributed under this section are paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets."

The latter provision makes it clear that the insolvent from whom the defendants improperly recovered money in execution of their decrees might sue for refund of that money. The plaintiffs, however, had to show more than that the defendants were bound by law to refund. The plaintiffs have to show in addition a material interest in making the payment and that the money was paid in order to protect that interest. According to their learned Advocate, a certain interest existed in the fact that the plaintiffs effected the attachment of the pay from which the defendants benefited. Now, it is possible that the plaintiffs made themselves liable for damages to Roberts and Owers by attempting to recover decretal debts which were included in the insolvents' schedule to their knowledge. This fact, however, seems to me to furnish no reason for holding that sums actually distributed in execution to the defendants under subsection (1), section 73, Civil Procedure Code, could in any circumstances be recovered from the plaintiffs. It is true that section 69, Indian Contract Act, does not require the person making the payment to be compellable to make it or that it was made by the opposite party's request. The fact, however, remains that the payer has to establish some interest, and by this I understand that he must show that by the payment he averted some loss or detriment to himself. In the present case it is clear that the High Court of Bombay proceeded against the plaintiffs only in respect of their action for execution of the decree in Suit No. 216 of 1912 to which the defendants were not parties. Similarly, the claim put forward by Owers' Solicitors was solely in respect of sums actually recovered by the plaintiffs. It seems that the plaintiffs incorrectly represented to the Solicitors that they themselves received all the pay which was attached and then passed on some to the defendants: had the facts been correctly represented, it is not at all likely that recovery in full would have been insisted on, inasmuch as section 73, Civil Procedure Code, makes any course other than rateable distribution among all of certain decree-holders impossible.

I am referred for the appellants to Futteh Ali v. Gunganath Roy (1) as a somewhat parallel case. There the plaintiff and the defendant had been made jointly liable by a former decree. In execution, the decree-holder, attached and obtained an order for sale of the property belonging to the plaintiff only who thereupon, in order to save his property from sale, satisfied the entire decree. It was held that the plaintiff was compelled to satisfy the whole decree, inasmuch as he was jointly and severally liable with the defendant to satisfy it, and his payment could not, therefore, be held to have been voluntary or officious so as to deprive him of the remedy of contribution. The Court doubted whether a suit for contribution where both plaintiff and defendant were liable for the money paid by the plaintiff falls within the scope of either section 69, or section 70, Indian Contract Act, which seem rather to contemplate persons who not being themselves bound to pay the money, or to do the act, do it under circumstances which give them a right to recover from the person who has allowed the payment to be made and has benefited by it. The case cited appears, therefore, to be of no assistance in dealing with the present one.

In connection with the claim for monies realized from Owers, it is further apparent from Exhibit P.6 that two amounts realized by the defendants—Rs. 80.13.0 on the 19th July 1915 and Rs. 80.12.0 on the 22nd February 1916—were obtained by independent execution in which the plaintiffs had no part. The defendant in fact obtained only Rs. 67-7-0 by way of rateable distribution as against Owers. Again, we find from Exhibit P 5 that rateable distribution under attachment effected by the plaintiffs accounts for only Rs. 25.5.6 of the amount (45-12-9) received by the defendants, two recoveries (Rs. 10 on the 30th June 1915 and Rs. 10-7-3 on the 12th April 1916) having been effected by independent executions. To the extent, therefore, of Rs. 182-0-3 the plaintiffs' claim must in any view fail, having been limited to contribution to the extent of sums obtained by the defendants by way of rateable distribution.

1) C. 113; 10 C. L. R. 20.

In my opinion, the plaintiffs can properly be deemed to have been interested in reimbursing Roberts and Owers to the extent only to which they have themselves received money from those debtors: as already remarked, this position finds support in section 73, Civil Procedure Code. What the plaintiffs apparently did was to compromise with the insolvents without any regard to the wishes of the defendants. In this way they escaped liability for damages in respect of their wrongful attachments as distinct from the claim for refund of sums actually recovered from the debtors, but it is not shown that the defendants in any way shared the plaintiffs' liability for damages as such. I hold that section 69, Indian Contract Act, does not apply to the facts.

With regard to the application of section 70, Indian Contract Act, I need only refer to the law as laid down by this Court in Shriram v. Harbaii (2) in the words quoted from the judgment of the Privy Council in Ram Tuhul Singh v. Bisesvar Lal (3). In the present case it does not appear that either Roberts or Owers had any intention of moving the High Court of Bombay to proceed for contempt against the defendants and, in so far as the defendants were liable to refund money either to Roberts or Owers, the plaintiffs were mere volunteers who in fact paid money which was not really demanded from them. In the witness-box the plaintiff Mojiram tried to make out that his compromises with Roberts and Owers were made in pursuance of a promise from the defendants that they would bear their share of the necessary expenses, but this formed no part of the pleadings and is not relied upon here. Moreover, the carrying out of the compromises without any serious attempt to ascertain the defendants' wishes in the matter indicates that the plaintiffs were consulting not the defendant's but their own interests in the matter. The notice (Exhibit P-27) said to have been sent by the plaintiffs on the 15th November 1916 certainly does not convey the idea that the plaintiffs would themselves refund the money which the defendants had realized. I agree with the lower Appellate Court in thinking that the plaintiffs did not really pay on behalf of the defendants at all.

As already remarked, in any view of the case the greater part of the claim must fail, inasmuch as it relates to realizations made by the defendants independently of the rateable distribution of assets obtained under attachments effected by the plaintiffs.

Holding that neither section 69 nor section 70, Indian Contract Act, applies to the circumstances of this case. I dismiss this appeal with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

MESSRS. AKARAPU VENKANNA CHINNIAH A FIRM OF MERCHANTS, CARRYING ON BUSINESS AT No. 140, MINT STREET, GEORGE TOWN, MADRAS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family trade—Debts incurred in course of trade—Liability of minor members, extent of.

Where money is borrowed for the purpose of a joint family trade, all the members of the family, including the minors, are liable to the extent of their shares in the family properties as well as their shares in the assets of the business. [p. 65, col. 2.]

THAMMANINA CHINNA LAKSHMINARASIMHA v. AKARAPU VENKANNA CHINNIAH.

Appeal against the decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, in Original Suit No. 334 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellants.—The decree of the lower Court is wrong, in that it makes 2nd and 3rd defendants' shares in the family properties liable. They were minors at the time to which the suit transaction relates. Only the shares of the appellants in the assets of the business can be made liable. See Official Assignee of Madras v. Palaniappa Chetty (1), Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma (2) and Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (3).

Messrs. Venkatasubba Row and Radha Krishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The trade is admittedly joint family trade. Debts incurred in the course of such trade are binding on all co-parceners including minors. Muthaya Pillai v. Tinnevelly South India Bank (4), and Malaiperumal Chettiar v. Arunachalla Chettiar (5).

JUDGMENT.—It is argued in this appeal that the 1st defendant on the one hand and the 2nd and 3rd defendants on the other settled their accounts and divided their business sometime in 1908, and, therefore, the appellants are not liable for any debts incurred in the course of the business since that date. The learned trial Judge has, however, found that this is not proved by the evidence and he gives strong reasons for his conclusions. Besides it is not suggested that, if there was any division so far as this business was concerned, the plaintiffs either knew of such a division or were informed of it.

The next question argued is one of law, namely, whether the decree is right, in so far as it makes the appellants, 2nd and 3rd defendants' shares in the family property liable for the amount of the decree. They were minors at the time of the transaction which gave rise to the debt, but it is found and not disputed that the trade in the course of which the debts were incurred was an ancestral family trade, the defendants being Comati Chetties.

The argument on behalf of the appellants is that the shares of the appellants in the assets of the business are alone liable, and reliance is placed in this connection on the rulings of this Court reported as Official Assignee of Madras v. Palaniappa Chetty (1) and Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma (2) and on the decisions of the Bombay High Court reported as Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (3). The ruling in Official Assignee of Madras v. Palaniappa Chetty (1) was by a Full Bench of this Court and does not contain anything which can be said to support the proposition put forward on behalf of the appellants. As regards Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma (2) it does not appear to be very clear whether the learned Chief Justice intended to lay down any general proposition that, in the case of an ancestral family business belonging to a trading family such as this, debts incurred in the course of such business are recoverable only from the shares in the assets of that business belonging to the junior members of the family, and not from their shares in the family property including the assets of the business. In any case, as pointed out in Malaiperumal Chettiar v. Arunachalla Chettiar (5) by Ayling and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., the question did not arise for decision upon the facts found in that case and the statement, which by no means is very clear on this point, was by way of obiter. On the other hand, we have a number of rulings which clearly are against the contention of the appellants. It is laid down in Muthaya Pillai v. Tinnevelly South India Bank (4) that where money was found borrowed for the purpose of an ancestral business carried on by the members of a joint Hindu family, all the members of the family including the minors are liable for the re-payment of such money to the extent of their share in the family properties as distinguished from their share in the assets of the business, because the family property is swelled by the profits of the trade which is carried on with the credit of the entire family property. This view of the law is followed in the case just referred to in Malaiperumal Chettiar v.

Arunachalla Chettiar (5), where it is also laid down that the ordinary presumption in the case of such business is that the entire family property is embarked in the business and forms part of the assets of the business. In Dhulipalla Kanakam v. Nadipalli Venkataraju (6) Sesbagiri Aiyar and Napier, JJ., also acted upon this view of the law. With reference to the ruling of the Bombay High Court reported as Bank of Bombay v. Raghunathji Tarachand (7) it seems to have been conceded by the Counsel for the respondents that the personal decree given by Heaton, J., against the minor was wrong and the decree was modified in accordance with that concession. But in the body of the judgment, delivered by Mr. Justice Chandavarkar, the well known case reported as Ramlal Thakursidas v. Lakhmichand (8) is cited with approval as laying down the law on the subject of family trades, and there it is distinctly ruled that "where a minor is a co-parcener in a joint family, his share in the family property is liable for debts contracted by his managing co-parcener for any family purpose or any purpose incidental to it. If the family is a trading firm, the same rule must apply, with this difference that the term family purpose or purpose incidental to it must here give way to the expression trading purpose or purpose incidental to it, having regard to the nature and objects of the family business." This exposition of the law has been followed, as pointed out in Kadiri Kanakkapillantakath Abdurehman Kutti Haji v. Kochipalli Hussain Kunhi Haji (9), by all the High Courts and the learned Chief Justice himself cites this case with approval in Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma (2). We hold that the decree of the City Civil Judge is right on this point as well.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Where in answer to a suit on a mortgage the defendant pleads that the stipulation as to the payment of interest is penal, the question before the Court is not what the plaintiff has actually charged and whether that is penal or not. It must decide for itself whether the original stipulation as to interest was penal or not; and if it was penal, what reasonable compensation the plaintiff is entitled to receive. [p. 70, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Suit No. 66 of 1913, dated the 31st August 1917.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. B. Kinkhede and W. R. Puranik, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—(November 18, 1919).—The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the plaintiff Sheoshankarpuri to enforce two mortgages executed by defendant No. 1 Bansi, defendant No. 2 Mahadeo and Govinda deceased, the father of defendants Nos. 3 to 6. Defendants Nos. 7 to 10 are the sons of defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 11 is the son of defendant No. 2. Defendants Nos. 3 to 11 are all minors. These minor defendants are joined on the ground that they are liable to pay the mortgage debts as antecedent debts of their fathers and as incurred for legal necessity. Defendant No. 12 is an attaching creditor of the executants of the two mortgages. We give below the substance of such pleadings as are necessary to be referred to for the purposes of this appeal.

The first of the mortgages, dated the 12th May 1908, is a simple mortgage for a sum of Rs. 3,000 payable by six annual instalments. Interest is agreed to be paid at Rs. 1-6 per cent. per mensem and in default in payment of instalments an enhanced rate of Rs. 1-14 is stipulated for. In case of two defaults the whole debt is to become payable. The second mortgage, dated the 14th May 1909, is a possessory mortgage by conditional sale for Rs. 3,000 payable by six annual instalments. The terms of interest are the same as in the first mortgage. The net profits of the mortgaged property are to be applied, first in payment of the previous mortgage debt and then in payment of this debt. There is a condition that in the event of any creditor of the executants attaching the property the whole debt then due is to become payable. The property mortgaged by both these instruments is identical. The whole of this property is situated in the Wardha District, with the exception of a mango tree said to belong to defendant No. 1 Bansi and to be situated on the Dhura of a field called Waghai in the village of Junapani in the Nagpur District. The suit is for the recovery of Rs. 12,798-9-3 due on account of principal and interest after giving certain credits. The cause of action in respect of the simple mortgage is stated to have arisen on the 16th May 1912, when two instalments were in default and that in respect of the mortgage by conditional sale on the 10th August 1911, when the defendant No. 12 attached the mortgaged property.

The defendants contested the suit on several grounds, but the pleas with which we are now concerned are that

(1) The registration of the document in the Nagpur District was fraudulently procured by a fictitious entry of a mango tree which never had any existence and did not belong to the defendant No. 1; and that the entry was made at the instance of the plaintiff with a view to get registration effected in the Nagpur District. The registration, therefore, was invalid and the deed could not operate as a transfer of immoveable property;

(2) the Nagpur Courts had no jurisdiction to try the suit as no part of the mortgaged property was situated in this District;

(3) the stipulation to pay compound interest was penal and should be relieved against; and

(4) no part of the mortgage debts was an antecedent debt of the executants, nor were the mortgage debts incurred for legal necessity or the benefit of the minor defendants. The minors were, therefore, not bound by the mortgages.

The first Court tried as preliminary issues the points involved in the first of these pleas. It found that the defendant No. 1 owned and intended to mortgage a tree situated in a field called Waghai in Mouza Takalghat which adjoins Mouza Junapani, but the tree was misdescribed in the mortgage deed through mistake. It held that the defendants were estopped from denying the title of defendant No. 1 to the tree and that even if the latter was not the owner, the registration was good provided there was an agreement to mortgage the tree in Takalghat which was within the jurisdiction of the registering officer at Nagpur. On the second point it held that the Nagpur Courts had jurisdiction. On the 3rd point it held that the interest claimed was not penal. On the 4th point it found that a certain part of the consideration of the first mortgage constituted an antecedent debt binding on the minor defendants, but no legal necessity or benefit to the minors was proved in respect of any portion of the mortgage debts. It passed a decree for sale and foreclosure respectively on the two mortgages against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 12, and a decree for sale on the first mortgage against the minors in respect of the part of the consideration held binding on them.

All the defendants appealed to this Court. Twenty-one grounds were taken in the memorandum of appeal, but all have not been pressed. Grounds Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, the 1st and 3rd part of 14, 15, 17 and 18 are abandoned. The objection in the 2nd part of ground 14 is said to be the same as in ground No. 10, Grounds Nos. 19 and 21 are general.

Grounds Nos. 1 to 4 refer to the pleas raised in connection with the validity of the registration of the documents. The circumstances pleaded by the defendants as rendering the registration invalid are similar to those found in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dasi Debi (1). In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council found on the conduct of the parties and the evidence in the case that a particular parcel in a mortgage deed was in fact a fictitious entry and represented no property that the mortgagor possessed or intended to mortgage or that the mortgagee intended to form part of the security. They held that such an entry, intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a district where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact existed, was a fraud on the registration law, and no registration obtained by means thereof was valid.

Here also we have to find whether the tree described in the mortgage deed actually existed and represented any property that defendant Bansi possessed or intended to mortgage or the plaintiff intended to form part of his security. The entry in the mortgage deeds in respect of this tree is as follows:—

"One mango tree with trunk and crop standing on the Dhura of the field called Waghai Cha bounded on the east by Bhadu's field, on the west by Laxman's field, on the south by Rama Mali's field and on the north by the field of Chintu Mahar situate in Mouza Junapani, Parganah Bori, Tahsil and District Nagpur."

There is, we find, a field called Waghai in Mouza Kohola, an uninhabited village near Junapani, but to this the boundaries given above do not apply. The plaintiff, however, says that a tree standing in a field also named Waghai situated in Mouza Takalghat held in tenancy right by his witness No. 3, Gopal, is the one owned by Bansi and intended to be mortgaged. It is not denied that the burden of proving this assertion is on the plaintiff. He has examined witnesses to prove Bansi's ownership thereof. These witnesses are P. Ws. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 9 and 10. No reliance has been placed by the lower Court on the testimony of witnesses Nos. 2 and 9, and we agree with that Court's opinion and the reasons given by it for the same. The lower Court has, however, accepted the evidence of witnesses Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 6. P. W. No. 3 is the tenant of the field Waghai of Takalghat in which a mango tree stands. The substance of the evidence of these witnesses is that this tree belonged to one Sakhya Mahar and was sold by him some 15 or 16 years ago to the defendant Bansi and since then Bansi has sold the crops thereof to some of the witnesses. We are not prepared to accept the story as to the sale by Sakhya to Bansi. The tree is said to be about 20 years old and the purchase to have taken place 15 or 16 years ago. If so, the tree must have been only 4 years old at the time of its purchase. We do not think that Bansi or anybody else would purchase a four years old mango tree, which would not be in fruit and which was not likely to bear fruit for some years. It is also unlikely that Bansi would buy a tree in a place 14 miles away from his other property. Two of the plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 3 and 6 say that Bansi has a house in Takalghat, but these witnesses are contradicted by P. W. No. 8 and we do not accept their evidence. If Bansi had owned a house in Takalghat, it would certainly have been included in the mortgages. This mango tree is shown in the Khasra for the year 1899-1900, Exhibit P-2, as the property of Sakhya and no subsequent village paper is filed to show that Bansi was recorded as the owner after the alleged sale. P. W. No. 8, the son of Sakhya, says that the tree belongs to him and his two brothers and P. W. No. 10 supports him. Differing from the lower Court we find that the tree described in the mortgage never belonged to Bansi and that Bansi did not own any tree in the Nagpur District.

It has been contended that the question of ownership is immaterial so long as some tree to which the description given in the mortgage deed applied existed, but in view of what is said by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case cited above we cannot accept that contention. If Bansi owned no tree in the Nagpur District, then the entry to that effect is fictitious and made fraudulently for the only purpose imaginable, namely, to get the documents registered in the Nagpur District. From the conduct of the parties and the evidence on record no doubt is left that this was the purpose for which the entry was made.

It is urged on the plaintiff's behalf that he relied on the statement of Bansi as to the existence of the tree and his ownership thereof and the plaintiff himself was an innocent party to the fraud. We have gone through the evidence in the case and have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is as much responsible for this fictitious entry as Bansi, if not more so. According to P. W. No. 7, the plaintiff's agent, when Bansi came to the plaintiff to ask for the loan for which the first mortgage was executed, he proposed to mortgage the Wardha property only. The plaintiff had dealings with and known Bansi for 10 or 12 years, and we think it very probable, as deposed by Bansi as D. W. No. 1, that the plaintiff himself proposed to him to include a tree in Junapani or Takalghat where his father-in-law lived. It is not likely that Bansi could have thought of a tree as immoveable property for the purposes of registration. Admittedly the plaintiff's agent wished to avoid registration in Wardha on account of the trouble and expense of travelling to that place, which is nearly 50 miles by rail from Nagpur. This was undoubtedly one reason but we think a minor one; a much stronger motive, in our opinion, was to avoid the disadvantage of having to conduct litigation in that district should the necessity therefor arise. We do not think that any sufficient motive on the defendant's part to prefer registration in Nagpur has been established. Wardha was the district of his residence and in any litigation his position would be much better if he had to conduct it there.

For the above reasons we find that the entry represented no property that the mortgagor possessed or intended to mortgage or that the mortgagee intended to form part of his security. The tree was deliberately inserted in the mortgage deed at the instance of the plaintiff or his agent, for the sole purpose of having the registration effected in the Nagpur District. The registration thus effected was invalid and both the mortgages are inoperative as transfers of immoveable property.

On the above findings the question of estoppel raised by the plaintiff does not arise It also becomes unnecessary to discuss the pleas raised by the minor defendants regarding the binding nature of the mortgage debts as against their shares in the property. The suit, so far as the minor defendants are concerned, must be dismissed.

The plaintiff contended in the course of the argument before us, and the defendants conceded, that in case we find against the plaintiff on the question of the validity of the registration, the plaintiff would be entitled to treat the bonds as simple money bonds and to claim a money decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 personally and against defendants Nos. 3 to 6 to the extent of the assets of the deceased Govinda in their hands.

We now proceed to deal with the remaining grounds of appeal urged by the defendants.

Under the 5th ground of appeal it is urged that the mortgage dated the 14th May 1904, Exhibit P-15, has not been proved to be properly attested. In view of the finding regarding registration the question of the validity of the attestation does not arise.

Under ground No. 10 and the second part of ground No. 15 it is urged that payments by the defendants should be credited first towards the mortgage bond of 1908, Exhibit P-14. The learned Pleader for the appellants has not been able to tell us what the payments that he refers to in this ground are, and how those particular payments have been actually applied. The only stipulation there is in the bonds regarding appropriation is contained in Exhibit P-15 and it refers to the profits derived by the plaintiff from the mortgaged property while in his possession. There is no stipulation as to the appropriation of payments made by the defendants and no pleas were raised in this connection. The objection urged in ground No. 10, therefore, fails.

In view of our finding that the bonds in suit cannot operate as transfers of immoveable property, the question raised in ground No. 11 needs no discussion. It was admitted by the plaintiff-respondent that if the registration was held invalid, no charge for any part of the debt existed.

Under ground No. 16 it was urged that compound interest at the higher rate was penal and should be relieved against. The lower Court has dealt with this point in paragraph 36 of its judgment, which is as follows :—

"I do not see how the compound interest charged at the original rate amounts to a penalty. The ruling reported in Bhagwant Atmaram v. Ganpati Chowdhari (2) is against the defendants' contention. I find that the interest charged is not penal."

In our opinion the lower Court has not dealt with the question in the right way. The question before it was not what the plaintiff had actually charged and whether that was penal or not. It had to decide for itself whether the original stipulation as to interest was penal or not ; and if penal, what reasonable compensation the plaintiff was entitled to receive. We find that the original stipulation was penal. We do not, however, see any reason to make any alteration in the rate at which the plaintiff has actually claimed interest in the plaint, namely, Rs. 1-6 per mensem compound. At this rate a considerable reduction from the original compound rate has been given and it has not been pleaded that the security was so good as to make the rate charged unreasonable.

In ground No. 20 it is urged that there was no cause of action on the second mortgage bond, Exhibit P-15, until the debt on the first bond was satisfied. This objection cannot be sustained in face of the clear provision in Exhibit P-15 for a cause of action to arise on attachment by a creditor of the mortgagors taking place.

As all the grounds other than the first four have failed, a money decree will be passed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 personally and against defendants Nos. 3 to 6 to the extent of the assets of the deceased Govinda in their hands.

The parties are directed to make an account of what is due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the two bonds in suit treating them as simple money bonds. The account will be put in by the 29th November 1919. The 18th of December 1919 is fixed for final judgment.

(2) 1 N. L. R. 9.

FINAL JUDGMENT.—The parties have now put in accounts as directed in our ad interim judgment dated the 18th November 1919. Their accounts agree as to the amount due up to the institution of the suit. The only point on which they differ is about the rate at which interest is to be awarded from the date of the institution of the suit to the date of the decree. The plaintiff claims it at the rate stipulated in the mortgage bond, viz., Rs. 1-6 per cent. per mensem compound. The defendants urge that it should be allowed at the Court rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem. As the documents in suit are treated as simple money bonds, we have under section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code a discretion to award interest at such rate as we deem reasonable. The suit was instituted on the 2nd December 1913 and was closed for judgment on the 31st July 1917. The litigation has been somewhat prolonged and the plaintiff's false pleas have to a certain extent been responsible for the delay, and we do not think it right to award to him interest after the institution of the suit at the same rate as before it. We consider it reasonable to allow interest from the date of the institution of the suit to the date of this Court's decree at Rs. 9 per cent. per annum on the principal sum Rs. 3,000 in each of the two bonds, and the principal sum Rs. 2,861-5-6 due on account of the subsequent advances. Interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum is allowed on the aggregate amount thus adjudged from the date of our decree to the date of payment. A decree for the amount found due as above with proportionate costs of the first Court will be passed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 personally and against defendants Nos. 3 to 6 to the extent of the assets of the deceased Govinda in their hands. These costs will not include the costs of plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 1 to 11 who were examined on the question of the ownership of the tree. The suit is dismissed as against defendants Nos. 7 to 12. These defendants made no separate defence in the first Court All the witnesses were examined on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 except witness No. 9, who is said to have been examined on behalf of defendants Nos. 3 to 11 also. Defendants Nos. 7 to 11 do not appear to have incurred any costs separately in the first Court. They will not get any costs in that Court.

In this Court all the defendants except defendant No. 12 have filed a joint appeal. Defendants Nos. 7 to 11 have incurred no separate costs. The other defendants and the plaintiff have succeeded and failed in part. Under these circumstances we direct that the parties to this appeal bear their costs as incurred.

Order accordingly.

Custom—Pre-emption—Vendee becoming co-sharer after transfer, effect of—Pre-emptor's right to pre-empt, whether destroyed.

A plaintiff pre-emptor, in order to succeed, must be entitled to pre-empt not only on the date of the suit, but also up to the date of the decree. Where, therefore, a vendee was a stranger at the date of the transfer, but after the institution of a suit for pre-emption and before the date of the decree, he became a co-sharer in the village so that as against him, under the custom, the plaintiff would have no right to pre-empt, the plaintiff's suit must fail. [p. 72, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 18th June 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana and Mr. T. N. Chadha, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought to enforce a right of pre-emption based on village custom. Both the Courts below have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs pre-emptors were co-sharers in the village at the date of the sale. The vendee was a stranger on that date. After the institution of the suit certain property was gifted to the vendee by which he became a co-sharer in the village such that against him, under the custom, the plaintiffs would have no right to pre-empt. The Courts below have held that the suit for pre-emption was bound to fail by reason of this subsequent acquisition by the vendee of a share in the village, which placed him upon an equal footing with the pre-emptors in the co-parcenary body. The decisions are based upon the principle that the plaintiffs must, in order to succeed, be entitled to pre-empt not only on the date of suit but also up to the date of the decree. The plaintiffs appeal, and on their behalf attention is called to a decision of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Rohan Singh v. Bhao Lal (1). The head-note* of the report is misleading. It is set forth there that the Court held that the suit could not be dismissed, the pre-emptor having been entitled to a decree at the date of the institution of the suit. An examination of the judgment would show that though the learned Judges who constituted the Bench were inclined to that opinion, they came to no definite decision on that point. They decided the case really on a different ground. The only case of this Court which is of any use to us in the present matter is that of Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal (2). In that case the plaintiff, when he filed his suit for pre-emption, had a full right under the custom set out in the wajib-ul-arz to pre-empt the property. Pending the decision of the suit, however, the Mahal was partitioned and the plaintiff's share was put into a totally different Mahal, so that on the date of the decision of the case, he was no longer a co-sharer in the Mahal in which the property lay that he was attempting to pre-empt. The learned Chief Justice in his judgment in that case remarked at page 444 as follows :—"That seems to be a strong reason for dismissing the suit, unless it can be shown that there is some general principle of law or procedure which compels us in disregard of the custom, and which would compel us in disregard of a contract, if this were a case of contract, to look exclusively to the state of things that existed at the date of institution of the suit and to say that because on that date the plaintiff was entitled to pre-emption he is to have a decree for pre-emption, although since that date his right has ceased to exist. It appears to me impossible to maintain that there is any such general principle of law"; and on page 445 he remarked: "There is, therefore, nothing which compels us to look exclusively to the date of the institution of the suit, to disregard all that has since happened, and to confirm the decree for pre-emption, although at the date of the decree the plaintiff was not entitled to pre-emption according to the terms of the wajib-ul-arz upon which the suit was based". It is quite true that in that suit it was a case of a plaintiff pre-emptor losing his right to pre-empt by reason of his property having been removed and placed in a different Mahal, that is by his having become a stranger to the Mahal in which was the property sought to be pre-empted; whereas in the case before us the plaintiff's position has not changed so far as the Mahal is concerned, or his own property, but the position of the vendee has changed. It seems to us immaterial, however, whether it is the plaintiff's position that has been changed or that of the vendee. The result in either case is that on the date of the decree the plaintiff was no longer in a position to say to the Court, I am a person who is entitled to pre-empt as against the vendee. Our attention has been called to certain decisions of the Punjab Chief Court in which the opposite has been held by a majority of Judges. An examination of the decisions, however, shows that the Court was divided in its opinion, and we think that the opinion expressed by the late Chief Justice of the Punjab Chief Court is one which carries more weight with us. In principle we are unable to distinguish the present case from the case of Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal (2) and we think that the Courts below were correct in dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed. We make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 41 OF 1918.

April 26, 1919.

Present:—Sir Henry Drake-Brockman, KT., J. C.

RAGHUNATH—DEFENDANT No. 3—APPELLANT

NANHU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS A D DEFENDANTS Nos. 1 & 2—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Suit by transferee from judgment-debtor to establish title—Burden of proof—Bona fides.

In a suit by a transferee from a judgment-debtor to establish title under Order XXI, rule 63 of the Civil Procedure Code, the ordinary method of establishing bona fides is to prove that the consideration passed and that possession was actually transferred, and this being done, the onus would be shifted on to the contesting party to show that there was nontheless an intention to defeat creditors. [p. 73, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Saugor, in Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1918, decided on the 31st July 1918, arising out of the decision in Civil Suit No. 172 of 1917, in the Court of the 1st Munsif, Saugor, dated the 12th February 1918.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this Court was the 3rd defendant in the Court of first instance: he attached and sold a cart and grain as the property of the 1st and 2nd defendants. The plaintiffs filed an objection claiming the attached property as their own. They alleged the grain to have been raised in two fields of Mouza Semadhana of which the 1st and 2nd defendants are tenants and set up a sub-lease, Exhibit P-2, dated the 13th of April 1915. The 3rd defendant put the plaintiffs to proof of their sub-lease, which he alleged to have been executed without consideration with the object of defeating creditors. The trial Judge, holding that no consideration was paid, that the object of the sub-lease was to defeat creditors, and that the attached cart belonged to the 1st and 2nd defendants, dismissed the suit without deciding certain issues which raised questions as to the amount which the plaintiffs should recover if they succeeded in establishing their title.

RAGHUNATH v. NATHU.

In appeal the District Judge reversed this decree and remanded the case for re-trial of the undecided issues. The 3rd defendant has preferred this second appeal.

A general objection is taken to the judgment of the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the case has been viewed from a wrong standpoint. It appears from Exhibit P-1, copy of the order dismissing the plaintiffs' objection to attachment and sale of the cart and grain, that the sub lease was held not to embody a genuine transaction. The burden of proof should, therefore, have been laid upon the plaintiffs to establish the bona fides of the sub-lease with the passing of consideration and the transfer of possession thereunder: see Narayan Ganesh Ghatate v. Bhioraj (1). This point, however, is not of real importance inasmuch as the lower Appellate Court finds positively on evidence proper for consideration that consideration passed, that the crops attached were actually raised by the plaintiffs and the cart belonged to them. The ordinary method of establishing bona fides in such cases is to prove that the consideration passed and that possession was actually transferred, and this being done, the onus would be shifted to the contesting party to show that there was nontheless an intention to defeat creditors a task, which was described in Mardan Singh v. Kuranju (2) as one of great difficulty.

More serious objections, however, are raised against the judgment applied from. Some important evidence appears to have been wholly ignored, the appellant's witnesses have been disbelieved for a reason which is said to be untenable and certain facts have been assumed for which there is no basis in the evidence.

The evidence which does not appear to have been taken into account consists of Exhibit P-3, dated the 24th October 1915, and the oral testimony that the plaintiffs are nearly related to the 1st and 2nd defendants. Exhibit P-3 is a bond for seed grain executed by the 1st and 2nd defendants in favour of the Malguzar of Semadhana. It secures payment of grain said to be taken for sowing land in Semadhana, where admittedly the executants have no land other than that sub-leased for the year 1915-6 to the plaintiffs. This recital is inconsistent with the theory that the Semadhana fields had been sublet to the plaintiffs, and the trial Judge expressly rejected the explanation offered by the plaintiffs that the grain was really taken for a field named Tagra in Satyadhana, of which also the 1st and 2nd defendants are tenants. The alleged relationship between the parties, if established, would be some indication of bad faith. There is also evidence that the plaintiffs were not in a position to cultivate any land other than a small part of their own holding and this was found as a fact by the trial Judge.

The lower Appellate Court has rested its decision partly upon the consideration that the terms of the sub lease were favourable to the sub-lessee and that the plaintiffs could hire labour though they had let on batai the greater part of their own holding. The plaintiffs' Counsel in this Court is unable to point to any evidence showing the sub-lease to be an advantageous bargain for them. There is evidence that the consideration for the sub-lease was borrowed from one Ganesh, a rival creditor of the appellant, and I am not referred to anything which indicates that they were in a position to engage hired labour.

Altogether I am satisfied that evidence has been overlooked which, if considered, might lead to the conclusion that consideration was not paid and possession not transferred.

There is also force in the appellant's contention that it was wrong to discredit certain of his witnesses on the ground that they had not attempted to show how they came by the knowledge they profess to have. These men are cultivators of Semadhana or an adjoining village, and they do not appear to have been cross examined with a view to eliciting that they could not have come to know what they profess to know. Prima facie there would be nothing surprising in one cultivator knowing who cultivated or who raised crops in a particular field in the same or an adjoining village.

Looking to all the circumstances I have mentioned, I am unable to accept as binding upon me the finding that the plaintiffs gave consideration for and took possession under the sub lease. The 1st and 2nd issues framed by the trial Judge must be decided afresh from the standpoint that the plaintiffs are bound to show that the sub-lease was a bona fide transaction for consideration. Lastly the appellant's contention that the lower Appellate Court should not have remanded the case for re-trial must be upheld. The law on the subject of such remands is fully explained in Jagannath v. Maruti (3). It is not suggested that the evidence on record is insufficient to enable the lower Appellate Court to come to a decision of its own on all the issues which the trial Judge left undecided. If the District Judge was not prepared to deal with that evidence without the help of a finding by the trial Judge, he should have remanded the case merely for findings on those issues. The case will now be kept upon the file of the lower Appellate Court until the appeal to it has been completely decided. The order for re-trial is hereby set aside.

The costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause. The Court-fee on the memorandum of first appeal, which was illegally ordered to be refunded to the plaintiffs, will, if actually refunded, be recovered from them before the first appeal is re-heard,

Appeal allowed.

BABU RAM AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 159—U. P Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 144—'Co-sharer,' meaning of.

The term 'co-sharer,' in section 159 of the Agra Tenancy Act means a person holding proprietary rights in the Mahal who is jointly and severally liable for land revenue with the other proprietors in the Mahal and whose revenue is payable through the Lambardar under section 144 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. [p. 75, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous reference under section 195 of the United Provinces Tenancy Act of 1901, from the District Officer, Etah, for the orders of this Court.

Mr. Gulzarilal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sheodehal Singh, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 195 of the United Provinces Tenancy Act (Local Act No. II of 1901) made by the Collector of Etah. The plaintiff in the suit is admittedly the Lambardar of a certain Mahal. The defendants are the proprietors of certain specific plots of land appertaining to that Mahal. These plots of lands were at one time held revenue free, but revenue has now been assessed upon them. The plaintiff came into Court alleging that the revenue assessed upon these plots was payable by the defendants, that he as Lambardar had paid the said revenue and that he was entitled to recover it from the defendants by a suit brought against them under section 159 of Local Act II of 1901. The defence on the merits was that the revenue assessed upon these plots of land was not payable by the defendants at all but by the general body of co-sharers, that is to say, by the owners of fractional interests in the proprietary rights of the Mahal as a whole. Of course, if the plaintiff is unable to prove that the land revenue in respect of which this suit is brought was in fact payable by the defendants whom he is suing, his suit will fail on the merits. The Courts of the Etah district, however, have felt a difficulty upon a question of law which has nothing to do with the merits of the dispute. The Collector's order of reference seems to assume that the revenue in question was in fact payable by the defendants. We have thought it necessary to point out that this is a matter upon which the parties were at issue and in respect of which there will have to be a clear finding of fact. The difficulty which we are asked to consider, however, proceeds on the assumption that the revenue assessed on the plots of land in question when the revenue-free grant was resumed is in fact payable by the owners of those particular plots, that is to say, by the defendants to this suit. The doubt suggested is that, even should this fact be established, the Lambardar is not entitled to maintain a suit under section 159 of Local Act II of 1901, because the defendants could not be correctly described as "co-sharers" in the Mahal. The Collector has pointed out that there is the authority of an unreported decision of the Board of Revenue in support of this contention. This decision has been laid before us and we have considered it along with the Collector's order of reference and with the appropriate provisions of the Land Revenue Act. We think that it is impossible to apply to the interpretation of section 159 of the United Provinces Tenancy Act those decisions in which the question before the Court was one of the right of pre-emption. In a pre emption suit the attention of the Court is in no way directed to the question of the meaning of the word "co-sharer" as used in section 159 aforesaid. The Court has before it a certain Record of Rights, drawn up in the vernacular, in which it finds the word "hissedar" or some cognate expression. The point for determination is whether, within the meaning of that particular document, the word "hissedar" is to be interpreted as applying only to the holders of fractional shares in the proprietary rights of the Mahal as a whole, or whether it may include also persons holding separate proprietary rights in respect of particular plots of land. The correct test for the interpretation of the word "co sharer" in section 159 of the Tenancy Act is to be found in the interpretation to be put on sections 141, 142 and 144 of the cognate Statute, namely, the Land Revenue Act of these Provinces (Local Act No. III of 1901). We think it beyond doubt that, assuming the facts to be as alleged by the plaintiff in this case, namely that the liability for the land revenue of these particular plots of land lies on the defendants, then the defendants would be jointly and severally responsible for the revenue of the Mahal by reason of the provisions of section 142 of the Local Act No. III of 1901, and the payment of the revenue assessed upon these plots would rightly be made on behalf of the defendants by the Lambardar under section 144 of the same Statute.

In our opinion, therefore, the word "co-sharer" in section 159 of the United Provinces Tenancy Act (No. II of 1901) means a person holding proprietary rights in the Mahal, who is jointly and severally liable for land revenue with the other proprietors in the Mahal, and whose revenue is payable through the Lambardar under the provisions of section 144 of the Land Revenue Act (No. III of 1901). This is our answer to the question referred to us by the Collector and our order on his reference is that his Court do proceed with the case. The costs of this hearing will be costs in the cause.

Answer accordingly.

Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8—Suit for redemption and surplus profits—Jurisdicton, value for purposes of—Presumption.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage and surplus profits the value of the subject-matter for the purpose of jurisdiction is the aggregate value of the two heads of relief. [p. 78, cols. 1 & 2.]

In questions of jurisdiction the presumption is in favour of giving jurisdiction to the highest Court. [p. 78, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, in Miscellaneous Case No. 20 of 1916, dated the 17th July 1916.

Mr. V. V. Chitale, for the Applicant.

Mr. D. W. Kathale, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Additional District Judge returning to the applicant for presentation to the proper Court an application for permission to sue as a pauper. Under rule 2 of Order XXXIII of the First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, every application for permission to sue as a pauper shall contain the particulars required in regard to plaints in suits, so that if the suit which the applicant sought leave to file as a pauper was not triable by the Court of the Additional District Judge, the Additional District Judge adopted the right procedure in returning the application to be presented to the proper Court, with reference to rule 10 of Order VII.

The allegations of the applicant in his application for permission to sue as a pauper were that he and his three brothers formed a joint family possessed of immoveable and moveable property, that in the applicant's absence his three brothers had mortgaged the family property to the father of the 1st non-applicant for a principal amount of Rs. 400 and that the 1st non-applicant had got possession of the mortgaged property by a decree of Court. The date of the mortgage was 21st October 1883. The 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th non-applicants were impleaded as being in possession of some of the property. The prayers were as follows:—

That the plaintiff be put in possession of the property, as having a right to redeem the mortgage, and that a decree should be passed against the defendants for the amount found to be due to the applicant, on taking accounts from the 1st defendant. The applicant estimated the amount due to him, that is the surplus profits taken by the mortgagee, to exceed Rs. 10,000. The value of the claim for purposes of jurisdiction was given as Rs. 10,400, made up of Rs. 10,000 surplus profits to be recovered from the mortgagee and Rs. 400 the principal mortgage money.

The non-applicants-defendants pleaded that the value of the claim for purposes of jurisdiction was Rs. 400 only, and that the Court of the Additional District Judge had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

The following issue was framed:—"What is the value of the claim for purposes of (a) Court-fees and (b) jurisdiction?"

The learned Additional District Judge held that inspite of the claim for surplus profits the value of the claim for both purposes was Rs. 400 only, the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage.

The applicant applies in revision to this Court. In paragraph 3 of his application for leave to sue as a pauper the applicant stated that his brothers had no authority to mortgage the entire estate, but in the same paragraph he goes on to say that as a member of the joint family he is entitled to redeem and wishes to do so. These contentions are inconsistent, and at first I was inclined to return the application for amendment, but on reconsideration I have decided it is unnecessary to do so, for the contemplated suit is clearly a suit for redemption and surplus profits.

In Deosthan of Sonegaon v. Mukunda (1) it was held by Ismay, J. C., that in a suit for redemption the subject-matter of the suit is the charge created by the mortgage and the value of such subject-matter for the purpose of jurisdiction is the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument. The learned Judicial Commissioner in adopting this view considered and dissented from the cases reported as Rupchand Khemchand v. Balvant Narayan (2) and Amrita v. Naru (3) which are relied upon by the learned Pleader for the applicant in this Court. What was laid down by the learned Judicial Commissioner was that the value for purposes of jurisdiction was the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument, irrespective of the question whether or not any money still remained due to the mortgagee. There was no claim for surplus profits. The learned Judicial Commissioner expressed the opinion that it was reasonable to hold that the same value for the subject-matter should be adopted under the Suits Valuation Act as under the Court Fees Act. It must be assumed that the learned Judicial Commissioner had in his mind section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, according to which a valuation of a redemption suit, under paragraph IX of section 7 of the Court Fees Act, is not necessarily the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction. The learned Judicial Commissioner's ruling has been criticised but not expressly dissented from by Stanyon, A. J. C., in

(2) 11 B. 591.
(3) 13 B. 489.

Ghulaji v. Fakir Shah (4). The remarks being obiter dicta, the ruling of Deosthan of Sonegaon v. Mukunda (1) is still in force as regards suits for redemption in which excess profits are not claimed. The Additional District Judge relied upon Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (5), when the question was of the Court-fee payable on a suit for redemption in which a large surplus was asked for. It was contended in appeal that the Court-fee paid on the plaint was insufficient. The plaintiffs had paid the Court-fee as on a suit for redemption, but the lower Court held that a further Court-fee was payable ad valorem on the surplus profits claimed, and gave time for payment. Then the plaintiffs were allowed to withdraw their claim for mesne profits with liberty to sue again in respect of such profits. With reference to the argument in appeal Stanley, C. J., and Burkitt, J., said there were two answers: "the first is, that the suit is for redemption, and that the mere fact that the plaintiffs claimed in the suit payment of any sum which might be found to be due to them in the taking of the accounts, a relief to which they would be entitled under the ordinary decree for redemption, did not alter the nature of the suit so as to necessitate the payment of an additional fee. Section 7, sub-section 9, of the Court Fees Act provides that in a suit for redemption the Court-fee shall be valued at the principal amount secured by the mortgage. As a suit for redemption only a proper Court-fee has been paid." The learned Judges, however, went in to say that the Court was authorised in permitting the withdrawal by the plaintiffs of that portion of their claim which was for surlpus profits. The learned Judges thus actually had before them a suit for redemption only without mesne profits, and their remarks as to the proper Court-fee if surplus profits had also been claimed were, strictly speaking, obiter dicta. Their opinion was criticised in Kodi Venkatappa Row v. Barnala Suryanarayana (6), where there was an appeal against the order of a Subordinate Judge in appeal returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court, namely a Court of higher jurisdiction than that of a Munsif. Sundara Aiyar, J, after observing that the Allahabad case supported the view that the case was within the jurisdiction of the Munsif, says: "Section 7, caluse 9, of the Court Fees Act, according to its language applies to suits to recover immoveable property mortgaged. Recovery of possession is the only description contained in the clause. It is, therefore, doubtful whether it would be right to hold that if there is any prayer for payment of money in addition to recovery of possession, that prayer need not be separately valued and the Court-fee paid on the value put.....The language of the clause is perhaps more in favour of the respondent's contention." The question of jurisdiction was not decided, as the plaintiff reduced his claim to an amount within the jurisdiction of the Munsif. It was, however, ordered that the plaintiff should pay Court-fee on the amount of surplus profits claimed. Sadasiva Aiyar, J, confined his remarks to a redemption suit without a claim for surplus profits, though he concurred in the order passed as to Court-fee.

The view taken by the Additional District Judge is supported by the learned Pleader for the respondent, who cites Satyabadi Behara v. Harabati (7) and the cases quoted therein. That was a case when A got a decree for redemption on payment of the amount due to the mortgagee on the date of tender. Subsequently A brought a suit for damages on account of wrongful detention of the property by the mortgagee after the tender of the mortgage money. It was held that no separate suit lay as A ought to have claimed the amount in the redemption suit. There is no question of a tender here, but it appears to me from a consideration of the rulings that the only difference made by a tender is that after a valid tender the mortgagee has to account for the gross profits under section 76 (i) of the Transfer of Property Act, whereas if there is no tender he is accountable only for the net profits under section 76 (b). But in either case the surplus must be paid to the mortgagor, MUTHIAH CHETTIAR v. PERIYAN KONE.

But even if it be the law that a mortgagor must sue for surplus profits in the same suit in which he sues for redemption, it does not follow that he need not pay separate Court-fee on the claim for surplus profits, and the rulings as to res judicata are silent, as far as I have been able to judge, on the question of valuation for Court fee and jurisdiction.

There is thus no direct authority that I can find on the question before me, and the obiter dicta are contradictory. The learned Additional District Judge says that questions of this kind should in a case of doubt follow the line most beneficial to the subject. But this view is not correct. In Kothiram v. Ganpati (8) it has been laid down by Drake-Brockman, J. C., that in questions of jurisdiction the presumption is in favour of giving jurisdiction to the highest Court. In the same case the learned Judicial Commissioner explains Deosthan of Soneg1on v. Makunda (1) and points out that an arbitrary rule is required for redemption suits because the value of the suit to the plaintiff may be said to vary inversely to the amount due on the mortgage. This principal cannot apply where the mortgagor seeks surplus profits, and I can see no reason why the rule applied in the same case to foreclosure suits where interest is claimed should not be applied to redemption suits in which surplus profits are claimed, and even where the mortgagor puts the balance against him, the learned Judicial Commissioner says "there may be room for a contention that he should seek a jurisdiction corresponding to that balance;" see the obiter dicum of Stanyon, A. J. C., in Ghulaji v. Fakir Shah (4). Moreover, Order XXXIV, rule 7, of the First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code does not provide for a decree for surplus profits, which leads to the inference that there must be a separate claim for surplus profits, even if such claim must be made in the same suit.

On the whole I am of opinion that the correct view is that a claim for surplus profits must be taken into consideration in deciding the question of jurisdiction; once this is established, then the value of the subject-matter of the suit is the aggregate value of the two heads of relief, vide Konna Panikar v. Karunakara (9). The value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is, therefore, Rs. 10,400 as stated in the plaint and the District Court had, therefore, jurisdiction to entertain the application for permission to sue as pauper. For these reasons the order of the Additional District Judge returning the plaint is set aside, and he will dispose of the application on its merits according to law. Costs here will be costs in the proceedings. Pleader's fee Rs. 50.

Payment of money rents for a number of years will suggest an inference of an agreement to pay in that manner only when the circumstances are such as to suggest an agreement to pay at some definite rate. Where there is some evidence of money rents having been paid but the rates were fluctuating, it is not open to a Court to infer an agreement to pay money rents. [p. 79, col. 2.]

Proof that money payments were made according to varying rates will be proof to the contrary within the meaning of section 27 of the Madras Estates Land Act.

A landlord is entitled to revert to Varam where there is no completed agreement to pay rent at a fixed rate.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar (Advocate-General), for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar, L. A. Govindaraghava Iyer and T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—These suits were brought by a landholder to enforce accepatance of Puttahs under section 56 of the Madras Estates Land Act.

The Deputy Collector, who tried the suits, found that the tenure in the village, Chennianviduthi, was Amani tenure and that in spite of temporary lapses when cash rents were paid, the landholder was entitled to revert to the Varam system. The District Judge, on appeal, found that there was an implied contract between the parties that the rents should be paid in cash and, therefore, that the plaintiff had no subsisting right to revert to Amani rates.

He quotes in his judgment a passage from the Full Bench case of Venkatagopal v. Rangappa (1), to the effect that payment of rent in a particular form at a certain rate for a number of years is presumptive evidence of the existence of a contract to pay rent in that form or at that rate for those years. In doing so he has omitted the words 'at a certain rate'. In Kavipurapu Rama Rao v. Dirisavalli Narasayya (2) it was pointed out that for drawing an inference of this nature from past payments the circumstances must be such as to suggest an agreement to pay at some definite rate. In a case where there was some evidence of money rents having been paid but the rates were fluctuating and not uniform, both the High Court and the Judicial Committee in Parthasarathi Appa Row v. Chevandra Venkata Narasayya (3) considered that it was not open to the Courts to infer an agreement to pay money rents, though the latter tribunal observed that the prevalence of money rents in a particular locality for a number of years might form an element in the consideration of the question of usage. I am clearly of opinion that an agreement to pay rent in cash without the rate being definitely fixed would be void for uncertainty.

The Deputy Collector in this case found that the defendants' exhibits did not establish the fact that uniform amounts were paid by particular ryots for several consecutive years. He observed that Exhibit VI was not a Muchilika but a list of lands in the holding of each ryot with details of the rate of rent due for each land, but the rates were not uniform. The learned District Judge adopted the rates given in Exhibit VI as proper rates, while recognising that they varied. He did not find that a contract, express or implied, existed to pay rent at any particular rate, but he adopted the rates given in Exhibit VI, apparently because he considered that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case.

The principle upon which the case of Ayyaperumal Odayan v. Ramasami Chettiar (4) was decided was that if either party rebutted the statutory presumption raised in favour of the rate of rent paid in the previous Fasli by showing that that rate was for some reason or other not a satisfactory index of the terms on which the lands were being cultivated, then the Court, in order to arrive at a conclusion as to what was a proper Puttah under section 57 of the Act, might go back and find whether there was evidence of any express or implied contract between the parties to pay rent at any definite money rate at any time later than the period when Faisal rates were in vogue, discarding in so doing all evidence of temporary and provisional arrangements as affording no basis for a permanent settlement of the rate of rent that should prevail in the village [See the remarks of Coutts Trotter, J., at page 618 and my remarks at page 616 of (1915) M. W. N. 614 [Ayyaperumal Odayan v. Ramasami Chettiar (4)]. In Karuppa Goundan v. Narayana Chettiar (5) Phillips and Bakewell, JJ., on similar principles held that, notwithstanding the omission from the Madras Estates Land Act of any provision corresponding to that in Act VIII of 1865, for reverting to the Faisal rates, those rates could be adopted in the absence of proof of a contract to the contrary. We were informed at the hearing of these appeals that there is material on the record upon which a conclusion might be reached on this point. As we cannot decide a question of fact in second appeal, we must call for fresh findings from the District Judge upon issues Nos. 2 and 3 upon the evidence on record in the light of the above remarks. Findings should be returned within two months. Ten days will be allowed for objections.

KRISHNAN, J.—I agree with my learned brother that the District Judge's finding on the question of the rent cannot be accepted as it stands.

He found that rent was payable in money, and not in grain according to the Varam system, because for about 40 years prior the rent was so paid. He considered that an implied contract to pay in cash was made out; and moreover applying section 27 of the Estates Land Act held that, as the landlord had not proved that the Varam system prevailed in the year previous to the suit Fasli he was not entitled to tender a Varam Puttah for that Fasli. The plea that payments in money were only temporary lapses from the proper Varam system was also rejected by him. He had then to find what the proper money rent was and apparently finding a difficulty in the matter, he adopted the rates for Fasli 1304 as the proper rates on the grounds that they had been more clearly proved than the rate for other years and that the tenants admitted their willingness to accept them. The difficulty in accepting his views arises from the fact that he has dealt with the case on the basis that the payments of rent in money in previous years were at varying rates from time to time and not at fixed rates; in fact he has treated that question as immaterial.

It seems to me that the question is very material and there ought to be a definite conclusion arrived at as to it. The respondents' Vakil has urged before us that the learned Judge was wrong in assuming that the rates varied and that the evidence showed that the rates were really fixed, though the amounts paid varied from time to time, the variation being due not to the variation of the rates but to other variable factors in the calculation such as the area and the kind of paddy cultivated, &c. He invited us to consider the evidence ourselves but we could not do so in second appeal. The learned District Judge should consider this question and give us fresh findings on issues Nos. 2 and 3 as proposed by my learned brother.

I have stated that the finding on the question of fixity of rates is material, as I am unable to accept the learned Judge's present finding as to rent on the footing that the previous payments showed varying rates. For the purpose of deciding the suits the Court has to find under section 51 of the Estates Land Act the rate or amount of the rent as well as the nature of it. It is only when both these are found that we can have a proper specification of rent in the Puttah. Moreover, to consitute a complete contract relating to rent both points have to be ascertained. If this is borne in mind, it will be seen that a finding that rent is to be paid in money and not in kind is not enough by itself to make a proper complete contract. To get over this difficulty the learned Judge has taken the rates for 1304 as the proper rates. But we have not been able to find any legal ground for adopting those rates as the proper rates in preference to the rates for any other year. In fact when rates vary from time to time, there is no valid basis from which an inference as to proper rates can be made. The fact that the rates of 1305 are more clearly made out is certainly no ground for preferring them. We are thus met with the difficulty, if we take the rates as varying in different years, that though the rents have been paid in cash, we are unable to infer from it a definite and certain agreement about it. In the absence of a later complete and definite arrangement between the parties on the point the landlord must necessarily be allowed to fall back upon the original contract of Varam, as it will not have been validly replaced by anything later. As pointed out by my learned brother this Court laid down in Kavipurappa Rama Rao v. Dirisavalli Narasayya (2) that an implied contract to pay money rent in lieu of Varam could not be inferred from previous payments when they were made at varying rates. This view has been accepted by the Privy Council in Parthasarathi Appa Row v. Chevandra Venkata Narasayya (3). It is not based on anything peculiar to the old Rent Recovery Act, as the District Judge seems to think, but on general principles, and he was wrong in disregarding the ruling as he did. The application of section 27 of the Estates Land Act makes no substantial difference on the question, as proof that the money payments were made according to varying rates will be proof to the contrary within the meaning of the section, as it will show that the rate paid for the previous Fasli could not be taken as settling the question. See Ayyaperumal Odayan v. Ramasami Chettiar (4). If the tenants prove what the rent paid for the Fasli was, the burden under the section will no doubt be on the landlord to prove that there was no fixity of rates. Except to this extent of putting the burden on the landlord section 27 seems to have made no difference on the question, and the principle laid down in the case of Kavipurappa Rama Rao v. Dirisavalli Narasayya (2) remains unaffected. Recently another Bench on similar grounds adopted the Faisal rates as the proper rates—See Karuppa Goundan v. Narayana Chettiar (5).

The application of section 27 to the present case seems to fail on another ground as well; for the District Judge says in paragraph 20 of his judgment that there is no evidence as to what the rates were for the previous Fasli 1323. It is only when the rent for the previous Fasli is proved and reliance is placed on it to show the rate for the suit Fasli under section 27, that the opposite party has to prove that it is not the proper rate. It is, however, argued by the learned Vakil for the respondents that the learned Judge is not correct in saying that there is no evidence on the point. He contends that there is evidence to show that the same rates as were mentioned in Exhibit VI for Fasli 1304 continued in force in Fasli 1323 also. As we are remitting the case for a finding to the District Judge, he may consider this contention as well. If he finds what the rates were in 1323, he will then consider whether the rates have been proved to be variable so as to rebut the presumption of their being the proper rates for the suit Fasli.

The learned Vakil also argued that even if the rate in Fasli 1323 is not proved, section 27 should be construed as justifying the inference that the rate in Fasli 1304 was the proper rate in the suit Fasli in the absence of proof to the contrary. The argument is that under section 27 the rate for Fasli 1304 should be presumed to be the proper rate for Fasli 1305 and the latter again presumed to be the proper rate for Fasli 1306 and so on till we come to Fasli 1324, the suit Fasli. This construction does not seem to me to be warranted by the language of the section, which allows only a single presumption to be made, and that must be from facts proved and not presumed. The suggestion that we can have a multiplicity of presumptions and combine them together to make an inference as to what the proper rate of rent in the suit Fasli is, cannot be accepted, for that will be to make an inference not from the rates of the previous year as the section says, but from those of some remote antecedent year. The section provides for a special presumption and it must, therefore, be one falling within the language used; the scope of the section cannot be extended as suggested.

For the above reasons, I agree to the order proposed by my learned brother to call for revised findings on issues Nos. 2 and 3.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of Tanjore submitted the following

BUTA RAM v. CHARHTA RAM.

FINDINGS.—The High Court has called for findings on the evidence on record on issues Nos. 2 and 3 in the suit, viz.,

(1) Whether the tenure of the village is Amani, and if so, what are the correct Varam rates, or whether the tenure is one of fixed money rent and what are the rates, and

(2) If the village was money rented, whether plaintiff is entitled to revert to the Varam rates.

I, therefore, hold that the defendants have not proved the prevalence of any uniformity of cash rates during the 30 or 40 years during which cash rates have prevailed, such as would justify me in concluding that there is any contract to pay at any fixed rate. I must, therefore, record a finding on issue No. 2 that the defendants have not proved that the tenure is one of fixed money rent, and that the tenure must, therefore, be Amani. The rates of Amani tenure are given in Exhibit F and these should be adopted. I answer issue No. 2 accordingly.

As to issue No. 3, the rulings already considered must be followed and I find that since there is no implied or specific contract to pay fixed money rents, the plaintiff is entitled to revert to the Varam rates.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing after the return of the findings of lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The points argued before us do not raise any question of law. We cannot enter into any question of fact.

We accept the present findings of the District Judge and reversing the decrees passed by him, we restore the decrees passed by the Deputy Collector. The defendants will pay plaintiff's costs here and in the lower Appellate Court, ad valorem Pleader's fees without reference to minima.

Appeal allowed.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 5 5 OF 1919.

Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 44—Revision—Interference discretionary—Substantial justice.

It is discretionary with the High Court to exercise revisional powers and where substantial justice has been done, the High Court will not interfere. [p. 83, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 29th March 1919, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Ferozepore, dated the 21st June 1918 and directing the lower Court to restore the case and decide the same after disposing of the plaintiff's objections.

Bhagat Govind Das, for the Petitioners.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts necessary to be stated are that plaintiff and defendants were parties to a suit which was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator gave an award in favour of the defendants. Plaintiff filed objections, the hearing of which was postponed pending the decision of the Chief Court on another point connected with the arbitration proceedings. Thereafter the parties were summoned for hearing of the objections for the 30th May 1918. All but one defendant were present on that date and the proceedings were postponed to the 1st June 1918, to await the return of the summons on that defendant. On the 1st June the Court found that that defendant was pro forma and had no interest in the proceedings. The Court then recorded that the plaintiff was absent and rejecting, without consideration, the plaintiff's objections on the ground of his absence dismissed the plaintiff's suit in accordance with the award. The same day plaintiff's Counsel, who had been in the Bar room and considered that his presence in Court was unnecessary that day which had been fixed merely for the report of the process-server, applied for the restoration of the proceedings, which application was, however, rejected. From the order of rejection the plaintiff appealed to the District Court. In that Court the defendant pleaded that no appeal lay as the order of the first Court was not passed under Order IX, rules 8 and 9, but under clause 16 of the Second Schedule. The District Court was of opinion that the first Court had really been acting under Order IX though professing to act under the schedule. On the merits the District Court accepted the appeal and directed the first Court to restore the case and decide the same after disposing of the plaintiff's objections. For the petitioner it has been elaborately argued that none of the orders and rules in the Code of Civil Procedure apply to arbitration proceedings which are governed by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule to that Code, and that by clause 16 of the Schedule no appeal is competent from a decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. Reference has been made to sections 89 and 141 and Order XLIII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and Shavaksha Dinsha Davar v. Tyab Haji Ayub (1), Hajrat Akramnissa Begam v. Valiulnissa Begam (2), Dhonkal Singh v. Phakkar Singh (3), Parasurama Ayyar v. Seshier (4), Damodara Menon v. Kittappa Menon (5) and Sidhu Ram v. Gamun (6).

Pandit Sheo Narain for the respondent has combated the contentions of the appellants, has endeavoured to explain and distinguish the rulings and sections quoted against him and relies on Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (7), Lalta Prasad v. Nand Kishore (8), Dilyan Miha Bibi v. Hemanta Kumar Roy (9), Behari Lal v. Dhalan Das (10), Hari Singh v. Allah Bakhsh (11), sections 141 and 43 and Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Code.

In my opinion, however, it is unnecessary to go into and decide the legal questions raised. Substantial justice has been done by the learned District Judge. It is admitted that the plaintiff could have moved to set aside the first Court's orders by a petition for revision even if he had no right of appeal. It is discretionary with me to exercise revisional powers and in my opinion the present is not a case in which they should be exercised in favour of the petitioners. If, as it is alleged, the objections are frivolous and worthless, the petitioners will be able to prove them such. I dismiss the petition.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Mortgage, suit on—Decree absolute for sale, amendment of—Execution of decree—Question of title, whether can be inquired into in execution proceedings.

Where upon the formal rejection of an application by the legal representative of a deceased mortgagor to set aside an ex parte decree absolute for sale, the Court orders the decree to be amended by declaring that the decree affects only the estate of the deceased and should only be executed against that property in the hands of the legal representative of the deceased, such amendment, unless corrected on appeal, is binding on the parties and operates to throw upon the decree-holder the burden of proving in execution that the property sought to be sold is part of the estate of the deceased and is in the hands of his legal representatives, who are entitled to raise the question in execution. First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Agra.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad for Mr. Narain Parsad Asthana, for the Appellant.

GAJADHAR SINGH v. BASANTI LAL.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant is the holder of a decree for sale on a mortgage executed by one Musammat Rahas Kunwar. He obtained a preliminary decree for sale under the Transfer of Property Act, before the present Code of Civil Procedure came into force. Musammat Rahas Kunwar died before any order absolute for sale had been passed. The decree holder then applied to bring three minors, under the guardianship of their mother, on record as the legal representatives of Musammat Rahas Kunwar and for the preparation of a final decree for sale against the said minors as such legal representatives. No appearance was entered on behalf of the minors and an ex parte decree was passed as applied for. Subsequently, a petition was presented on behalf of the minors for the setting aside of the said decree. The difficulties which have been felt by the Courts below arise out of the manner in which this petition was dealt with. It was formally rejected, but the Court at the same time ordered the decree absolute for sale to be amended. I think we must take it that the result was that the application to have the decree set aside altogether was rejected but that the Court ordered the decree to be amended in a particular manner. Whether this was or was not a proper method of dealing with the application then before the Court does not now concern us, as the parties have submitted to the decree. The amendment ordered to be made was that the Court declared that the decree should affect only the estate of Musammat Rahas Kunwar and should only be executable against property in the hands of these minors in the capacity of legal representatives of Musammat Rahas Kunwar. The Court added, further, and I do not think it is material whether or not this addition be treated as incorporated in the decree, that if the minors would institute a regular suit for the establishment of their title within a month, execution of the decree for sale would be postponed. It appears that two suits for the establishment of title were in fact instituted on behalf of the minors, one after the other, but both were suffered to be dismissed for default. To this application for execution objection has been taken by the two survivors of the three minors originally brought upon the record. One of these, Basanti Lal, is now a major and is acting for himself and for his minor brother. In effect, the objection asks the Court to try out the question which was raised before the order absolute for sale was passed and which has not yet been tried anywhere, namely, whether Musammat Rahas Kunwar was or was not the owner of the property mortgaged by her, and whether or not Basanti Lal and his brother now hold this property as the legal representatives of the estate of Musammat Rahas Kunwar, or by an independent title. The learned Subordinate Judge held, obviously with some reluctance, that the question could not be tried now and must be treated as concluded against the judgment-debtors (objectors) by the terms of the decree. The learned District Judge on appeal has reversed this decision and has remanded the case to the Court of first instance for enquiry into the facts. The present appeal is against this order of remand.

We have been referred to various cases, of which the strongest in favour of the appellant decree-holder is Jagar Nath Singh v. Sheo Ghulam Singh (1). This decision would be authority for the proposition that when the minors were impleaded as the legal representatives of Musammat Rahas Kunwar they could not, in that proceeding, raise the question whether the property in suit, that is to say, the property mortgaged by that lady, did or did not form part of her estate. They would have submit to the sale, but with full liberty to bring a separate suit for the establishment of their independent title. The present case must be distinguished by reason of the proceedings which took place in the Court of first instance on the application of the minors for an order setting aside the ex parte decree. The result of that application was, rightly or wrongly, an amendment of the decree, and the decree as amended must now be held binding on the parties. The decree as thus amended makes the property in suit liable for sale only if it be proved that Musammat Rahas

GOPAL PRAMANIK v. KALI KANTA GHOSE.

Kunwar was the owner of it and that it is in the hands of Basanti Lal and his minor brother by inheritance from that lady. It may be that the Court which passed that decree itself failed to appreciate its legal consequences and gave expression to the opinion that the question of the title to this property was one which ought to be determined by a separate suit; but the note made by that Court to the above effect, even supposing that it was incorporated in the decree, amounts to no more than this, that execution of the decree will not be postponed unless such a suit is instituted and prosecuted on behalf of the minors. The minors formally complied with this direction by instituting a suit, but there is nothing in the direction itself which takes away their right to ask for an interpretation of the decree by the execution Court. I think in this instance the decree has rightly been interpreted by the lower Appellate Court and that, according to its terms, it operates so as to throw upon the decree-holder the burden of proving, in the execution department, that the property sought to be sold was part of the estate of Musammat Rahas Kunwar and is in the hands of the respondents as legal representatives of that lady. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 30—Occupancy tenant holding under kabuliyat—Rent, whether can be enhanced.

The fact that the kabuliyat of an occupancy tenant provides for an enhancement of the rent only in the case of a survey being made, does not preclude the landlord from applying to have the rent enhanced under section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, on his making out a proper case for enhancement. [p. 86, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Jessore, dated the 22nd of January 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Narail, dated the 4th of February 1915.

Babu Rishindranath Sankar for Babu Narendra Coomer Bose, for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, and Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for Babu Nakuleswar Mukherjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal preferred by the defendants against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 27th January 1917, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Narail. The suit was brought under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act for enhancement of the rent payable by the defendants. The land which, it is common ground, is held by the defendants as tenants of the plaintiff measures about 148 bighas and the rent formerly paid was a sum of Rs. 48-12 0 per annum. Both the lower Courts in agreement have enhanced the rent to a sum of Rs. 126 odd a year and the defendants have appealed against that decision to this Court. The first point for the decision of the case is, "what is the status of the defendants?" In the lower Courts, the case of the defendants was that they were tenure-holders and not raiyats. The kabuliyat in the present case shows that it was granted for the purpose of cultivation to a lessee who had the occupation of an agriculturist. It seems to be quite clear that there was evidence before the Court which justified the learned Judge to come to the conclusion that the status of the defendants was that of a raiyat and not a tenure-holder. If they were raiyats, there was evidence before the Court which entitled it to come to the conclusion that they were raiyats with rights of occupancy. If that is so, then the question is whether the rent is liable to be enhanced and whether under the terms of this document the rent has been fixed in perpetuity. There are no express provisions in the document precluding the landlord from applying to have the rent enhanced under the provisions of section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But it is said that the document, as it provides only for the rent being enhanced in the case of a survey being made, must be taken to have excluded the other cases of enhancement. That I do not think is right, because the defendants agreed that so long as no survey should take place they would pay without objection the rent of Rs. 48-12-0 per annum. That does not preclude the landlord from applying to have the rent enhanced in the cases provided for by section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, if and when a proper case for enhancement is made out. I see no reason in this case to disturb the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, North Malabar, in Appeal No. 185 of 1918 (Appeal Suit No. 287 of 1917, District Court), preferred against the decree of the District Munsif, Kuthumparambu, in Original Suit No. 303 of 1916.

FACTS.—Item No. 1 was first mortgaged but before the deed was registered, item No. 2 was also interpolated by mutual consent in the presence of the attesting witnesses and the document was registered within the Sub-Registry in which item No. 2 was situate.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellant.—A mortgage not properly attested and executed is invalid. Attestation is not the mere seeing the execution of a document. The document in the present case can be said to have been executed only on the interpolation also being made and there was no attestation by the witnesses after it. The document is, therefore, invalid. Muniappa Chettiar v. Vellachamy Mannadi (1) applying Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Routhan (2). If an intention to include the second item be proved to have existed at the time of the execution with respect to the first item, section 31 of the Specific Relief Act would have been of help. The addition in the present case was a mere afterthought to make the document registrable in a particular jurisdiction. The fact that the item in question in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Srimati Hari Dasi Debi (3) was fictitious cannot affect the law. Such inclusion is a fraud upon the registration law and renders the document invalid.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.—There is only an alteration prior to registration. Hence the registration is valid and there is no fraud. It was the fictitiousness that proved the want of intention in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Srimati Hari Dasi Dabi (3).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J., referred to David Yule v. Ram Khelwan Sahai (4) as favouring Mr. Menon's contention.]

Yes. See also Pahladi Lal v. Laraiti (5), Ramdei v. Chandra Bali Bibi (6). The registration is valid even as regards item No. 2.

Attestation is to the execution of the document and not to any alteration or interpolation, even assuming the latter to be a material one. A material alteration by consent of all parties does not vitiate a deed. Isac Mahomed v. Bai Fatma (7). In Ananda Mohon Saha v. Ananda Chandra Saha (8) the alteration was made even after registration.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, in reply.—David Yule v. Ram Khelwan Sahai (4) does not refer to the present question necessarily. The observation is obiter and must be regarded as not binding since Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Srimati Hari Dasi Debi (3).

Even in Pahladi Lal v. Laraiti (5) the intention is considered to be the test. See also Ram Lal v. Tamkin Bano (9) as to registration.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit on a mortgage. The first defendant, the owner of the property, executed Exhibit A to the third defendant in 1908. The 3rd defendant assigned it to plaintiff. The defence is that the mortgage is invalid for want of proper execution, proper attestation and proper registration.

The 1st item of the plaint property was the only property originally intended to be mortgaged. The deed was engrossed and signed by the 1st defendant and attested by two witnesses with this intention. Subsequently the 2nd item of the property was included. The finding is that this was done with the consent and knowledge of the mortgagor and in the presence of the attesting witnesses.

The lower Courts have expressed themselves somewhat loosely in giving findings upon this part of the case. Both the Courts are agreed that there was no fraud either against the registration laws or against any of the parties to the contract, in making this interpolation. It is also clear from what both the lower Courts say that the object of adding the 2nd item was not so much to give an additional security to the mortgagee as it was to enable the mortgagor to get the document registered near the place where he was living. The evidence makes it clear that it was to serve the convenience of both the parties to the transaction, that this item was included, because the aim was to avoid delay in registering the deed. On these facts, we feel no hesitation in holding that the deed does not offend against the rule enunciated in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Srimati Hari Dasi Debi (3) if it is otherwise valid. The object of the interpolation was not to effect a fraud upon the registration law. Whatever might have been the original intention of the parties, they deliberately included the 2nd item in the mortgage.

The contentions raised by Mr. Madhavan Nair were these:—The document was not executed by the mortgagor with reference to the 2nd item. It was not attested by the witnesses with respect to that item. Therefore, although the document might be valid so far as the execution and attestation of the first item of property are concerned, as the document could not have been validly registered in the Sub-District where it was registered if the 2nd item had not been included, the whole document is inoperative.

There is no authority directly bearing on this question. There is a decision, David Yule v. Ram Khelwan Sahai (4), which, on the face of it, supports the respondents. In that case a document was signed by the executant before the body of the document was written up. The learned Judges held that it was not open to the executant to dispute its validity. As Mr. Madhavan Nair pointed out, it was an obiter dictum, and we doubt very much whether this decision is right.

In Burgis v. Constantine (10) it was held that where a material part of the document was left blank the document should not be regarded as valid. The principle is thus summarised in 10 Halsbury, paragraph 687: "A deed must be written before it is sealed. If, therefore, a man seal and deliver a writing which is left blank in some material part, that is void for uncertainty and is not his deed and it cannot be made his deed merely by filling up the blanks after his execution of it." Therefore, we are not prepared to rest our decision upon the obiter dictum contained in David Yule v. Ram Khewan Sahai (4). But it seems to us that the present case comes within the principle of Hall v. Chandless (11). There were blanks in that case which were subsequently filled up and some of the interpolations were of a material character. In that case it was held that, where, after the execution of the deed by some of the parties, the deed was altered with the consent and privity of the promisee, the document is not vitiated. The alteration in that case was the deleting of the property which was included by mistake. Such an omission was held not to affect the validity of the deed. In Doe d Lewis v. Bingham (12) where there were material alterations by filling up the blanks left in the body of the document after it was executed, the learned Judges held that the document was enforceable. Bayley, J., said: "I am of opinion that any alteration made in the progress of the transaction (the italics are ours) still leaves the deed valid as to the parties previously executing it, provided such alteration has not affected the situation in which they stood." Abbot, C. J., Holroyd, J., and Best, J., agreed with this view. In the language of Bayley, J., it can be said of the present case that the alteration was made in the progress of the transaction, to give validity to the document which had not yet been registered; before the document was taken for registration, with the consent of all the parties this interpolation was made. Applying the principle in Doe d Lewis v. Bingham (12) we are of opinion that the interpolation does not affect the validity of the document.

In Tupper v. Foulkes (13) the defendant had authorised his son to execute the document. After its execution, he accepted it as his own. Subsequently in an action on the bond, he pleaded non est factum. Earle, C. J., held: "I am clearly of opinion that the admission of the defendant is always evidence to prove everything that he intended to admit." Williams, J., and Keating, J., agreed with the Chief Justice. Keating, J., expressed himself very strongly on the point. He said: "First, there was an admission by the defendant that he had given authority to his son to execute the deed in his name. * * * The deed being present and seen by the defendant, he deliberately adopts the act of his son. But the evidence does not stop there. It was proved that the defendant afterwards took an active part in directing the proceedings under this very deed. It was clear from his statements and his acts that he intended to acknowledge the deed as his deed. That amounts to a delivery in law, and is evidence upon non est factum."

In the present case, it is in evidence that the defendant himself inserted in the body of the deed the words which he complains to have vitiated it. He subsequently had it registered. This is, therefore, an a fortiori case.

We may also refer to the case of Adsetts v. Hives (14). No doubt there it was held that an immaterial alteration, which is intended to supply formal defects, did not vitiate the deed. We cite this case because Sir John Romilly refers with approval to Doe d. Lewis v. Bingham (12).

On the authority of the above cases we are of opinion that by the fact of himself inserting the interpolation and presenting the altered document for registration the defendant must be deemed to have executed the document not only with reference to the 1st item, but also with reference to the 2nd item.

The 2nd question is, whether it can be said that there was proper attestation in respect of the document as altered. The interpolation is found to have been made in the presence of the attesting witnesses. Reliance was placed by Mr. Madhavan Nair upon Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (2) for the proposition that unless the attesting witnesses see the execution by the party, there can be no valid attestation. The difficulty felt in Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (2) does not arise in this case. The attesting witnesses were present when the mortgagor put his signature to the document, and they were also present when the mortgagor made the interpolation. They must, therefore, be deemed to have agreed to regard their attestation as applicable not only to the first item of the property comprised in the document but also to the 2nd item as well. This is not a case where the attestors did not see the signature of the executant, but only relied on his acknowledgment. The only other authority which need be referred to is Muniappa Chettiar v. Vellachamy Mannadi (1). In that case two persons intended to execute a document. One alone executed it and then the attestors attested. Then the document was taken to the 2nd executant who signed it. It was held that the attestation would not cover the execution by the 2nd party. This conclusion follows directly from Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (2). The attestors did not see the 2nd executant sign the document and, therefore, so far as that party was concerned, there was no valid attestation.

We may briefly notice the last argument addressed by the learned Counsel for the appellant regarding registration. There are two decisions, one of the Allahabad High Court, Pahladi Lal v. Laraiti (5), and the other of the Patna High Court, Ramdei v. Chandra Bali Bibi (6), cited by Mr. Menon in support of his contention. In both the cases where property over which the mortgagor had no power of disposition was included with a view to facilitate registration in a particular Sub-District, it was held that there was no fraud upon the registration law and that Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Srimati Hari Dasi Debi (3) did not apply.

Even if we did not hold that there was valid execution and attestation, we would have felt considerable doubts on this part of the case. Where a party who has no disposing power over a property includes it for the purpose of getting the document registered within a particular jurisdiction, as at present advised, we are not satisfied that there would not be a fraud upon the registration law within the language of the Judicial Committee in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Srimati Hari Dasi Debi (3), but as we have held that there was valid execution and attestation, we need not pursue this question any further. In our opinion the decision of the Courts below is right and this second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 36 OF 1919.

January 19, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh,

WAHID-UN-NISSA BIBI—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

ZAMIN ALI SHAH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 10, applicability of—Suit against defendant as heir—Subsequent suit by defendant as creditor—Same plea in both suits—Decree in former suit under appeal—Stay of subsequent suit.

Where a defendant is sued as the heir of a deceased person and a decree is obtained against which there is an appeal, and during the pendency of the appeal the defendant sues the plaintiff in the former suit as a creditor of the deceased and raises the same plea as was raised in the former suit, the Court would be justified in staying the suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code till the decision of the appeal. Civil revision from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is an application in revision by Musammat Wahid-un-nissa Bibi, widow of Saiyid Wajid Ali Shah, WAHID-UN-NISSA BIBI v. ZAMIN ALI SHAH.

There has been a good deal of litigation about this gentleman's estate since his death. A suit was brought by two persons, Saiyid Zamin Ali and Saiyid Jamshed Ali, in which all the heirs of Wajid Ali Shah, including Musammat Wahid-un nissa Bibi, were impleaded as defendants, and in which these plaintiffs claimed possession of a one-sixth share in the estate of the deceased, basing their title upon a deed of gift executed in their favour by the mother of the deceased and purporting to convey to them the above mentioned share in the estate. Amongst other pleas taken by Musammat Wahid-un-nissa in resisting this suit was the plea that the deed of gift was invalid and inoperative. That suit resulted in favour of the plaintiffs and an appeal against the decision is pending in this Court. In the meantime Musammat Wahid-un nissa has brought another suit in which she impleads as defendants Zamin Ali and Jamshed Ali, already mentioned, together with one Musammat Sughra Begam, who is impleaded as the daughter and heiress of the donor already mentioned. This suit is for recovery of a one-sixth share in the dower-debt alleged to be due to Musammat Wahid-un-nissa Bibi, and the claim is limited to this extent because the remaining heirs of Wajid Ali Shah are exempted. In the plaint the deed of gift in favour of Zamin Ali and Jamshed Ali is referred to and is once more alleged to be invalid and inoperative. The trial of this suit had commenced and had proceeded to this extent that the plaintiff Musammat Wahid-un nissa Bibi had been examined by a Commissioner appointed by the Court, when the defendants moved the Court to stay further hearing of the suit under section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They contended that this section was applicable and that the Court could not legally proceed further with the hearing of the suit then before it until the previous litigation was brought to a conclusion by an appellate decision of this Court. The trial Court accepted this view, although it has penalised the defendants in costs on the ground that the point should have been taken by them at an earlier stage. Against the order staying the trial of the suit this application in revision has been brought.

Putting aside the objection taken on behalf of the opposite party to the effect that no application in revision is entertainable against an interlocutory order of this sort, I prefer to deal with the grounds taken in the application before us. The first ground is that the trial Court had no jurisdiction to pass an order under section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure after it had once commenced the hearing of the suit by causing the plaintiff to be examined on commission. There is obviously no force in this plea. If the Court below was right in the view which it took as to the applicability of section 10 aforesaid, the sooner it complied with the provisions of that section by staying further proceedings the better. Another plea taken is that there were parties impleaded in the former suit who are not impleaded in the present suit and that defendant No. 3 in the present suit was not a party to the former suit. I think there is no force in this plea, because if the hearing of the suit had to be postponed as between the plaintiff and the first two defendants, it had necessarily to be postponed in respect of all the parties. Nor it is an adequate plea against the order in question to say that there were issues for trial in the former suit which are not in issue in the present suit. The real question is whether the issue as to the validity of the deed of gift requires to be tried in the present suit, and whether it either can or ought to be tried while the appeal is pending in this Court against the decision in the former suit. In this connection a plea is taken on behalf of Musammat Wahid un-nissa to the effect that she is not in the present suit litigating under the same title as in the former suit, inasmuch as she is now claiming certain reliefs as a creditor of her deceased husband, whereas in the former suit she was impleaded as an heir of her deceased husband. The raising of this plea discloses what I think is the real object of the present application and the true reason why the interference of this Court has been invoked at this stage. If the appeal pending before this Court against the decision in the former suit results in a finding that Zamin Ali and Jamshed Ali hold no valid deed of gift entitling them to any share in the estate of the late Wajid Ali Shah, of course that gentleman's widow will be perfectly satisfied, but in the event of a decision to the opposite effect she obviously desires to maintain a claim to have the entire question of the validity of the deed of gift litigated over again in the present suit. What she is afraid of is that, when the hearing of this suit is resumed after the decision of this Court on the pending first appeal, she will be told that if section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure applied when the Court declined to proceed with the trial of the present suit, then section 11 of the same Code applies with regard to the effect of the decision of this Court on the question of the validity of the deed of gift. I only mention this matter because I wish to say that I feel a certain amount of difficulty regarding the point raised. The real question which requires consideration is what defences were open to Musammat Wahid-un-nissa Bibi as a defendant in the former suit. In so far as she contested the deed of gift on any such ground as fraud, or undue influence, or incapacity on the part of the executant or the like, the decision arrived at in that litigation would be binding upon her in a subsequent litigation, even though she might come forward in that subsequent suit with a different claim also based upon her marriage with the late Wajid Ali Shah. I was, however, somewhat impressed by the argument addressed to us on behalf of the applicant, to the effect that the deed of gift might be attacked by Musammat Wahid-un-nissa as a creditor of the estate of her late husband upon some grounds not open to her when she was impleaded in a suit only as one of that gentleman's heirs, as for instance on the grounds suggested by section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. I only want to say this much, that while I think we ought not to interfere with the decision of the Court below to postpone the hearing of the present suit until the position of the defendants Zamin Ali and Jamshed Ali has been settled by the decision of this Court on the pending first appeal, it should be clearly understood that any question as to the operation of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the result of the present suit, when the hearing of the same proceeds, will require to be carefully considered with reference to the facts and circumstances of the two litigations, independently of the order now under consideration by us in revision. Subject to these remarks I would dismiss this application with costs.

WALSH, J.—I agree that this application must be dismissed. I should have made precisely the same order which the learned Judge has made. It seems to me just one of those cases at which section 10 was aimed. In any case even if section 10 was not applicable an order of stay under the Court's inherent power was a reasonable order to make, and fully justified by section 151. And if the reason of this application is that suggested by my brother in his judgment, there is abundant reason for us to refuse to interfere in revision.

As it is suggested that the application was made for the purpose of raising the question of the title under which these two claims are made and the point has been strenuously argued, I would only say that, as at present advised, I have a clear view that when the widow claims to set aside the deed of gift so far as it affected her share as heir of the deceased, and when she claims to establish her right to the dower debt, she is making both the claims under the same title within the meaning of section 10. These words do not refer to the identity of the cause of action. 'Right' and 'title' are often used as synonymous terms but I think the word 'title' in this section and in section 11 is used in a technical and familiar sense. Whether it is admitted or denied as a fact, the woman's marriage is an essential and fundamental factor in her title. She cannot establish her right to either claim unless she proves, or unless it is admitted, that she was lawfully married.

BY THE COURT.—We dismiss this application with costs.

Application dismissed.

KRISHNA DAS LAW v. GOLAM NABI.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 1975, 2860 AND 2861 OF 1915.

November 19, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Walmsley.

Roja KRISHNA DAS LAW AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

(MAHAMED IN vakalutnama) GOLAM NABI MUNSHI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153—Rent, suit for—Value below Rs. 50—Principal defendant setting up title of pro forma defendant—Appeal, second, whether competent.

There is no second appeal from the decision of an Appellate Court against a decree in a rent suit below Rs. 50 in value in which the principal defendant sets up no title of his own except that of tenant under a pro forma defendant, as in such a case the Appellate Court cannot be said to have decided a question of title to land, or some interest in land, as between parties having conflicting claims thereto.[p. 93, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 18th of June 1915, reversing the decree of the Munsif, 1st Court at Jessore, dated the 5th of March 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Respondents.—I take a preliminary objection that having regard to the provisions of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the appeals are not maintainable. Although the pro forma defendants whose title the principal defendants set up were parties in the Court of first instance, they were no parties to the appeal before the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court cannot, therefore, be said to have decided a question of title to land or some interest in land, as between parties having conflicting claims thereto the principal defendants not having raised any title of their own to the land except as tenants under the pro forma defendants whose title was set up by them.

Sir B. C. Mitter (with him Babus Narendra Chandra Bose, and Nabin Chandra Pal), for the Appellants.—These appeals had been before a Division Bench of this Court when they were remanded for certain findings by the lower Appellate Court. The findings have now been returned and the appeals are now before your Lordships for hearing. It is now too late for my learned friend to raise the preliminary objection. But even if the contention of Dr. Kanjilal were to prevail, then the curious position would arise that the decision of the Court of first instance would be binding on us although that decision had been reversed on appeal.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—If the decree is set aside by the Appellate Court, it cannot stand as against any person.]

That is so. Supposing the point had been raised and the question of jurisdiction decided by this Court while making the order of remand, then the decision would operate as res judicata. Then follows the next question whether there was a decision on the question of jurisdiction. The order of remand must be taken to be a correct order as between me and my learned friend and it is not open to him now to question the correctness of the order of remand.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—Is it not possible to make an order of remand without deciding the question of limitation?]

Yes, because limitation is not a question of jurisdiction.

My learned friend is attacking the very order of remand, which I submit he cannot do.

The remand order can be questioned by way of review or revision, but not collaterally as is being done in the present case. If the question of the validity of the order of remand is not res judicata between him and me, I would have nothing to say. Then arises the question as to whether while making the order of remand the Court by implication decided the question of jurisdiction. Refers to Ramkrishna Jagannath v. Vithal Ramji (1). If, therefore, the order of remand is res judicata, the question of jurisdiction is also res judicata.

Babu Biraj Mohun Majumdar, for the Deputy Registrar.

JUDGMENT.

CHATTERJEA, J.—This appeal was remanded for certain findings by the lower Appellate Court.

The findings have now been returned and the appeal has been partly argued before us. The learned Pleader for the respondents now takes an objection to the hearing of the appeal, on the ground that no second appeal lies having regard to the provisions of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

There is no doubt that a question of title was raised in the case, but the pro forma defendants, whose title the principal defendants set up, were no parties to the appeal before the lower Appellate Court against whose decree the present second appeal was preferred. It is true that they were parties in the Court of first instance, but in that Court, the suit was decreed. The principal defendants appealed and the pro forma defendants were left out in that appeal.

In these circumstances, the decree of the lower Appellate Court cannot be said to have decided a question of title to land, or some interest in land, as between parties having conflicting claims thereto, the principal defendants not having raised any title of their own to the land except as tenants under the pro forma defendants whose title was set up by them.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed on that ground.

It is to be regretted that this objection was not raised before Woodroffe and Huda, JJ., before the case was remanded. In these circumstances the appellant ought to pay the costs of the hearing of the appeal on the first occasion, and the respondents, who did not raise the objection until now, should pay the costs of the other side for the proceedings taken in the lower Appellate Court on remand and for the present hearing. There will be separate costs for the first hearing and the present hearing.

This judgment will govern the other two appeals (Nos. 2860 and 2861 of 1915), one set of costs being allowed for all the three appeals.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 62, 97, applicability of—Vendor and purchaser—Vendee dispossessed by third party—Suit to recover purchase-money—Existing consideration—Limitation, commencement of.

A sold certain land to B in 1907 and undertook liability if B's rights as to title were infringed. B obtained possession, but in 1914 was deprived of possession in a suit brought by C it being held therein that B obtained no title by his purchase from A. B thereupon brought the present suit to recover from A the purchase-money, damages and interest and obtained a decree for the purchase-money and interest, the Courts holding that the suit was within time under Article 97 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. In appeal to the High Court it was contended that the suit was governed by Article 62 and was consequently barred by time:

Held, that Article 97 had been rightly applied, and as B's possession under the purchase was an existing consideration so long as such possession lasted, limitation commenced from the time he was dispossessed, and that as the suit was instituted within the period prescribed by that Article, it was not barred by limitation. [p. 94, col. 1.]

Where money received by the defendant is not in fact or law received to the plaintiff's use, Article 62 would not apply, nor would the fact that subsequent events had the effect of making the money received to plaintiff's use render that Article applicable. [p. 94, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, West Berar, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 91 of 1918, decided on the 27th of February 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 47 of 1916, decided by the Sub-Judge, Khamgaon, on the 28th of July 1917.

JUDGMENT.—The firm which the appellant represents sold certain fields in 1907 to the present plaintiffs-respondents. They got possession. Then one Shankarlal Multanchand sued them in Suit No. 282 of 1910, it being there decided that the plaintiffs obtained no title by their purchase from the present appellant. Plaintiffs were deprived of possession on 4th May 1914. The plaint in the present case claimed from the appellant Rs. 2,000 as the amount of purchase money, Rs. 681-8-0 as mesne profits paid to Shankarlal, Rs. 431 for damages to crops and Rs. 500 for improvements to the fields. To these sums were added Rs. 756-4-0 on account of interest and a total of Rs. 4,368-12-0 was claimed. The plaint recites that defendants had informed the plaintiffs that they owned the land and were liable if plaintiffs' rights as to title were infringed.

The first Court decreed the amount of purchase money, namely, Rs. 2,000, dismissing the rest of the claim. Both Courts held that Article 97 of the Limitation Act applies and that the suit is in time. The lower Appellate Court allowed the cross-objection as regards interest and the amount of the decree was raised to Rs. 2,480.

It is here contended that Article 62 applies to the case. I am very certain that it does not. For that Article has no application if the money when received by defendant is not in fact or law received to the plaintiffs' use. Subsequent events making the money received to plaintiffs' use will not render the Article applicable. Plaintiffs must have a right of action at the date of the receipt of money by defendants. In my opinion Article 97 has been rightly applied.

It is further contended that assuming that this Article does apply, yet as the suit is one for damages for a breach of covenant and the cause of action is based on that breach, consideration must be held to have failed at the time of the sale because that sale was void from the commencement. Reliance is placed on Pirbhu v. Musammut Wazirbi (1). In that case there was a sale-deed containing an express covenant of title. In the present case it is alleged, and the matter was put in issue, that there was an oral covenant of title, but the suit as brought seems to me to be one for a consideration which afterwards failed. Possession given under a purchase is an existing consideration as long as such possession lasts, and it seems to me that limitation would commence when a third party, under a judgment obtained, dispossessed the plaintiff, the vendee. The case is not one upon a registered contract in writing. Even when cases based on a covenant would be time-barred, a vendee has the option to sue as for a failure of consideration and calculate the time from the date he was ousted from possession of the property.

It is further contended that the rate of interest allowed, namely, 1 per cent. per mensem, is excessive and that 6 per cent. per annum should be given. Looking, however, to the trouble and expense the plaintiffs have been put to by losing the property purchased and to the loss of profits which they might reasonably have anticipated to receive from that property, I do not think the interest awarded can be deemed excessive.

For these reasons this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondents' costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Although the co-sharers may, by arrangement among themselves, take possession of definite portions of the joint property and hold them so as to enjoy their proper quota of the profits of the joint property, it is not permissible for one co-sharer so in separate possession to alienate to a third person, as his own exclusive property, the portion which he has been occupying by agreement with his co-owners. [p. 95, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jhansi.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nawal Kishore (for whom Mr. Bhagwati Shankar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of five plots of land, Nos. 567, 557, 558, 561 and 1046, measuring 9·44 acres, situated in a village called Sunair. The lands are comprised in an area known as Khata No. 3, the total extent of which is 63 acres.

The village lands are admittedly undivided and the tenure is Bhayachara.

The plaintiff sued on the strength of a sale-deed, executed in her favour on the 10th May 1915 by two persons Pajjan and Chaturi, who according to the evidence are co sharers in the Khata to the extent of $\frac{3}{4}$ths. The sale purported to be a sale of the entire plots in dispute, and the plaintiff alleges that her attempt to take possession of these specific lands was resisted by the defendant-respondent Jhalli. She pleads this fact as constituting a cause of action for her suit to recover actual and exclusive possession. Coupled with the claim for possession was a claim for Rs. 50 damages. The defence was that the lands in dispute were the Khudkasht of the defendant, who is owner by purchase of a $\frac{1}{4}$th share in the Khata: consequently it was pleaded that the plaintiff had no right to possession as against him. The first Court decreed the claim in part. The Munsif held that Nos. 1046 and 567 were the sir of the plaintiff's vendors at the time of the sale and that the defendant's occupation of these lands was that of a sub tenant. He thought the plaintiff was entitled to possession of these two plots. As to the remaining three plots his finding was that the defendant held them as Khudkasht and that plaintiff could not claim to eject him.

Both parties appealed and the District Judge remanded an issue for trial to the first Court for the purpose of ascertaining whether the plaintiff's vendors had any right to sell these specific plots. The Munsif was of opinion that they had the right to sell the two plots which were their sir, namely, Nos. 1046 and 567. The learned Judge was of a different opinion and in the result dismissed the plaintiff's claim in toto.

He pointed out that the plaintiff's vendors were co sharers to the extent of $\frac{3}{4}$ths in a Khata which is admittedly joint Zemindari property and held that without the consent of the remaining co-owner (i. e., the defendant Jhalli) they could not transfer an exclusive title to particular portions of property as yet undivided.

The vendors, the Judge remarks, did not affect to transfer their undivided share or a portion of it. What they did was to earmark certain plots and transfer them as if they were the exclusive owners of them. The judgment of the lower Court is attacked here on various grounds, but it seems to me that there is no answer to the reasoning of the learned Judge.

The plaintiff can only recover possession by proving her exclusive title to the plots in dispute. She cannot do this, for her own vendors had no such title. The property is undivided and although the co-sharers may, by arrangement among themselves, take possession of definite portions of the joint property and hold them so as to enjoy their proper quota of the profits of the joint property, it is not permissible for one co sharer so in separate possession to alienate to a third person, as his own exclusive property, the portion which he has been occupying by agreement with his co-owners. Till partition takes place no co-sharer is entitled to say that he has an exclusive right to any particular portion of the joint property and to confer an exclusive right on a third party by alienation without the consent of all the co owners. It is not pretended now that the defendant-respondent gave his consent to the sale in favour of the plaintiff.

The Judge was, in my opinion, right in holding that in the circumstances the plaintiff's claim to possession failed. This finding disposes of this appeal, which I dismiss with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 23, O. XLIII, r. 1 (u)—Remand, order of, not made under O. XLI, r. 23—Appeal, whether lies.

An order remanding a case to the first Court made otherwise than under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code is not appealable.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 24-Pergannahs, dated the 13th of October 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Alipur, dated the 16th of December 1915 and remanding the suit to his Court for fresh trial.

FACTS.—The plaintiff and defendant No. 1 each purchased a moiety of premises No. 15, Mullik Lane, by two separate kobalas. The plaintiff agreed to take the northern half, with a passage opening out to the Mullik Lane, and the defendant No. 1 agreed to take the southern half abutting on the said lane. The case of the plaintiff was that defendant No. 1 had encroached upon a piece of land appertaining to the plaintiff's portion. The defence was that the disputed land appertained to the portion of defendant No. 1. The suit was partly decreed on the basis of a local enquiry held by a Commissioner. There was an appeal and a cross-appeal and the Appellate Court remanded the suit for re trial after a fresh local inquiry. The Munsif tried the suit afresh but found that the result of the fresh local inquiry was wrong and partly decreed the suit. Against this decision the plaintiff preferred an appeal and the defendant No. 1 filed a cross-objection. The Court of Appeal appointed a Commissioner to hold a fresh local enquiry. But after the Commissioner had submitted his report with a map, the Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the enquiry held by the Commissioner was not satisfactory and another order of remand was made with the following observations:—

"The owner of the land to the west should be examined in order to fix the western boundary. Some authorised servant of the Calcutta Corporation should also be examined to point out the boundary of the Mullik Lane.....The vendor of both the contending parties should also be examined.....A fresh local enquiry should be held this time by an Engineer Commissioner."

The suit was remanded to the Court of first instance for fresh trial in the light of the remarks made by the Appellate Court.

Against this order of remand an appeal was preferred to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—A preliminary objection is taken in this case that no appeal lies. The order complained of is an order remanding the case to the first Court. Apparently the order is not made under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, and it is only against an order of remand under that rule that an appeal is allowed by the Code. I think the objection must be sustained and the appeal dismissed with costs, hearing fee one gold mohur.

The cross-objection is not pressed and is dismissed with costs. Let the record be sent down at once to the lower Appellate Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—Security to keep peace—Religious sect interfering with worship of another sect—Object of requiring security—Order, form of—High Court, interference by.

Where one sect of persons try to force their views on another sect of a religious congregation, with the result that a disturbance of the public peace is probable, an order binding down the former under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, to keep the peace will not be interfered with. Such an order should merely deter them from creating a breach of the peace and continuing to annoy the others at their worship but should not prevent them from exercising their right of worship. [p. 98, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Shahabad, dated the 27th May 1919, confirming in appeal the order of the Deputy Magistrate, 1st Class, Sassaram, dated the 13th August 1919.

Messrs. Hasan Imam and G. C. Pal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The thirteen petitioners have applied to this Court to set aside an order passed by the Deputy Magistrate of Sassaram under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, binding down the petitioners to keep the peace for one year, which order was confirmed by the District Magistrate on appeal.

It seems that among the Sikh congregation which worships in a Sangath called the Purani Sangath in Sassaram there are two parties; one, the smaller, is composed of Khalsa Sikhs called Agrahahis, and the other consists of Nanakshahis; while the former conforms more strictly to the tenets and observances of the Sikh religion, the latter has introduced into the worship much that is borrowed from the Hindu religion and is foreign to that of the Sikhs. Both parties met and worshipped together in the Sangath up till last year, each following its own observances. The Agrahahis, however, desired to purify the worship and to get rid of the Hindu element in it, and started an agitation to this end. In January last a dispute arose as to the mode of offering prasad; while the Agrahahis insisted that the bhog should be touched by Karath in the strict Sikh fashion, before it was offered, the Nanakshahis equally insisted that it was with the sacred Tulshi leaves that it should be mixed. Up to the time of the dispute, it appears offerings of bhog had been made in both ways indifferently. The dispute led to fears of a breach of the peace and first action was taken under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, against the present petitioners, who are Agrahahis, and then, when the period covered by the order under that section had expired, the likelihood of a breach of the peace still existing, proceedings were drawn up under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, against each party separately; the Nanakshahis were discharged but the Agrahahis were bound down as above mentioned.

The Courts below have found that the petitioners have full right to visit the Sangath and to offer bhog there; that the Nanakshahis and the Agrahahis had offered the bhog in their respective ways in the past, but that the Agrahahis were now trying to insist on the exclusion of all Hindu elements from the worship in the temple, while the Nanakshahis resisted the reforms. The Deputy Magistrate was of opinion that feeling had run so far that the least indiscretion by either party would lead to a breach of the peace, and action must be taken to prevent this. He decided that it was the Agrahahis, the petitioners, who were in the minority, and that it was they who were trying to interfere with the established customs of the majority, and were the reformers and aggressors seeking to impose their wishes on the others; he found, moreover, that there were several other Sangaths where the petitioners could go and worship as they pleased. He, therefore, bound them down to keep the pease.

Mr. Hasan Imam for the petitioners contends that having found that the petitioners had full and equal rights to worship in the Sangath, the Deputy Magistrate had no power to interfere with the exercise of their acknowledged rights. He argues that the fact that if the petitioners visit the Sangath and worship in their own way there will be a fight is no reason for binding them down, for it would be the other party who would be the aggressors. He relies on the case of Feroze Ali Mullic v. Enperor (1), where it was ruled that if a party has a right to take a procession along a street, and insists on that right, they cannot properly be bound down because some one proposes to interfere with that right and causes a disturbance. He also cites Bejoy Singha Neogi v. Empress (2) and an unreported judgment of this Court, Ghasi Ram v. Emperor (3) (Criminal Reference No. 217 of 1918), where the following from the case of Dindayal Mozumdar v. Emperor (4) was cited: "where the breach of peace apprehended by the Magistrate is a likely result of the enforcement of his legal right by a party in a legal way and the illegal denial of the corresponding obligation by the other party, the Magistrate should not bind down the party who has the legal right in him." It is contended that either both parties should be bound down or neither.

There is no doubt as to the correctness of the principles enunciated by Mr. Hasan Imam, but it seems to me that what the Magistrate held in the present case was that it was the petitioners who were causing the disturbance; they were greatly in the minority and were trying to force their views on the rest of the congregation, with the result that a fight was probable. If the Agrahahis had the right to worship as they liked, so had the Nanakshahis. The order binding down the petitioners to keep the peace does not prevent them from visiting the Sangath and worshipping there; it merely deters them from creating a breach of the peace and continuing to annoy the Nanakhshahis at their worship; while the petitioners have full right to worship in the temple, they have no right to create a disturbance or to annoy the other worshippers who are in a majority. The Deputy Magistrate did not bind them down because they were in the minority, but because he found that they were the aggressors and the disturbers of the peace.

(4) 34 C. 935; 11 C. W. N. 1002; 6 Cr. L. J. 230.

The present order does not put as much restraint on the petitioners as did that passed under section 144, which prevented them from going to the Sangath, yet they did not get the latter order set aside.

The mere fact that the petitioners can go to other Sangaths in Sassaram could be no reason for ordering them not to exercise their right to visit the Purani Sangath, just as in Feroze Ali Mullik v. Emperor (1) it was ruled that the fact that a procession could pass by other streets was no good reason for restraining it from exercising its right to pass along the street it chose.

There is nothing before me to show that if the petitioners quietly worship as they did before and do not interfere with the observances of the Nanakshahis, the latter will interfere with them. If they are interfered with, they have their remedy in the Courts.

I see no sufficient reason to set aside the order passed against the petitioners and, therefore, reject the application.

Application rejected.

Criminal revision of the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate Khandwa, in Criminal Case No. 75 of 1919, passed on the 23rd August 1919.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Applicant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by a Magistrate of the First Class under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the applicant to pay Rs. 50 as compensation to each of seven persons. The Police challaned the aforesaid persons along with two others for rioting: one was discharged and the remaining eight were charged with rioting, the common object of their unlawful assembly being to rescue one Tej Singh, brother of the accused Mukand Singh, from wrongful confinement. In four instances the charge was framed under section 148, Indian Penal Code, the weapons said to have been carried being respectively two guns, one sword and one spear. All eight persons were acquitted on the ground that in rescuing Tej Singh they acted in the exercise of a right of private defence of Tej Singh and did not use more than necessary violence. Compensation was ordered to be paid to seven only of the accused persons, the eighth (Ram Singh) not having been named in the first information laid by one Bhagan Nahal who took with him to the Station-house a report (Exhibit P-1) written to the applicant's dictation by Ram Lal (P. W. No. 5).

The applicant Bakaji is one of the Malguzars of Mauza Mohana. Tej Singh Bhilala (D. W. No. 1), a young man who is held to have been wrongfully confined by Bakaji, lives at Mauza Khelwa, 3 miles from Mohana, the villages being separated by a Government forest. Exhibit P-1 makes out that Tej Singh on the afternoon of the 3rd July last drank liquor at Mohana and endeavoured to escape after striking Bakaji on the head with a lathi and that the men of Mohana having pressed Tej Singh took him to Bakaji's house. Information was then given to Khelwa that the young man was sitting drunk at Mohana, with the result that at 8 or 9 P. M. the same night 50 or 60 persons came to Bakaji's house armed with lathis, guns and swords and beat Bakaji and his guest, Balwant Singh, after breaking open a door and entering Bakaji's house. Assaults on the Kotwar and one Lachhiram Kalar were also alleged along with other actual violence. The report gives no indication that Tej Singh had been forcibly detained or that the party who committed the actual violence complained of came to rescue him. The investigation was made by Sub-Inspector Sheikh Mustafa (P. W. No. 16), who was in charge of the Mandhata Station-house, 16 miles from Mohana. The order passed under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, is based on the trying Magistrate's opinion that Exhibit P-1 contained allegations which Bakaji knew to be untrue or exaggerated. It includes an order that, in default of payment of the total amount of compensation, Bakaji should undergo simple imprisonment for 30 days.

The first point pressed in revision is, that it was illegal to award imprisonment in default by the order requiring compensation to be paid. This contention is correct and is supported by authority. Sub section (2) of section 250 merely directs that compensation of which a Magistrate has ordered payment shall be recoverable as if it were a fine and provides that if the money cannot be recovered, the imprisonment to be awarded shall be simple. The language used is similar to that of section 553 (3), Criminal Procedure Code. It is only when recovery has been found to be impracticable that the defaulter may be sentenced to imprisonment. For authority upon the point it will suffice to cite Parsi Hajra v. Bandhi Dhanuk (1), Byravalu Naidu, In the matter of (2) and Crown v. Ismail (3). The question is of no practical importance here because the applicant has already paid the sum awarded in full.

(1) 28 C. 251.
(2) 26 M. 127; 2 Weir 321.

It is urged in the next place that the information given is substantially correct and that the Magistrate's decision does not include an explicit finding that the applicant's report was either vexatious or frivolous. It is pointed out that none of the accused set up a right of private defence and that though the Magistrate found Tej Singh not to have obtained any drink at Mohana, Tej Singh himself deposed that he was drinking there when his quarrel with Bakaji began. It is also pointed out that the first information given to the Police is often incomplete. On the other hand the Magistrate's order is supported for the non-applicants on the ground that the confinement of Tej Singh was concealed and the violence used greatly exaggerated.

There has been some difference of judicial opinion as to whether the words "frivolous or vexatious" used in section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, cover a deliberately false report, though the balance of authority is now clearly in favour of the affirmative view: see Emperor v. Bindesri Prasad (4), Beni Madhub Kurmi v. Kumud Kumar Biswas (5), Emperor v. Bai Asha (6), Tamni Reddi, In the matter of (7), Crown v. Ismail (3). And there seems to be no room for doubt that an accusation may be frivolous or vexatious without being wholly false. A "vexatious" charge may be partly true and the idea conveyed by the word is that the object of the person making the accusation should be primarily to harass the persons accused.

In the present case it seems unlikely that the Police would have moved in the matter, had they known that Bakaji had wrongfully confined Tej Singh and that in fact no serious violence had been used. The Magistrate's order might certainly have been more explicit, but I understand from it that Tej Singh was actually confined in Bakaji's dwelling house and not as alleged in Bakaji's own deposition. The number of the party from Khelwa was greatly exaggerated in the report, the object of which was clearly to make out that the Khelwa men were bent on murder. There is evidence to support the finding that Bakaji's door was forced in order to get at Tej Singh, who was kept confined without any clothes, the better to ensure that he should be unable to escape.

The Magistrate seems to have misread Exhibit P-1, in so far as he understood it to allege that Bakaji had himself sent word to Khelwa about Tej Singh's condition, but this inaccuracy appears to be immaterial. Bakaji would neither know nor care how information regarding Tej Singh reached Khelwa and the evidence for the defence makes it clear that the information was given by Tej Singh's companion Jagnia (D. W. No. 3).

It is also alleged for the applicant that the Magistrate was wrong in thinking that the accused could not have actually fired off their guns, inasmuch as they evidently had no intention of killing any one. This view certainly loses sight of the fact that guns are often fired in this country merely with the object of intimidation.

I think there is ample basis for the Magistrate's view that by concealing a material fact and greatly exaggerating the violence used, the applicant calculated on depriving the accused of their liberty and so subjecting them to serious annoynance and loss. The half truth told in Exhibit P 1 constituted a harder matter to fight than a wholly false story would have been. I, threfore, consider that compensation was rightly awarded.

The amount (Rs. 50) awarded to each non-applicant is said to be excessive, as the record does not show that the accused were themselves busy sowing when their liberty was interfered with. They were arrested on the 21st July and not released on bail till the 7th August. All those concerned except Tholia and Moti Singh are cultivators, the two named being mere labourers. The District Magistrate supports the grounds on which the Magistrate has fixed Rs. 50, and I see no sufficient reason to interfere so far as cultivators are concerned. I consider, however, that a less amount should suffice in the case of mere labourers and hereby reduce Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 263, 265—Evidence, rough notes of, taken at trial—Notes destroyed and copies placed on record—Irregularity—Illegality—Facts of another case introduced into case, effect of.

In a summary trial a Magistrate made rough notes of the evidence, which he subsequently copied and placed on the record and destroyed the original notes He also introduced into the case the facts of another case which he tried at the same time:

Held, that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular and illegal, that the destruction of the original notes was tantamount to destroying the original record, with the result that there was no legal evidence on the record which an Appellate Court could go into. [p. 102, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dated the 5th December 1919, refusing to make a reference to the High Court against the conviction and sentence by the Deputy Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 7th September 1919.

FACTS.—The accused were tried summarily for an offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code, by the Deputy Magistrate of Monghyr. While the evidence for the prosecution was being adduced, the Magistrate made rough notes in pencil containing a substance of what the witnesses deposed and later on filled the form as required by section 263, Criminal Procedure Code, and destroyed the pencil notes.

Mr. Bimola Chandra Sinha, for the Petitioner, argued that (i) the evidence was not recorded in accordance with the provisions of section 355, Criminal Procedure Code.

(ii) The Magistrate relied upon the evidence of Tiloki Keot (P. W. No. 3), who was not examined in this case but in another case on the same date.

(iii) The Magistrate acted illegally in destroying the original notes.

(iv) The whole trial is vitiated by irregularities and the accused have been materially prejudiced.

Mr. Manohar Lal (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown, submitted that (i) section 355 does not apply to summary trials.

(ii) The Magistrate says in his explanation that he actually examined this witness and in fact his evidence is actually found in the record.

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—But the evidence which this witness gives is not the prosecution case. He is referring to 3 Lathi blows, etc.]

That may be an exaggeration.

In any case the evidence of the other 3 witnesses is sufficient to support the finding of the Magistrate.

(iii) Under section 263 the Magistrate was not required to make any record of the evidence. It is a summary trial. He kept the notes for his memory.

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—But having made the notes he should have kept them in the record. They are a part of the record. He should not have destroyed them].

This is merely an irregularity at the utmost.

(iv) The irregularities are not fatal and have not prejudiced the accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside the conviction of and sentences on the petitioners, who were tried by the Deputy Magistrate of Monghyr and sentenced to various fines, in default, corresponding terms of rigorous imprisonment.

The procedure adopted by the Magistrate in trying the accused is unprecedented. It appears that he actually recorded the statements of the witnesses in pencil on scraps of paper and at his convenience, copied those statements and placed them on record. The trial was under Chapter XXII, Criminal Procedure Code, and it is suggested that the trial was irregular. The Magistrate has submitted an explanation, and submits that the trial being under this chapter he was not bound to keep a record. He has been supported very ably by the learned Assistant Government Advocate, but neither the explanation of the Magistrate, nor the valuable arguments of the learned Assistant Government Advocate, have convinced me that this is a procedure warranted by law. Obviously what I have got before me is not the record itself, but a copy of the record, and this is surely objectionable. This Court will insist upon the production of the original record of statements made by witnesses on which the accused were convicted. That record, I am told, has been destroyed and a copy of the same has been placed on the record of this case. I would under these circumstances positively decline to look into that evidence and would hold that there is no legal evidence on the record justifying the conviction. On that ground alone the conviction must be set aside, but I find a further extraordinary irregularity in this trial.

AMAR SINGH v. EMPEROR.

It appears that there were four witnesses examined by the prosecution to support the charge against the accused, one of them being a man named Tiloki Keot. He speaks to the assault on the complainant and speaks to three Lathi blows being inflicted on him. This is nobody's case. The prosecution never alleged that three Lathi blows were inflicted on the complainant. What they did say was, that the complainant was assaulted by the accused Jagdish, who hit the complainant with a brick and Guran beat him with one Lathi. But there was, as a matter of fact, before the Magistrate another case which he was trying under Chapter XXII at that time, and the case there was that the complainant in that case had been struck three Lathi blows. It is absolutely clear that the Magistrate introduced the facts of the other case into the present one and if, as was contended by the learned Assistant Government Advocate, Tiloki Keot was speaking to the facts of the present case, then he was a witness whose evidence ought to have been discarded altogether, inasmuch as he was not supporting the prosecution story at all. How could the learned Magistrate accept his evidence in support of the prosecution case it is impossible for me to understand.

Then it is contended by the learned Assistant Government Advocate that the evidence of the other three witnesses is sufficient to justify the conviction. The learned Magistrate refused to accept the plea of alibi advanced by the accused, on the ground that the prosecution case, supported as it was by four strong witnesses, was not rebutted by the evidence which was advanced by the accused. If one of them goes out as I have shown above and the original record is destroyed, I have no alternative but to set aside the order and I accordingly do so and I hope that the learned Magistrate will bear in mind that the law does not provide for the destruction of original records and the Appellate Court is entitled to have the original statements of witnesses and not their copies.

Rule made absolute.

AMAR SINGH AND ANOTHER—CONVICTS—APPELLANTS

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Explosive Substances Act (VI of 1908), s. 7—Criminal Procedure Code Act V of 1898), s. 230—Sanction, under s. 7, form and contents of—Conviction under different section, whether competent—Charge, alteration in.

A consent given in vague and indefinite terms to the trial of a person for any offence which he may possibly have committed under the Explosive Substances Act is not all that is necessary in order to comply with the provisions of section 7 of the Act. The proper course for the Local Government or the Governor-General in Council, as the case may be, to adopt is to state briefly the facts which constitute the offence and to give a consent to the trial of the accused person upon those facts as constituting, in the opinion of the consenting authority, an offence under one or other of the sections of the Act. It is for the Court and not for the Government to decide finally whether upon a given set of facts a particular offence has been committed, and the mere fact that the consenting authority is of opinion that the facts constitute an offence under one section of the Act, is in itself no bar to a conviction of the accused person of another offence under another section, provided of course that the facts stated in the order giving consent are the same as those upon which the conviction is based. In such a case it would probably be necessary for the Court to alter the charge, but this does not mean that fresh consent to the trial upon such altered charge would have to be given by the consenting authority. Section 230 of the Code of Criminal Procedure makes full provision for a case of this kind. [p. 105, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 22nd May 1918, convicting the appellants.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Amar Singh, has been sentenced to transportation for ten years under section 5 of Act VI of 1903 and his brother Natha Singh has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment under section 6 of the same Act. The circumstances of the case against them are as follows A burglary had occurred in the house of Labhu, Lambardar of Marula, and suspicion fell on the present appellant, Amar Singh, of Bihala as well as Jowala Singh of Jian and one or two other persons. On the 18th June 1917, Fazl Muhammad, Head Constable, having searched the houses of two suspects in Marula, came on to Bihala, which village is less than a mile distant from Marula. At Bihala he closed several buildings which were in the occupation of Amar Singh, his brother Natha Singh and his father Narain Singh. One of these buildings is described as a baithak and was pointed out as being occupied by Amar Singh appellant. It consists of an outer room and two small inner rooms. At first the houses occupied by Amar Singh and his relatives to the south-east were searched, and it would appear that the search was rather a lengthy proceeding, Nothing incriminating was discovered, but this search was hardly over when Ratan Singh constable, who had been placed on guard over the house described as a baithak, raised an outcry that a man had run away across the roof. Fazl Muhammad and others proceeded to the spot and discovered from one Mehr Singh that the man who had been on the roof and had run away was Natha Singh, the present appellant. They also discovered that he had been occupied in making a large hole in the roof of the outer room of the baithak with the apparent intention of effecting an entrance into the building. The instrument which he had used for the purpose was left on the roof. Shortly afterwards Natha Singh himself put in an appearance and endeavoured to explain his conduct by saying that he had been occupied in mending the roof. A curious incident also appears in evidence. It is said that Amar Singh made an effort through Bela Singh to approach the Head Constable and induce him to forbear from searching the baithak. Bela Singh says that he was authorized to say that illicit liquor would be found in the baithak. In any case the search of the baithak was apparently postponed till late in the afternoon, possibly in order that a representative of the Hoshiarpur Police Station might be present or possibly because the Police Officer was somewhat fatigued and the day was hot. When the search actually took place, a military trench bomb fused and loaded with ammonal was discovered concealed in one of these rooms. No explanation being forthcoming, the prosecution of Amar Singh and Natha Singh was sanctioned by Government under section 7 of the Act.

In appeal it is alleged that no proper sanction had been obtained from the Local Government for the trial of the appellants for the offences of which they have been convicted. This ground was not argued before us.

Next, it was argued that the place where the bomb was found was not in the occupation of the appellant Amar Singh. Of this fact, however, there seems to be quite sufficient evidence, for the baithak was pointed out to the Head Constable and Labhu as being in the possession and occupation of Amar Singh and the fact is directly deposed to by Likar Lambardar and Ram Singh. The only other person in whose possession it could have been was Amar Singh's brother Natha Singh, but Amar Singh is the elder man and principal person in the family whilst Natha Singh lives with his father. Moreover a lease-deed from Mangal Singh Lohar in favour of Amar Singh has been produced. It has not been found possible to absolutely deny the thumb-impression on this document. It has only been suggested that the Police may have obtained it by some deceitful means but as the learned Sessions Judge points out, Amar Singh is not a very likely subject for successful deception. The document was produced by Ram Singh from a number of documents belonging to Mangal Singh who is in Burma, and the Police seem to have spent sometime in endeavouring to find the attesting witness. The document appears to be genuine, but in any case we have no doubt that the baithak was in the occupation of Amar Singh and habitually used by him. It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that Amar Singh himself placed the bomb in his baithak. It is sufficient to prove that it was found there.

It remains for the appellant to rebut the legal inference which follows under section 5 of the Act. It has been suggested that the evidence of Natha Singh having attempted to break through the roof is unreliable. We see no reason whatever to distrust it. There is plenty of evidence to this effect and even to the effect that Natha Singh tried to explain away his conduct. A good deal of argument has been addressed to us to induce us to believe that the bomb was a plant effected by Bela Singh, who is an enemy of Amar Singh, with a view to obtaining some reward for securing the conviction of a notorious bad character and that Likar Lambardar was privy to the plot. We cannot discover any reason for supposing that Bela Singh was an enemy of Amar Singh. They had both been in Canada together and they appear to have been friends. Moreover Bela Singh's brother, Jowala Singh, was under suspicion of being concerned in the Marula burglary together with Amar Singh. There seems to be no doubt of Natha Singh's attempt to effect an entrance into the house surreptitiously, and this attempt argues that Natha Singh was well aware of the serious position in which he and his brother would be if the bomb was found and of the necessity of making a desperate effort to remove it. This knowledge is inconsistent with the idea that the bomb was a plant. Moreover if anyone had wished to plant a bomb on Amar Singh and secure its discovery, he would have been likely to give some definite information on the subject to the Police, whereas apparently the Head Constable and one or two Policemen present spent a very fatiguing day without making any discovery of value to them in the case in which they were enquiring. As, however, we agree with the conclusions arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge towards the close of his judgment, which are in complete agreement with those of the Assessors, we do not think it necessary to say any more.

As regards sentence we do not think that Amar Singh has been too severely dealt with. According to the evidence of Likar Lambardar, Amar Singh has been guilty of two murders and on one occasion has been condemned to death. He evidently has an extremely bad reputation and we do not think that the Sessions Judge's sentence is at all too severe.

Natha Singh was evidently accessory to the possession of the bomb and is guilty under section 6. His sentence has expired.

We did not consider it necessary to call upon Counsel for the Crown to reply upon the merits of the appeal before us, but Mr. Mool Chand requested permission to make a few remarks with reference to the criticisms of the learned Sessions Judge regarding the form of sanction granted by the Local Government under section 7 of the Act. The learned Public Prosecutor contends that these criticisms were unjustifiable and that the views enunciated by the Sessions Judge in the concluding portion of his judgment are erroneous. The order of the Local Government under section 7 of the Act runs as follows:—

"Whereas the Local Government of the Punjab has received information that on or about the 16th June 1917, at Bihala, in the District of Hoshiarpur, Punjab, Amar Singh son of Narain Singh, Jat of Bihala, had in his possession and control a bomb with intent to endanger life and injure property in British India, and that Natha Singh, brother of Amar Singh, abetted Amar Singh in such possession and control.

"And whereas it appears that the said Amar Singh and Natha Singh have thereby committed offences punishable under section 4 and section 6 respectively of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908.

"The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab hereby consents to and orders the trial of the said persons for the said offences."

With reference to this order the learned Sessions Judge observes: —

"Section 7 of Act VI of 1908 merely requires the consent of the Local Government before a Court can proceed to the trial of any person for an offence against the Act. All that would seem to be necessary would be a simple letter from a Secretary to Government conveying the Local Government's consent to the trial of such and such person or persons for whatever offence he or they may be found to have committed under the Act. Anything more than this would seem unnecessary to tie the hands not only of the executive authorities (which might or might not be advisable) but also of the Courts which it would hardly be the intention of Government to fetter by defining too narrowly the offences to be tried."

We cannot agree with the learned Judge that a consent given in vague and indefinite terms to the trial of a person for any offence which he may possibly have committed under the Act is all that is necessary in order to comply with the provisions of section 7. In our opinion, the proper course for the Local Government or the Governor-General in Council, as the case may be, to adopt is to state briefly the facts which constitute the offence and to give a consent to the trial of the accused person upon those facts as constituing, in the opinion of the consenting authority, an offence under one or other of the sections of the Act. It is for the Court and not for the Government to decide finally whether upon a given set of facts a particular offence has been committed, and the mere fact that the consenting authority is of opinion that the facts constitute an offence under one section of the Act, is in itself no bar to a conviction of the accused person of another offence under another section provided of course that the facts stated in the order giving consent are the same as those upon which the conviction is based. In such a case it would probably be necessary for the Court to alter the charge, but this does not mean that fresh consent to the trial upon such altered charge would have to be given by the consenting authority. In our opinion section 230 of the Code of Criminal Procedure makes a full provision for a case of this kind, providing as it does that if an offence stated in a new, altered or added charge is one for the prosecution of which previous sanction is necessary, the case shall not be proceeded with until such sanction is obtained, unless sanction has been already obtained for a prosecution on the same facts as those on which the new or altered charge was founded. The decisions reported as Girdhari Lal v. Emperor (1) and Profulla Chandra v. Emperor (2) are authorities in support of this view. We hold accordingly that the order of the Local Government giving consent to the trial of the accused persons in this case was in proper form and was not open to the objections taken to it by the learned Sessions Judge.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 197—

SUBBIAH PILLAI v. EMPEROR.

Village Magistrate, preparation of false record by, in case pending before him—Sanction for prosecution, whether necessary - Proceedings, initiation of, without sanction, effect of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 167, 218, 469, 471.

A Village Magistrate who prepares a false record in a case pending before him acts not in a private capacity but as a Judge, and if the making of that record amounts to an offence, sanction is necessary under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, before any Court can take cognizance of the offence of which he is accused in connection with it. [p. 107, col. 1.]

Palaniandy Pillai v. Arunachellum Pillai, 3 Ind. Cas. 387; 32 M. 255; 4 M. L. T. 473; 9 Cr. L. J. 89, distinguished.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of Session, Tinnevelly Division, dated the 28th April 1919, in Criminal Revision Petition No. 8 of 1919, preferred against the order of the Court of the Stationary 2nd Class Magistrate, Ambasamudram, in Revision Case No. 10 of 1918.

FACTS.—The complainant charged the accused, a Village Munsif, with having fabricated a false document, etc., punishable under sections 167, 218 and 469, Indian Penal Code, in a case pending against the former before the latter, on an adjourned hearing of which a record was prepared that the accused (present complainant) was found guilty and confined in the chavadi for one hour. The accused was discharged on the prosecution evidence alone. On revision, the Sessions Judge directed the Sub-Magistrate to commit the Munsif to the Sessions for offences under sections 167, 218 and 471, Indian Penal Code, as he was of opinion that the offence made out was one under section 471 and not section 469. The accused thereupon preferred the present petition. Seshagiri Aiyar, J., directed the case to be posted before a Bench.

Messrs. K. S. Ramabhadra Aiyar and C. Sankara Rayar, for the Petitioner.

[KRISHNAN J., asked whether section 215 of the Criminal Procedure Code would not apply.]

Section 215 has no application when the petitioner comes under section 436. It applies only to commitments actually made. See Muthiah Chetty v. Emperor (1).

(1) 30 M. 224; 16 M. L. J. 529; 5 Cr. L. J. 100.

A Village Munsif is a "Judge" and sanction under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, is necessary before he can be prosecuted. Mangapathi Naidu, In re (2), and Sankaralinga Tevan v. Avudai Ammal (3). Miller, J., held in Palaniandy Pillai v. Arunachellum Pillai (4) that no sanction was necessary as the act complained of had not been done as a Judge. The alleged criminal case regarding which the record was framed in that case had no existence; in other words, there was no initiation of any judicial proceeding at all. In the present case there is no dispute that a complaint was filed and the case came on for various hearings, etc., and the accused wanted to get a transfer. I submit that the accused was acting as a Judge. See also Kandasami Chetti v. Soli Goundan (5).

The failure to obtain sanction renders the whole proceedings ultra vires and section 537 cannot cure it. Queen-Empress v. Samavier (6).

See also Madras High Court Proceeding, dated the 2nd December 1886.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor.—The Village Munsif is not bound to prepare a record in cases before him. So when he goes out of his way and prepares a false record, he is not acting as a Judge: Palaniandy Pillai v. Arunachellum Pillai (4).

[KRISHNAN, J.,—Can it be said that the Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court and the Judges of the Small Cause Courts at Madras who are not bound to take notes of evidence are not 'Judges' when they do so?]

The point becomes material when the record made is false.

ORDER.—We feel no doubt that when the petitioner, who was at the time the acting Village Magistrate of Kuttapanjan, prepared a record relating to a case which was actually pending before him as such Village Magistrate, he did so not in a private capacity but acting as a Judge, and if the making of that record amounts to an offence, sanction is necessary under section 197, before any Court can take cognizance of the offence of which he is accused in connection with it. The case in Palaniandy Pillai v. Arunachellum Pillai (4) is distinguishable on the ground that the criminal case in respect of which the Village Magistrate there concerned was alleged to have fabricated a false record was an alleged criminal case which had no existence in fact.

Whether a public servant could make a record in an imaginary case otherwise than as such public servant, when it is one of the functions of his office to hear and dispose of cases, is a question we are not called upon to decide in this case, although we doubt whether Miller, J., was right in observing that a Judge who fabricates a record in which he figures as Judge cannot properly be said to be acting as Judge when he does so.

In the present case there was a real case pending before the Village Magistrate, and the only part about it which is alleged to be unreal and false is the judgment and calendar and Muchilika which that Magistrate prepared.

We, therefore, hold that the District Magistrate (Mr. MacIver) was wrong in deciding in his proceedings of May 6th, 1918, that no sanction was necessary.

The whole proceedings both of the Second Class Magistrate discharging the accused and of the Sessions Judge directing him to be committed for trial are vitiated ab initio and are hereby set aside. We must leave it to the complainant, if he wishes to proceed further with his complaint, to obtain the District Magistrate's sanction as a preliminary to any Court taking cognizance of these offences committed by the petitioner as a Village Magistrate.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 278 OF 1919.

November 26, 1919.

NATHURAM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPLICANTS

versus

BAREY AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—NON-APPLICANTS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute, application for, made after appeal and expiry of period for second appeal—Delay, whether fatal—Notice to opposite party, whether essential—Sanction granted by Judge who did not hear case, whether bad.

The mere fact that an application under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code to prosecute a defendant is not made immediately after the decree of the first Court, but after the decision of an appeal against that decree and on expiry of the period for filing a second appeal, is not fatal to the grant of the application, it being undesirable to take criminal proceedings in relation to a matter which is still the subject of civil litigation, and it is inexpedient to try a case when the result is likely to interfere with the due course of justice. [p. 109, col. 1.]

The issue of a notice is not essential to the validity of a sanction given under section 195 of the Code, even though if such notice is issued the opposite party may be able to show that he and the applicant are on bad terms. [p. 109, col. 2.]

Where there is a prima facie strong case for granting sanction, the fact that such sanction is granted by a Judge who did not hear the case is no ground for revoking the sanction or for holding that the sanction is bad. [p. 109, col. 2.]

Revision of the order of the District Judge, Saugor, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 22 of 1919, decided on 29th July 1919.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Applicants.

Mr. M. P. Ohitale, for Non-Applicant No. 3.

ORDER.—The present applicants instituted in the Court of the Munsif, Rehli, on the 21st September 1917, a suit against the present non-applicants to recover a sum of money due on a bond. On the 11th February following the non-applicant Kashiram filed six receipts for payments alleged to have been made under the bond. These receipts purported to be signed by the plaintiff Panchamlal who was not then in Court, and the hearing was adjourned to the 21st February to enable him to attend and either admit or deny the genuineness of the receipts. On the 21st February Panchamlal apparently failed to attend in person, but the plaintiffs' Pleader alleged three of the receipts to be forgeries while admitting the genuineness of the other three. The Munsif delivered judgment on the 29th June 1918, and in the course of it found that the three receipts impeached as forgeries were not and could not have been executed by the plaintiff Panchamlal. On the 26th July 1918 the defendants appealed unsuccessfully to the District Judge, who agreed with the Munsif that the three receipts aforesaid were not given by Panchamlal and that he did not receive the cash mentioned in them. The appeal was dismissed on the 7th September 1918.

On the 3rd December following the present applicants moved the then Munsif, Rehli, the successor-in-office of the Judge who had tried the suit, for sanction to prosecute the non-applicants for offences punishable under several sections of the Indian Penal Code including Nos. 196, 464 and 471, in connection with the three receipts which had been held to be forgeries. The Munsif, without issuing notice to the non applicants, granted the sanction applied for on the strength of the concurrent findings of his predecessor and the District Judge. The non-applicants then moved the District Judge to revoke this sanction. That officer considered that very good grounds existed for considering the receipts to be forged and to have been used by all the non-applicants with knowledge that such was their character. Nevertheless, he revoked the sanction on the ground that in view of the delay in making the application the plaintiffs were actuated entirely by feelings of private revenge and not by any sense of justice. He was of opinion that sanction should have been applied for as soon as the Munsif delivered his judgment.

The plaintiffs have now moved this Court to restore the sanction granted by the Munsif and the Standing Counsel for the Crown and the defendants have been heard in the matter.

For the plaintiffs it is urged that the delay in applying for sanction is satisfactorily accounted for by the fact that the defendants were entitled to appeal from the adverse finding of fact reached by the Munsif and might not unreasonably have been expected to prefer a second appeal also. It is also urged that the plaintiffs have no private object to serve, inasmuch as they obtained from the Civil Courts all that they desired in connection with their bond.

The application is supported by the Standing Counsel on behalf of the Crown who submitted that, in the circumstances, the delay of less than six months in applying for sanction should be deemed to have been satisfactorily accounted for. For the non-applicants it is urged that the plaintiffs were apparently not very sure of their ground, as they failed to call an expert in handwriting though they expressed a desire to do so on the 2nd April 1918, shortly before the case was closed. Other points taken are that the non-applicants might have alleged and proved that the plaintiffs were actuated by malice in the matter had notice been given to them of the application and that the Judge who granted the sanction without an enquiry of his own had no real ground for thinking that the probability of securing convictions was strong.

In my opinion the plaintiffs acted quite rightly in delaying their application for sanction, at any rate, until the first appeal was disposed of. The undesirability of taking criminal proceedings in relation to a matter which is still the subject of civil litigation was pointed out in the case of Shri Nana Maharaj, In re (1) citing several English authorities. Had the application been filed either before the defendants appealed to the District Court or while their appeal was pending, the plaintiffs would have exposed themselves to the charge of desiring to delay and possibly defeat the appeal. In Jadu Lal Sahu v. Lowis (2) the High Court revoked the sanction to prosecute for forgery which had been granted by a Subordinate Judge and upheld by the District Judge, on the two-fold ground that the persons to be prosecuted would be prejudiced in their appeal from the decision in the Civil suit and that the District Judge differing from the Subordinate Judge had considered the evidence relied upon as likely to secure conviction to be "more than sham." In Jogiah v. Emperor (3) the High Court stayed proceedings taken under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, where the trial Judge in a Civil suit found the document to be a forgery and passed an order for prosecution against the persons who had filed an appeal against the decree based upon that finding. Similarly in Anna Ayyar v. Emperor (4) the High Court stayed a criminal prosecution for forgery of a Will which the defendant in a Civil suit brought for registration of the document had launched. The principle applicable to the facts in all these cases seems to be that it is inexpedient to try a case when the result is likely to interfere with due course of justice. To apply for sanction to launch a prosecution is a necessary preliminary in certain cases to starting the prosecution itself and the two steps may, therefore, reasonably be regarded as on much the same footing in this respect. I may also refer to the remarks of Macpherson, J., in Queen v. Baijoo Lall (5) "that criminal prosecutions are frequently suggested by successful litigants merely to prevent an appeal in the Civil suit," and that Judges "should be careful not to lend themselves to such suggestions too readily." In a case like the present the Munsif or the District Judge might well have taken action himself under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and such a course is actually recommended to Subordinate Courts in this Court's Circular Memorandum No. 38, dated the 18th May 1917, and was considered proper in Hem Chandra Ray v. Atal Behari Ray (6).

There was a delay of nearly three months after the District Judge's decision was delivered, and this is sought to be accounted for by the fact that the plaintiffs apprehended the filing of a second appeal, and its length does in fact correspond exactly with the period allowed for appealing to this Court from a decision in first appeal. The plaintiffs, indeed, left out of account the fact that the defendants would be entitled to exclude from the prescribed period of limitation the time requisite for obtaining copies of the District Judge's judgment and decree. If, as I have held, delay till the 6th September 1918 was proper, we have only to consider a further delay of some 91 days and no case has been cited in which that period has been considered unduly long. In Balwant Singh v. Umed Singh (7) the delay extended to over nine months, while in Dharamdas v. Sagore Santra (8) it covered almost a year. In a case like the present where both the Civil Courts which had to consider the oral evidence were well satisfied that the receipts were forgeries, I cannot think it to be a reasonable and proper inference from the facts that the plaintiffs had any reason other than what they allege for not applying earlier for the requisite sanction.

It may be, as alleged here though no such allegation appears to have been advanced before the District Judge, that the plaintiffs and the defendants have long been on bad terms and have already agitated some disputes in the Criminal Courts. Such relations, however, would serve to explain the very forgeries which the Civil Courts have held to have been committed, and the principle laid down in Gopal v. Emperor (9) that the issue of a notice is not essential to the validity of a sanction given under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, should not be weakened by the consideration that if notice is issued the opposite party may be able to show that he and the applicant are on bad terms.

With regard to the consideration that the Judge who granted sanction is not the one who tried the suit, I agree entirely with the Courts below that this is prima facie a strong case for granting sanction. There is distinct and direct evidence that the receipts impugned are forged and that the payments alleged by the defendants were not made. That there is a reasonable probability of the defendants' conviction seems to follow from the fact that two Judges have come to the same conclusion upon the evidence already given.

Had the plaintiffs been actuated merely by malice, they would have been much more likely to apply for sanction to prosecute the defendants as soon as they obtained the trial Judge's decision in the suit than to await all possible appeals. I consider that the delay in applying has been satisfactorily accounted for and that the condemnation of the plaintiffs as person unfit to be entrusted with the right of prosecution is without any reasonable foundation in the facts. I, therefore, set aside the District Judge's order and restore that of the Munsif granting the sanction applied for.

Order set aside.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 362 OF 1919.

December 10, 1919.

Present:—Sir Grimwood Mears, KT., Chief Justice, Justice Sir P. C. Banerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Piggott.

In the matter of an application of SUNDAR LAL, THE KEEPER OF THE PRINTING PRESS AT WHICH THE BHAVISHYA NEWSPAPER WAS PRINTED, UNDER SECTION 17 OF THE INDIAN PRESS ACT.

Press Act (I of 1910), s. 4 (1)—Section, whether ultra vires of Indian Legislature—"Government established by law in British India," meaning of—Articles in newspaper, general tone of, to cause hatred—Forfeiture by Government, whether justified.

Section 4 of the Press Act is not ultra vires of the Indian Legislature. [p. 110, col. 2.]

The phrase "Government established by law in British India" means the established authority which governs the country and administers its public affairs, and includes the representatives to whom the task of Government is entrusted. [p. 111, col. 1.]

Where the general tone of articles in a newspaper shows a set purpose to cause "the ruling class in India" to be hated and despised, the Local Government would be justified in exercising the powers conferred upon it by section 4 of the Press Act, and passing an order of forfeiture. [p. 112, col. 2.]

The Hon'ble Dr. T. B. Sapsu, Messrs. N. C. Vaish, K. N. Katju and K. K. Varma, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Mr. Sundar Lal has applied to the Court to set aside an order of forfeiture passed by the Local Government on the 27th of May 1919.

The applicant was the keeper of a printing press in Allahabad at which the newspaper "Bhavishya" was printed.

In accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the Indian Press Act (I of 1910) he deposited on the 13th of February 1919 the sum of Rs. 1,500 as security.

On April 11th and 25th two articles appeared which attracted the attention of the Local Government, and they in exercise of the power conferred on them by section 4, sub-section 1, of the said Act declared the security to be forfeited to His Majesty.

Thereupon Mr. Sundar Lal filed a petition in this Court under section 17 asking that the order of forfeiture might be set aside.

The argument for the applicant fell under three heads.

At the outset he contended that the phrase "Government established by law in British India" did not include any of the persons whose conduct was censured and whose motives were impugned in the said articles.

Upon the words we are of opinion that the applicant was wrong in his contention.

On the question of "ultra vires" we consider that we are bound by the decision of His Majesty's Privy Council in the case of Annie Besant v. Advocate General of the Government of Madras (1) and we decide this point against the applicant.

The next question is whether the words of either or both of the articles offend against section 4, sub-section 1 (c).

The material portion of the section is as follows:—

"Whenever it appears to the Local Government that any printing press, in respect of which any security has been deposited as required by section 3, is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper.....containing any words which are likely or may have a tendency..... .....to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in British India .....or to excite disaffection towards the said Government.....the Local Government may.....declare the security deposited.....to be forfeited to His Majesty."

Next, he argued that section 4 was "ultra vires" and finally he addressed himself to the question as to whether either or both of the articles offended against section 4, sub-section 1 (c).

We propose to discuss the various points raised, in order selected by the Counsel for the applicant.

First, as to the phrase "Government established by Law in British India." It was suggested that the phrase meant something different from Government in the usual conventional sense, but no very positive meaning was attributed to it but it was alleged to mean the supremacy of the British Crown and connection with India as opposed to independence and sections 1, 2 and 3 of 21 & 22 Victoria, C. 106, the Queen's Proclamation of 1858 and the Delhi Clauses Act of 1912 were referred to in support of this argument.

We are of opinion that the phrase "Government established by law in British India" means the established authority which governs the country and administers its public affairs and includes the representatives to whom the task of Government is entrusted.

It is to be noted that in section 4, sub-section 1 (c), and in Explanation II, the word "Government" is used as an equivalent for the phrase "Government established by law in British India" The same point was taken in Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2) and the Court declined to accept the construction then sought to be placed.

The first article headed: "The Occurrence at Delhi" begins as follows :—

"The news of the fearful bloodshed at Delhi is arousing to day unique and peculiar feelings in the great heart of India. The blood boils, on one side, at the sight of the incompetence, cowardice and heartlessness of the Delhi authorities, and on the other, the bravery of the people of Delhi.".....

"Even the panic-striken authorities at Delhi must be feeling repentant at the thought that if they had acted with ordinary tact, foresight and sympathy, if they had the least regard for the life of the ever-downtrodden people of this country and had not killed more than 20 and wounded more than 50 innocent persons for trifling reasons.".....

"Truly when the time for destruction comes the understanding becomes perverse."

"But it would be quite wrong to suppose that our worthy rulers would have committed such a blunder without an object. If we consider the crooked ways of politics and realize that it is natural for rulers all over the world to try heart and soul to maintain their privilege and prestige, we can get a clear glimpse of the object of our present rulers."

"We have now to see what was their object. Did the authorities want to prove somehow or other, (the force of) the remark of Sir William Vincent 'that there was at all times a possibility of the Satyagraha movement turning into an armed and active revolt?' Was it their object to root out, under this very pretext, the sacred Satyagraha movement before it should begin to bear fruit? Did they want by taking the life of 10 or 50 innocent people by the brutal force of machine guns and white soldiers to create so much fear in the hearts of the Indian masses that they might never again venture to take part in any practical effort for the achievement of liberty?

"Or did they want to show that in this twentieth century, when there is everywhere in the world a loud call of freedom, self-government and self-determination, when, under the powerful influence of these principles, many Western Empires have fallen and many despotic Emperors are being mercilessly deposed and exiled, the ruling class in India wanted to tell Indians proudly and without fear that it had made up its mind to trample under foot their hopes and aspirations, &c., and to keep them for ever under their irresponsible rule? Whichever of these may have been the object of our rulers, we are exceedingly glad to see that this time they have been quite unsuccessful in their attempt."

The second article is entitled "A Difficult Problem", and again it is only necessary to give sufficient extracts fairly to indicate the complexion of the whole article.

"At the present moment there is a very difficult problem before both the rulers and ruled in this country. Even before the great war was over, our far-sighted rulers had realized that the cry of the European nations for freedom and self-determination and the terrible lessons of the great war must inevitably produce their effects upon the minds of the Indian people. They also knew that after mutilating the Turkish Empire and taking away the freedom of Turkey, it would be impossible for them to mislead the Indian Musalmans any longer to keep aloof from their brethren and remain indifferent to the interests of their mother country and devoted to an irresponsible (or uncontrolled) alien Government. More than anything else they realized the truth that it was (now) quite impossible for the arbitrariness of their, or any other, power to stand even for a moment before the united power of the Hindus and Musalmans in this country. It was because they realized all this that during the great war our rulers abused the Defence of India Act to their hearts' content in order to silence (paralyse?) the opening eyes and the expanding heart of this ancient but unfortunate country. As soon as the war was over, the terrible illusion called "the League of Nations" was created with the object of rendering impossible for ever the fulfilment of the aspirations of the backward nations like India; and ultimately Rowlatt Bills were devised with a view to crush all kinds of political efforts and national agitation in the future. There is no doubt that if the people of India had not already awakened to a remarkable degree, the League of Nations and the Rowlatt Bills combined would have brought a dishonourable end to the earthly life of this nation within a short time."

"While our rulers were engaged in improper efforts of this kind on one side, the curses of almost all the eastern lands from Japan and China to India and Egypt and several great and small western countries had begun to fall on this unholy League of Nations on the other side; and all the children of Bharat, becoming one heart and soul, made a firm resolve under the banner of Mahatma Gandhi to destroy the Rowlatt Bills by means of Satyagraha..." "The Rowlatt Act which has been passed was to come into force six months after the conclusion of peace, but relying on the labour and self-sacrifice of our countrymen, we believe that before that time comes this inhuman law will have reached its death-bed."

"Our rulers also fully understand the present situation of the country and the unconquerable nature of the Satyagraha movement. That is why they are straining every nerve to discredit (or blacken) it and give it a bad name and annihilate it. At places they have tried to blacken this sacred movement of Satyagraha with Duragraha (persistence in error) by exciting (or inflaming) peaceful crowds, showering volleys of bullets upon unarmed and innocent people and deporting popular Hindu and Muhammadan leaders suddenly and without any reason and by various other means."

Now these extracts, in our opinion, would convey to an ordinary person that the rulers of this country, in addition to incompetence, cowardice, and heartlessness, were guilty of the slaughter of innocent people in order to terrorise them into subjection, and to crush out all kinds of political movements and national aspirations, and further that they were perfidious enough to pervert and misapply "the Defence of India Act," with the like object, and to invent the Rowlatt Act for a similar purpose.

The general tone of both articles shows a set purpose to cause "the ruling class in India" to be hated and despised. The writer professes himself to be "astonished at the shamelessness of our ruling authorities". We can only say that we are astonished at the hardihood of the applicant preferring this appeal and in venturing to suggest, as he does in paragraph 4 of the petition, that the "Local Government has taken an incorrect view of the aforesaid articles and that these articles do not contain any words of the nature described in section 4, sub section 1 of the Indian Press Act." It need scarcely be said that they cannot by any argument be brought within Explanation II of section 4. It being the first duty of a Government to govern, we should have considered the Local Government strangely lacking in its duty if it had failed to step in and put a penalty on the dissemination of envenomed articles such as these.

We, therefore, reject the petition and order the applicant to pay the costs, with fees on the higher scale.

Petition rejected.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 25 OF 1916.

January 20, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Das and Mr. Justice Foster.

THE LODNA COLLIERY COMPANY, LIMITED—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

BEPIN BEHARY BOSE AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Lease, construction of—Boundaries, determination of—Map, value of—False demonstration, what is—Mine, lease of—Trespasser working seam, whether in possession of whole mine—Covenants running with land, what are—Assignee, whether bound by covenant—Assignment and underlease, distinction between—Restrictive covenant, operation of—Under-lessee, whether bound by restrictive covenant—Notice, constructive, when arises—Damages for wrongful extraction of coal, suit for—Misrepresentation as to demised area, plea of, whether can be raised in defence—Limitation applicable—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 48, 49—Damages, measure of.

Where a lease is granted on the basis of a map and the map exhibits the boundaries of the land demised, the general rule is that the map is decisive on the question of boundaries. If, however, the map contradicts the unambiguous text of the title, the map must give way to the text, although every effort must be made to reconcile any apparent discrepancy. This rule is only applicable where the map is referred to for further elucidation of the text, the text being in no way subordinate to the map, which may elucidate but which may not contradict the text. [p. 118, col. 1.]

A property may be described by various terms some of which may be sufficient to define the property with certainty, whereas the rest may add a description which is untrue. In such a case, the additional terms cannot be treated as words restricting the previous description. They are simply rejected as a false demonstration. But this rule is subject to an important qualification, namely, that every endeavour must be made to give full effect to all the terms of description It is also subject to another rule, namely, that the additional words are not rejected as importing a false description, if they can be read as words of restriction. [p. 119, col. 2.]

A trespasser wrongfully working a vein of coal from an adjoining mine acquires possession only of the coal worked and cannot be said to be in possession of the mine itself [p. 123, col. 2.]

Covenants that touch and concern the thing demised, as distinguished from those which are collateral thereto, run with the land and bind assignees. [p. 130, col. 2.]

A covenant by the lessee of a mine not to work the mine in a certain direction and to have a barrier between the mine leased to him and another mine, is a covenant which concerns the thing demised and runs with the land and is, therefore, binding on the lessee s assignees. [p. 131, col. 2.]

Where the question arises whether a transfer of an interest in a lease is an assignment of the lease or an under-lease, the test to be applied is to see whether the lessee under the head lease has parted with his whole interest or with a greater interest than he himself possessed If he has, then the instrument of transfer, by whatever name it may be called, is in reality an assignment. [p 131, col 2.]

A lease of the entire interest of a lessee, subject to a power of surrender, operates as an assignment of the lease and not as an under-lease, and the assignee is liable for the breach of covenants running with the land. [p. 132, col. 1.]

An under-lessee incurs liability on a covenant of a restrictive character of which notice, whether actual or constructive, can be imputed to him. If a person by the leave of another, who is bound by a covenant as to the use of land, enters into possession with notice of the obligation, he will be restrained from violating that covenant [p. 132, col. 2.]

Every person who acquires a lease-hold interest is bound to investigate the title of his lessor and is affected with constructive notice of any covenant contained in any document forming part of the chain of title of his lessor. [p. 132, col. 2.]

In an action by the lessor of a mine against his lessee to recover damages for wrongful extraction and carrying away of coal, the lessee cannot plead in defence misrepresentation as to the area demised. If there is misrepresentation as to the area demised, the lessee might renounce the lease or obtain an abatement of the rent. but so long as the lease stands, he is bound to respect the boundary. [p. 124, col. 1.]

A suit to recover the value of coal wrongfully cut and appropriated by the defendant from the plaintiff's mine is governed by Article 48 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and time begins to run when the plaintiff first learns in whose possession the coal removed is. [p. 134, col. 1.]

In assessing damages in such a suit the Court should see whether the defendant has acted fairly and honestly, or inadvertently, or under a mere mistake, or under a bona fide belief of title, and if he has, he should be allowed the expense both of getting and severing and of bringing to bank. If, on the other hand, the defendant has acted without any colour of title, or in a manner wholly unauthorised and unlawful, or if his conduct has been negligent or wilful, he is not entitled to an allowance for getting and severing, although he might be allowed the expenses of getting to bank. [p. 136, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Manbhum.

Messrs. Pugh, Sishir Kumar Mitter, A. N. Das and L. K. Mitter, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Manuk, S. C. Mitter, S. K. Bhattacharji, B. N. Mitter, S. N. Bose, S. M. Mullick and N. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—The plaintiff appellant Company has a permanent lease of the underground rights of Mouza Lodna, subject to a lease of 3 annas 5-gandas share of the Mouza measured at 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks in favour of the defendant, and the real dispute between the parties is whether the red line delineated on a map, which has been marked as Exhibit 18 in the case, is the boundary line between the defendant's tenancy and the remaining 12 annas 15 gandas of the Mouza in the possession of the plaintiff Company. The plaintiff Company asks for a declaration that the red line is the correct boundary between the defendant's tenancy and the remaining 12 annas 15 gandas of Mouza Lodna and claims damages for breach of covenant on the part of the defendant, and the value of the coal wrongfully extracted and carried away by the defendant.

It appears that in 1894, Messrs. Laik and Banerji secured from the Rajah of Jherriah a permanent lease of the entire underground rights in respect of Mouza Lodna. The plaintiff Company is the assignee of Messrs. Laik and Banerji, and as such claims to be in possession of the lease hold interest of Messrs. Laik and Banerji. In 1894, however, various persons, of whom Jotindra Sarkar was one, claimed to have underground rights in Mouza Lodna by virtue of a lease from the Kumars, who had certain Jagir rights over the village. Considerable litigation ensued between Messrs. Laik and Banerji on the one hand and Sarkar and others on the other, a litigation which was ultimately settled by Messrs. Laik and Banerji agreeing to give a lease of 3 annas 5 gandas of the Mouza to Golap Chander Sarkar, the nominee of Jotindra Sarkar and others. This lease was executed on 14th April 1896, and by virtue of the lease Golap Chunder Sarkar became entitled to 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks in his 3-annas 5-gandas share, the bigha area having been calculated on the basis of the revenue survey map. On 30th September 1899 Golap Chander Sarkar assigned his interest under the lease to Ram Lal Sinha, who in his turn conveyed his interest under the transaction of 30th September 1899 to the defendant. This last mentioned transaction took place on 4th February 1909.

The critical question in this case is, what is the southern boundary of the land demised to Golap Chander Sarkar in 1896, now in the defendant's possession. That question, in my judgment, can only be decided on a construction of the lease of 1896. That lease is in two parts, the patta executed by Messrs. Laik and Banerji in favour of Golap Chander Sarkar (Exhibit I) and the Kabuliat executed by Golap Chander Sarkar in favour of Messrs. Laik and Banerji (Exhibit A). The material passage in the patta on which the decision of this case must rest runs as follows:—"We execute this patta in your favour and promise that we give you a mokarari mourasi settlement of 3-annas 3-pies share" (same as 3 annas 5 gandas share) "after demarcating and fixing the same towards the northern part of Mouza Lodna. According to the revenue survey map, the total area of the 16 annas of the said Mouza Lodna is 937 bighas 6 cottahs 11 chattaks. According to that as the said 3 annas 3-pies share, covering an area of 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks of lands, which is included in the patta and which is settled with you, cannot on account of the situation be possibly described correctly by boundaries we shall get a map of the land prepared by a competent surveyor, on the basis of the boundaries given in the schedule at the foot of this deed, and we shall make over the same including the field book to you, after putting therein the signatures of all of us, and if that be not convenient, then of these parties who may conveniently do so and the said map shall be treated as a part of this patta for proving the identity of the land and we will have the land surrounded by boundary pillars, in accordance with the same, at our own cost." The schedule at the foot of the document giving details of boundaries has not been very correctly translated and printed at page 157 of the paper-book. It has, however, been translated for us by Mr. Manuk, Counsel for the respondent, a translation which has been accepted as correct by Mr. Pugh on behalf of the appellant Company. The schedule runs as follows:—

"Details of boundaries. The land in Mouza Lodna appertaining to Pergana Jharia to the east of Jharia Khas Chak Saratour and Chak Benehir, to the south of Jharia Khas, Chak Saratour and Niluri Patra, to the west of the limits of Kujama and to the north of the land of our remaining share of 12 annas 9 pies in Mouza Lodna and lying to the north of the boundary line that will be fixed by the surveyor as running south of the land settled with you, that is to say, to the north of the line that has been fixed by the arbitrators at a distance of 325 feet to the north of our No. 1 incline pit made in Lodna and in which work is being carried on. If the said line does not cover an area of 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks of land, then we will make up the said area of 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks of land by giving you land from the north west of the said incline No. 1 according to your liking, leaving a share of 325 feet therefrom. 3-annas 3-pies share in Mouza Lodna, covering an area of 190 bighas 7 cotthas 7 chattaks and lying within these boundaries."

LODNA COLLIERY CO., LTD. v. BEPIN BEHARY BOSE.

The material passage in the Kabuliat, which otherwise is identical with the patta, runs as follows:—

"I shall get a map of the land prepared by a competent surveyor on the basis of the boundaries given in the schedule at the foot of this deed, and after putting my signature thereon, I shall make over to you the said map including the field book, and the said map shall be treated as a part of this deed for proving the identity of the land, and you will have the land surrounded by boundary pillars, in accordance therewith, at your own cost."

I entertain no doubt whatever that the intention of the parties was to have a map prepared by surveyors nominated by both the parties on the basis of the boundaries set out in the schedule to the lease and to treat that map as part of the description of the lease itself for the purpose of identifying the land demised.

Before examining the rival constructions that have been put on the lease, it will be convenient to deal with the events that preceded the suit. The lease, it will be remembered, is dated the 14th April 1896. Nothing seems to have been done by the lessors regarding the demarcation of the land demised and the preparation of the map until July 1897. Meanwhile on the 5th June 1897, Messrs. Laik and Banerji assigned and transferred their interest in Mouza Lodna to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., acting on behalf of and as agent of the plaintiff Company. It was Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. who took up the question of the preparation of the map, and on the 14th July 1897 wrote a letter to Babu Golap Chander Sarkar asking him to arrange to have a surveyor from his side to meet Messrs. Laik and Banerji's surveyor on a particular day mentioned in that letter. This was clearly an invitation to Babu Golap Chander Sarkar to nominate his surveyor for the purpose of the demarcation and the preparation of the map in terms of the lease of 1896. Babu Golap Chander Sarkar's reply is not in the record, but in his evidence in this case he has fully stated what his reply was. His evidence is as follows:—

"In answer to that letter I wrote to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. that I reposed full confidence in them and need not send any surveyor and asked them to measure the land by their surveyor and I sent my son, J. N. Sarkar, at their request as my agent and representative to represent me at the locality".

The meeting for the purpose of demarcation took place a few days later at the locality, at which were present Norendra Nath Mukerji on behalf of Messrs. Laik and Banerji, Mr. Thomson on behalf of Messrs. Turner Marrison and Co., and Jotindra Nath Sarkar on behalf of Babu Golap Chander Sarkar. Norendra had brought with him a tracing from a revenue survey map of Mouza Lodna, and on this map Mr. Thomson drew a red line rather more than 325 feet from the mouth of incline No. 1 east and west so as to give Babu Golap Chandra Sarkar north of this line a compact block of 190 bighas 7 cottahs and 7 chattaks. This line was then laid on the ground by Norendra Nath Mukerji and was checked by Mr. Thomson and found by him to be correct. Boundary pillars were afterwards put along the line as laid by Norendra on the ground. There was thus a complete demarcation of the land demised, not only on the map, but on the ground itself, and the plaintiff Company asserts that that map, which is Exhibit 18 in the case, must be taken as part of the lease itself for the purpose of description and identification of the land demised to the defendant with the red line as the southern boundary thereof.

The endorsements on Exhibit 18 are of importance. The endorsement by Norendra Nath Mukerji is as follows:—"I, Norendra Nath Mukerji, have put down boundary as per above red line in Mouza Lodna." The endorsement of Jotindra Nath Sarkar is as follows:—"Boundary coloured red laid down in my presence and accepted by me as correct". Mr. Thomson himself certified the land demised to have been correctly shown in the map.

This demarcation took place on the 20th July 1897, and from that date up to 13th October 1910, that is to say, for a period over 30 years, the red line on the map and the pillar line on the ground have stood as the southern boundary of the land demised without protest from any person whatever. It occurred to nobody to suggest that the map was inaccurate in any particular or that the block shown in the map as the land demised comprised an area less than 290 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks or that the red line as represented by the line of pillars was not correctly laid on the ground. When Golap Chander Sarkar assigned his interest under his lease to Ram Lal Sinha, he did so expressly by Exhibit 18. When Ram Lal Sinha assigned his interest to the defendant, he did so impliedly by Exhibit 18. Exhibit 18 held the field from 20th July 1897 to 13th October 1910, but on 13th October 1910 Ram Lal Sinha wrote a letter to his assignor Golap Chander Sarkar complaining that the land demised contained an area of 175 bighas only and that the southern boundary, instead of being as a distance of 325 feet from incline No. 1, was at a distance of 500 feet therefrom and asking that the pillars on the south should be re-adjusted and correctly laid down. Before 13th October 1910, however, an important event had occurred. The plaintiff Company had discovered the encroachment by the defendant, and the defendant had admitted the encroachment to the plaintiff Company. The first protest from the defendant, therefore, came not only more than 13 years after the demarcation, but after his mining operations beyond the pillar line were actually discovered by the plaintiff Company.

It will be remembered that the lease executed by Messrs. Laik and Banerji in favour of Golap Chander Sarkar was the result of a compromise between Messrs. Laik and Banerji on the one hand and J. N. Sarkar and the others on the other hand, and the position taken up by the defendant is that the compromise was brought about by certain arbitrators who definitely fixed the southern boundary of the land to be demised to Golap Chander Sarkar at a distance of 325 feet from the mouth of incline No. 1, and marked the same on a map which has been produced in the case and has been marked as Exhibit B. His case is, a case that has found favour with the learned Subordinate Judge, that all that "the competent surveyor" was required to do under the lease was to relay the arbitrators' line and to show it on the ground, and that, as the red line does not correspond with the arbitrators' line, that line cannot be taken as the southern boundary of the land demised and that the plaintiff Company is not entitled to the declaration sought in this action nor to damages for breach of covenant or for the carrying away of the coal, there being no evidence to show that he has conducted his mining operations beyond the arbitrators' line. He says that the map was signed not by parties who ought to have signed it under the lease, but by certain persons connected with those parties under the mistaken belief produced by the representation of the plaintiff Company's manager and surveyor that the map had been correctly drawn on the basis of the boundaries set out in the schedule to the lease and that the red line corresponded to the line laid down by the arbitrators. He complains that the map is erroneous in essential particulars in that the portion shown as demised does not comprise the full area of land demised, in that the red line lies at a distance of more than 325 feet from the mouth of incline No. 1 and as such does not correspond with the arbitrators' line and in that the northern boundary is not correctly delineated and does not correspond with the northern boundary of the Monza according to possession of the parties. His position, therefore, is that Exhibit 18 is not binding on him at all and that the plaintiff Company's action must fail.

It is necessary to have a clear idea of the issues raised in this case and to distinguish those which are relevant from those which are irrelevant. In my view, no question of misrepresentation properly arises in this action. The only questions which we have to determine are, what is the southern boundary of the land demised to Golap Chander Sarkar and has the defendant overstepped that boundary in the course of his mining operations. If, on a construction of the lease, we are forced to the conclusion that the arbitrators' line is the southern boundary of the land demised, then the defendant is entitled to succeed, misrepresentation or no misrepresentation. If, on the other hand, we come to the conclusion that the lease was on the map, Exhibit 18, and that there is no discrepancy between Exhibit 18 and the clear description by boundaries in the lease itself, or that such discrepancy as there may be is only apparent and can be reconciled, that map with the red line as the southern boundary must prevail, misrepresentation or no misrepresentation. Nor does the question of the area shown as demised in Exhibit 18 properly arise in this action. If the red line be found to be the southern boundary of the land demised, then the rest of the plaintiff's action is purely an action for damages for breach of covenant and for unauthorised extraction and carrying away of the plaintiff Company's coal. In such an action, it is no defence to say that "I was entitled to 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks, whereas you have actually given me only 175 bighas." If indeed there was a misrepresentation regarding the area shown as demised in Exhibit 18, the defendant might perhaps have renounced the contract on the ground of misrepresentation. As he did not renounce the contract, he cannot now found a defence in an action such as this upon the discrepancy between the area shown as demised in Exhibit 18 and the area found on measurement to have been actually demised. The defendant may perhaps be entitled to an abatement of rent in an action properly framed for that purpose, but, in my judgment, a question of deficiency of area cannot be raised as a defence to an action such as this. Nor, in my view, is the question of errors in the map founded on an elaborate argument of angles and perpendiculars relevant for the purpose of this trial. The defendant can undoubtedly show that there is a discrepancy between the map and the clear description by boundaries in the lease, and that such discrepancy cannot be reconciled. If there be such discrepancy, the map must give way to the boundaries, and the defendant will be entitled to set up his southern boundary as a defence to this action. An issue as to whether the map Exhibit 18 is 'erroneous' on the ground that it contradicts the clear description by boundaries given in the lease itself is a relevant issue, and must be tried. An issue as to whether the map Exhibit 18 is "erroneous" on any other ground whatever is, in my opinion, irrelevant, and ought not to be tried.

The critical question for our determination then is, what, on the true construction of the lease, is the southern boundary of the land demised? Arbitrators' line versus the red line—that is the contest between the parties.

There can, in my opinion, be no possible room for doubt that the lease was on the map Exhibit 18. The lease itself is conclusive on this point. The parties say definitely that it is impossible to describe the property demised correctly by boundaries. They agree that a map should be prepared by a competent surveyor on the basis of the boundaries given in the schedule and that that map should be treated as part of the lease for proving the identity of the land. Such a map was actually prepared by a competent surveyor, and that map is Exhibit 18. It was objected that Golap Babu's surveyor did not assist in the preparation of the map and that the map was not signed by Messrs. Laik and Banerji and by Golap Babu, and that the field book was not made over to Golap Babu. These objections proceed from a fundamental misconception as to the scope of the suit. They would arise and, properly arise, in a suit for cancellation of the lease. But the question before us is, not whether there is a demise or not, but what is the southern boundary of the land demised. Once the defendant accepts the position that there is a demise in his favour, it is useless to urge as defence to an action for damages that the field book was not made over to him, or that the map was not signed by the parties, or that his surveyor did not assist in the preparation of the map. As a matter of fact, there is no substance in any of these objections. Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. did invite Golap Babu to send his surveyor for demarcation of the land demised. Golap Babu declined to nominate a surveyor and left the whole matter to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. In my view Mr. Thomson must be deemed to have acted on behalf of both the parties. In any view of the case, it is too late to raise that objection now. The map, it is true, was not signed by the lessors or by Golap Babu, but it was signed by their agents. It is also true that the field book was not made over to Golap Babu. But no objection to the map was raised on these grounds, and in my view, it cannot be raised now, especially as both Golap Babu and Ram Lal Singh have undoubtedly acted on that map.

Where the lease is on a map, and the map exhibits the boundaries of the land demised, the general rule is that the map is decisive on the question of boundaries. If the general rule be taken as applicable to this case, then the red line must be taken to be the southern boundary of the land demised. But the general rule is subject to an important exception and it is this. Where the map contradicts the unambiguous text of the title, it must give way to the text: Horne v. Struben (1), though every endeavour must be made to reconcil any apparent discrepancy: Brain v. Harris (2) This rule only applies where the map is referred to for further elucidation of the text, the text being in no way subordinate to the map which may elucidate, but which may not contradict the text.

Mr. Manuk strongly relies upon the rule laid down in Horne v. Struben (1). His argument is that there is in the lease itself an unambiguous definition of the southern boundary as the arbitrators' line at a distance of 325 feet from the mouth of incline No. 1 and that the lease, read in conjunction with the arbitration map, Exhibit B, defines completely and with sufficient accuracy the land demised. He points out that the red line is 372 feet from the mouth of incline No. 1 and cannot, therefore, be identical with the arbitrators' line. He argues on the authority of Horne v. Struben (1) that the red line must give way to the arbitrators' line and invites us to hold that the arbitrators' line is the southern boundary of the land demised.

On a careful consideration of the lease, I am unable to accede to this argument. The arbitrators' line, it will be noticed, is not a complete line from east to west. It is a line joining points A and B, the point A being on the eastern boundary and the point B being stated to be 325 feet from the mouth of the incline No. 1, which is marked on the map as point C. It is necessary to remember that point B is not on the western boundary of the Mouza. Mr. Manuk's argument is that all that the surveyor was required to do under the lease was to join points A and B and produce it straight to the western boundary. This argument has found favour with the learned Subordinate Judge If this argument is to be accepted as correct, it is difficult to understand why the arbitrators did not complete the line themselves and why the southern boundary is not described in the lease itself as the arbitrators' line at a distance of 325 feet from the mouth of incline No. 1.

It is even more difficult to understand why the land demised "could not possibly be described by boundaries" as the parties themselves say in the document. The northern, the eastern, the western boundaries are described with precision. The argument on behalf of the plaintiff Company is that the land could not possibly be described by boundaries, because the southern boundary was not fixed. The definite case made in the written statement is that the southern boundary was fixed as the arbitrators' line in Exhibit B. It is this case which has been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge. If this is so, the southern boundary in the document could have been described as the arbitrators' line at a distance of 325 feet from the mouth of incline No. 1 and the demise would have been on Exhibit B, and not on a future map to be prepared by a competent surveyor. The argument is that the southern boundary was laid by the arbitrators on Exhibit B. This argument, in my view, is inadmissible in view of the admitted facts, namely, that the parties undoubtedly thought that the land demised could not possibly be described by boundaries and that the demise was not on Exhibit B but on a map to be subsequently prepared by a competent surveyor.

Faced with this difficulty Mr. Manuk relied on the covenant on the part of the lessors to the effect that they would be bound to make up any deficiency of area from the north-west of incline No. 1 at a distance of 325 feet from the mouth of that incline. Mr. Manuk's argument was that until it was determined, whether there was or was not a deficiency of bigha area north of the arbitrators' line, there remained a difficulty about the southern boundary. My question to Mr. Manuk was—Was the arbitrators' line, as shown in Exhibit B, the southern boundary of the land demised according to the lease? "It was," replied Mr. Manuk, "if I got my 190 bighas north of that line; it was not if I did not get my 190 bighas north of that line."

In my view this argument contradicts not only his own argument and written statement, but also the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge. It seems to me to be clear on this document that, whether it is the red line or the arbitrators' line, that line is the southern boundary of the land demised. If there was a deficiency of the bigha area north of the line, whether it is the red line or the arbitrators' line, the lessors would be bound to make good the deficiency from another block of land, but that would be in another block of land with its own boundaries north, south, east, and west. In my view, if Mr. Manuk's argument is correct, the demise would have been on Exhibit B, and there would have been no difficulty at all in describing the boundaries of the land demised.

There is another serious objection to this argument. It will be remembered that the northern, eastern and western boundaries are described with sufficient precision and clearness. If the southern boundary were equally well defined, then a block of coal land was demised to Golap Babu without any measurement at all, and it may well be that that block comprised an area much in excess of 190 bighas 8 cottahs 7 chattaks. Mr. Manuk's answer to this argument is that it is a matter of complete irrelevancy whether he gets more than 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks, since the land demised is ascertained with certainty by description by boundaries. There is, in my opinion, much misconception as to the meaning of "false de nonstration." A property may be described by various terms some of which may be sufficient to define the property with certainty, whereas the rest may add a description which is untrue. In such a case, the additional terms cannot be treated as words restricting the previous description. They are simply rejected as a false demonstration. But this rule is subject to an important qualification, namely that every endeavour must be made to give full effect to all the terms of description. It is also subject to another rule, namely, that the additional words are not rejected as importing a false description, if they can be read as words of restriction.

Can it be suggested in this case that the description by area is a false description? The demise is a demise of 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks. The defendant's case is that it is a demise of all the coal lands within fixed boundaries. But even the defendant has to admit that the lease provided for what was to happen if the area within the fixed boundaries fell short of 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks. The lease provided as follows; "If the said line does not cover the area of 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks of land, then we will make up the said area of 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks of land by giving you land from the north-west of the said incline No. 1 according to your liking, leaving a space of 325 feet therefrom." Faced with this clause in the lease Mr. Manuk argued that he was entitled to at least 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks of coal land, but he might get more. I cannot accede to this argument at all. Either the description by area is a false description or it is not. It cannot be a true description for one purpose and a false description for another. In my judgment, the description by area is so specific, so precise, so certain that it is absurd to call it a false description.

But, in truth, there is no conflict between the two descriptions at all. It will be noticed that one contingency is provided for, namely deficiency of bigha area within the boundaries. But the other contingency, namely excess of area, is not provided for at all. On Mr. Manuk's construction of the lease there might well be an excess of area within the boundaries fixed. In my view, on a proper construction of the lease, that contingency could never arise.

It seems to me that the lessors were anxious to protect their incline No. 1 and were interested in preventing any mining operations being carried on by the lessee within 325 feet of their incline No. 1. The arbitrators indicated a line 325 feet from the mouth of incline No. 1. That line indicated the furthest limit to which the land demised might extend on the south, but not necessarily the southern boundary, where the southern boundary would lie would depend upon the area north of the arbitrators' line. If the area were found on measurement to exceed 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks to which the lessee was entitled, the southern boundary would obviously be laid north of the arbitrators' line. If the area were found deficient, the arbitrators' line would be the southern boundary, and the lessor would be bound to make good the deficiency from his land north-west of incline No. 1 at a distance of 325 feet therefrom. This seems to me to be the obvious construction of the lease. It is because the land had not been previously measured, that the laying of the southern boundary was left to a surveyor who had three data to work upon, namely, first, the northern, the western and the eastern boundaries were fixed, secondly, the lessee was entitled to 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks and, thirdly, the southern boundary could not lie anywhere south of the arbitrators' line. With these data to work upon a competent surveyor would have no difficulty in laying the southern line, which was still undetermined at the time of the lease. It is impossible to ignore the precise manner in which the southern boundary has been described in the lease. The words are these: "To the north of the land of our remaining share of 12 annas 9 pies in Mouza Lodna and lying to the north of the boundary line that will be fixed by the surveyor as running south of the land settled with you, that is to say, to the north of the line that has been fixed by the arbitrators at a distance of 325 feet of our No. 1 incline made in Lodna and in which work is being carried on." The surveyor's line is described as the bonndary line, whereas the arbitrators' line is described as the line. In this view there could be no conflict between the area and the boundaries, and it must surely be our first endeavour to reconcile every provision in the lease.

Mr. Manuk argues that the sentence "to the north of the line that has been fixed by the arbitrators," connected as it is with the sentence "to the north of the land of our remaining share of 12 annas 9 pies and lying to the north of the boundary line that will be fixed by the surveyor as running south of the land settled with you" by the words "that is to say," cannot be read as an addition to something which has already been described, but must be read as part and parcel of the description itself and is sufficient to make the description adequate and clear. I confess that I am unable to appreciate this argument, an argument founded on Mellor v. Walmsley (3). In that case there was a conveyance by two descriptions, description by boundary and description by dimensions. In the events that happened there was a clear conflict between the two descriptions, and Swinfen Eady, J., gave effect to the well-known rule that when you have in the words of description a sufficiently certain definition of what is conveyed, inaccuracy of dimensions or of plan as delineated will not vitiate or affect that which is there sufficiently described. The Court of appeal, on a construction of the conveyance, came to the conclusion that that well-known rule did not apply, because the dimensions were not an addition to something which had already been sufficiently described but were part and parcel of the description itself. Vaughan Williams, L. J., in the course of his judgment said as follows :— "The words are not an inaccurate statement of a quality of that which had already been certainly described or defined, but are part and parcel of that description of definition. The dimensions in this case, to use the words appearing on page 247 of Sheppard's Touchstone, are an essential part of the description and not a cumulative description in a case in which there is in the first place a sufficient certainty and demonstration."

There is, in my view, no room for the application either of the general rule or of the exception, so far as this argument is concerned. I do not read the passage as containing two descriptions in conflict with each other. There is one description of the southern boundary, and one only, and it is a matter of pure construction what that description means. In my view, it is impossible to misunderstand the description of the land demised. It lies north of the boundary line that will be fixed by the surveyor, and it must lie to the north of the line that has been fixed by the arbitrators. One is a future line which would be the boundary line. The other is an existing line indicating the furthest limit to which the land demised might extend on the south. If Mr. Manuk's contentions were correct, there was no difficulty in describing the land demised as "land to the north of our remaining share of 12 annas 9 pies in Mouza Lodna and lying to the north of the boundary line that has been fixed by the arbitrators at a distance of 325 feet to the north of our incline No. 1". On a careful consideration of the whole document, I am of opinion that the southern boundary was not fixed at the time of the lease, and that the parties left the matter of the southern boundary to the surveyor. In my view, there is no conflict between the map and the text of the lease, and the map Exhibit 18 must accordingly be decisive on the question of boundaries.

Mr. Manuk's next argument is that the map is inaccurate and must be rejected. Now, what are the grounds put forward in the written statement for inviting the Court to hold that the map is inaccurate ? They are (1) the land demarcated as demised does not comprise 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks, (2) the southern boundary does not correspond with the arbitrators' line, and (3) the northern boundary is not correctly delineated and "does not tally with the position of the Mouza as was admittedly adopted and possessed and owned by the parties" The meaning of the third objection is that there is a line of pillars to the north of the Mouza which was treated by the parties as the northern boundary of the Mouza, and as the northern boundary as shown in Exhibit 18 does not correspond with the line of pillars, the map must be held to be inaccurate in an essential particular. The answer to this argument is that there is no mention of the line of pillars in the lease itself. To accede to the argument of Mr. Manuk would be to take upon ourselves the responsibility of making a new lease for the parties.

The question is, is there a discrepancy between the description of the northern boundary in the map Exhibit 18 and that contained in the lease ? The northern boundary is described in the lease as Jharia Khas, Chak Saratour and Niluri Patra. It is not suggested that in the map itself the northern boundary is not Jharia Khas, Chak Saratour and Niluri Patra. The suggestion is that the surveyor should have proceeded by the line of pillars on the north and not by the revenue survey map. The question, in my opinion, is one of pure construction, and, as, in my view, there is no conflict between the map and the written text no challenge can be thrown on the northern boundary as depicted in Exhibit 18.

So far as the second ground of complaint is concerned, I have dealt exhaustively with the same. In my view there was no obligation on the surveyor to lay the southern boundary exactly 325 feet to the north of incline No. 1 and as identical with the arbitrators' line.

I now come to the question of area. In my view, it is too late for the defendant to raise the question of area. The lease amply safeguarded the interest of the lessee;

It contemplated a survey by surveyors appointed by both the parties. Between two business firms it is not to be expected that there should be periodical surveys, whenever one party or the other chooses to raise some objection to the survey. It was exactly to prevent future disputes of this kind that the parties agreed to have the survey, once for all, by a surveyor or surveyors appointed by both the parties. Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., in whom the interest of the lessors had then vested, invited the lessee to nominate his surveyor. The lessee declined, saying that he had ample confidence in Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., but promised to, and did in fact, send his son to represent him at the survey. The son was actually present at the survey and accepted the measurement. That took place on 20th July 1897. On 13th October 1910, the question of deficiency of area was raised for the first time in a letter from Ram Lal Singh to Golap Chander Sarkar. In my view, by refusing to nominate a surveyor on his side, Golap Babu and consequently the defendant have waived every objection that they might have to the survey conducted by Mr. Thomson. Mr. Manuk's argument on the attitude taken up by Golap Babu is a remarkable one. "Golap Babu was not out to condone inaccuracies," said Mr. Manuk, "he trusted them, that is all." To allow him to advance an argument of this nature is to allow him to impute an amount of bad faith to Golap Babu which I, for one, will not permit. Supposing Golap Babu had told Messrs. Turner Morrison and Co.: "I will not be responsible for the survey at all, and I reserve to myself the right to challenge the survey at any time I choose," would Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. have consented to the course proposed by Golap Babu? The bad faith consists in giving Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. the idea that he would be bound by the survey, while he mentally reserved to himself the right to challenge it, if it suited him. In my view, the defendant is bound by the survey and cannot re open the question of area now. He may have a perfectly good cause of action against Ram Lal Sinha or against Golap Babu, but, in my view, he has none against the plaintiff Company.

In the next place, I do not see how the question of deficiency can be raised as a defence to an action for damages for breach of covenant, and for carrying away the coal belonging to the plaintiff Company. The question is, has the defendant overstepped the boundary line? The answer is "Yes, I have" (for this argument assumes that the red line is the boundary line of the land demised). "But I was entitled to more land from you." Mr. Manuk's argument is that he was induced to accept the red line as the boundary line on the false representation made by Mr. Thomson to him. According to him he is entitled to set up misrepresentation as a defence to this action. In my opinion, there is neither principle nor authority in support of this proposition. Mr. Manuk, however, cited the well-known case of Walsh v. Lonsdale, (4) in support of his proposition, and he also relied on Louther v. Heaver (5) and Davis v. Shepherd (6). Walsh v. Lonsdale (4) is an authority for the proposition that a tenant holding under an agreement to lease stands exactly in the same position, as if the lease had been executed in his favour. The test of course is, as Jessel, M. R., pointed out, would specific performance of the agreement be decreed? If it would be, then the parties are in the same position as if the lease had been executed. In this case, the defendant is in possession, not by virtue of an agreement for lease but by virtue of a lease, which defines the boundaries of the land demised with precision, and he is not in possession of the disputed area. If it could be established that there was an agreement to demise the disputed area, then something might be said for the argument Mr. Manuk asserts that there was such an agreement, since this was an agreement to give him 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks and since he has got only 174 bighas. He may have a claim for the deficiency, but that is not the same thing as having a claim for the disputed area, assuming that it lies outside his boundary. Let us apply the same test as Jessel, M. R., applied in Walsh v. Lonsdale (4). Could the defendant maintain a suit for specific performance in respect of the disputed area? The answer must be a decisive No. In my view, Walsh v. Lonsdale (4) has no application to the facts of this case. Lowther v. Heaver (5) is an example of the application of Walsh v. Lonsdale (4) to the particular facts of that case. It established that where a person is entitled in equity to a lease, his rights ought to be dealt with in the same way as if a lease had been granted to him. I fail to see where the equity is in this case, unless equity is confused with natural justice or higher justice, with which I have nothing whatever to do. The defendant, in my opinion, does not establish an equity in his favour by alleging and proving that the lessors have not demised to him the full quantity of land which they agreed to demise. He would undoubtedly have established an equity in his favour by alleging and proving that though the area actually demised is less than the area agreed to be demised, the lessors had nevertheless agreed to demise the identical land from which coal has been extracted and had put the defendant in possession thereof. Davis v. Shepherd (6) was cited in support of his argument that the defendant must be deemed to be in possession of the disputed area. In that case, the owners agreed to demise to the defendant the minerals to the west of a certain fault supposed to run through the land in the direction of a line drawn on a certain plan, the quantity of the land being described as supposed to be 83 acres or thereabouts. The owners made a similar agreement with the plaintiff as to the minerals to the east of the fault, supposed to contain 8 acres or thereabouts. The fault was afterwards found to run so as to leave on the east the bulk of the land and on the west 8 acres only. The defendant, however, prosecuted his working through the fault and proceeded to get the coal beyond it. The plaintiff thereupon filed his bill, alleging that he was entitled to a lease of all the coal to the east of the fault and praying that the defendant might be restrained from working coal to the east of the fault and for an account. The Court of Appeal came to the conclusion that the plaintiff could not be considered as being constructively in possession of any minerals, not coming within the description of 98 acres or thereabouts and not separated from the western border of the estate by a line running in the direction, or nearly in the direction of the line marked on the plan. Plaintiff's action accordingly failed.

With every desire to understand the defendant's case, I have failed to see how Davis v. Shepherd (6) assists the defendant at all, Lord Cranworth, L. C., said in the course of his judgment: "In the case of a demise of unworked minerals, there can hardly be said to be actual possession of any part of them, except of what the intended lessee is actually working; but I think that when the lessor allows his intended lessee to take possession, and the lessee does take possession and commences working accordingly, he must be considered as constructively in possession of all which the lessor has bound himself to demise." If we apply the same test here, the defendant cannot be considered as being constructively in possession of any coal not coming within the description of 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks and not separated from the plaintiff Company's portion of Mouza Lodna by the red line marked on the map. The argument advanced before me was that he has undoubtedly extracted coal from the disputed area Therefore, he must be deemed to be in possession of the disputed area. The case itself is no authority for this proposition because the essential conditions to make the rule applicable are here wanting, namely, that the lessor has bound himself to demise the disputed area to the defendant and has allowed the defendant to take possession of the disputed area. There is, however, direct authority for the view that a trespasser wrongfully working a vein of coal from an adjoining mine acquires possession only of the coal worked, but cannot be said to be in possession of the mine itself. Ashton v. Stock (7), Thompson v. Hickman (8).

In my view, misrepresentation as to the area demised cannot be raised as a defence to an action for wrongful extraction and carrying away of coal. If indeed there was misrepresentation, the lessee might perhaps have renounced the lease on the ground of misrepresentation, or he may obtain an abatement of rent. But so long as the lease stands, the lessee is bound to respect the boundary.

As this case is likely to travel in its adventurous career across the seas, it is just as well to record my finding on the question whether there is, in fact, a deficiency of bigha area in the land demised. The respondent relies upon the Commissioner's report and on Mr. Thomson's evidence. It will be seen from the instructions given to the Commissioner that he was asked to take the boundary pillars on the north as the northern boundary of the land demised. The Commissioner reported that "as bounded by pillars and which is in possession of the defendant, the area of the plots is 177 bighas 17 cottahs 7 chattaks." He afterwards admitted an error in his map, and reported that the area in possession of the defendant was 174 bighas 1 cottah 18 chattaks. In my view, there was no justification for asking the Commissioner to take the pillars as the northern boundary. There is no mention of the pillars in the lease itself, and Exhibit 18, which, in my opinion, must be conclusive on the question of boundaries, shows that the northern boundary is the northern boundary of the Mouza as in the revenue survey map. My conclusion on this point, as to which there has been much discussion at the Bar, is based on the finding of the Court below that Exhibit 18 is a tracing from a revenue survey map. If that be so, and if Exhibit 18 controls the situation, the northern boundary of the Mouza as in the revenue survey map must be taken to be the northern boundary of the land demised. The Commissioner does say in his evidence that the boundary line in his map agrees for all practical purposes with that in the revenue survey map, but where the difference is only 16 bighas distributed over a large area, the phrase 'practical purposes' has no meaning whatever. We have, however, direct evidence on the point. Mr. Richardson drew a map of the land demised lying to the north of the red line and bounded by the revenue survey boundaries on the other three sides, and found the area of the land demised to be 190·6 bighas. In his map Exhibit 18, he showed the revenue survey boundary in black and then he delineated on his map the Commissioner's map in orange. The result can be seen at a glance, the Commissioner's northern boundary does not agree with the revenue survey northern boundary. The difference in area between the black line and the orange line on the north has been extracted and is found to be 14 bighas odd. In my view, therefore, it is impossible to rely on the Commissioner's map.

There is another serious error in the Commissioner's map, due to a mistake on the part of Mr. Thomson. Mr. Thomson pointed out a sunken rail as the site of the trijunction pillar of Lodna, Pandeberra and Kujama. The Commissioner, relying on Exhibit 46, says that there is only one trijunction point for four villages, namely Jharia Khas, Lodna, Pandeberra and Kujama. I will examine this contention at once, but whether the trijunction point for the four villages is the same or not, even the Commissioner admits that the trijunction point in Exhibit 46 is on the west bank of the river and not away from the river and 130 feet from the east bank. A critical examination of all the copies of the revenue survey map (Exhibits 23, 26, 46 and 47) and particularly of Exhibit 47, which as the enlarged copy of the revenue survey map is the most authentic of all has satisfied me that the trijunction point of Jharia Khas, Lodna and Pandeberra is on the west bank of the river and not 52 feet to the west of the river and that the trijunction point of Lodna, Pandeberra and Kujama is on the east bank of the river and not 130 feet to the west. The mistake of the Commissioner lies in confusing between a trijunction pillar and a trijunction point. In a small scale map it is impossible to show two trijunction pillars when they are so near each other, but even in Exhibit 47, the lines of intersection are shown indicating that the trijunction point of Jharia, Lodna and Pandeberra is on the west bank of the river and that the trijunction point of Lodna, Pandeberra and Kujama is on the east bank of the river. The Commissioner admits that, according to Exhibit 23, the trijunction point of Pandeberra, Kujama and Lodna is on the east bank of the river. Exhibit 47, however, is conclusive on this point.

Now what is the trijunction point of Lodna, Pandeberra and Kujama in his map? He himself says that he has shown it at a distance of 52 feet from the west bank. Even according to Exhibit 46, as the Commissioner understands it, it is incorrect. It is far more incorrect according to Exhibits 47 and 23, which in my view do not contradict Exhibit 46. He says that he found the trijunction pillar by actual survey on the ground. He afterwards said that Mr. Thomson pointed out the sunken rail as the site of the trijunction pillar which had disappeared. He had both Exhibits 23 and 46 with him and there was no excuse for taking a point as trijunction point which, according to Exhibit 46 as he understood it, was 52 feet away from the real trijunction point, but which, according to Exhibit 23 and also according to Exhibit 46 if he had examined it critically, was 130 feet away from the real trijunction point. He shows the trijunction point at station 10 of his map and admits that it does not tally with Exhibit 23 but claims that it tallies with Exhibit 46. This claim is disproved by his own evidence that even according to Exhibit 46 the trijunction point is on the west bank of the river, although he has shown it at a distance of 52 feet from the west bank.

Now this error in locating the trijunction point will undoubtedly result in throwing his northern boundary absolutely out of gear. He himself admits that if his trijunction point does not agree with its position in the revenue survey map, the northern boundary of the disputed land as surveyed by him will not tally with the northern boundary as in the revenue survey map. In my view, on the Commissioner's own evidence, it is impossible to rely on his map and report.

The Commissioner also reported that the area of the plot as shown in Exhibit 18 is 182 B. He arrived at this conclusion purely as a result of desk work, and not as a result of actual survey after relaying Exhibit 18 on the ground. I cannot attach any importance to this report, as he himself admits that there may be a difference due to the contraction of the tracing cloth. It is true that he did not make this admission with reference to Exhibit 18, but he does say that tracing cloths have a tendency to contract, rendering a correct calculation impossible.

I now come to the evidence of Mr. Thomson. His lengthy cross-examination is a good example of that which the Judicial Committee in the case of Rajkumar Roy v. Gobind Chunder Roy (9) severely condemned. "In boundary cases of this kind", said the Judicial Committee, "nothing is easier than to propound riddles which cannot be answered by merely looking at the maps, or reading the statements which appear in the record". His cross-examination is a cross-examination on perpendiculars and angles as a result of comparison between his map Exhibit 18, and to other maps, namely Murray's map Exhibit 9, and a revenue survey map Exhibit 23. He was driven to admit that his map was in conflict both with Exhibit 9 and Exhibit 23 and was, therefore, inaccurate. His evidence on this point is as follows: "From the data you asked me to take, the partition line as drawn on Exhibit 18 does not tally with the original from which Exhibit 18 was made. I mean the data you gave are the angle from the eastern extremity between the partition line and the line drawn through the trijunction pillar of Jharia Khas, Lodna and Pandeberra, which is but imperfectly shown in Exhibit 18; secondly, the point on the western extremity of the partition line where I put on the point C 3, thirdly, the angle in Exhibit 23 between the partition line and the line from the eastern end of it passing through these above trijunction points. That angle in Exhibit 18 does not agree with Exhibit 23. Every one of these data shows that Exhibit 18 is a wrong copy". It is on this passage that the learned (9) 19 C. 660 (P. C.); 19 I. A. 140; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 140.

Subordinate Judge has relied for rejecting Exhibit 18.

In my view this cross-examination has proceeded from a complete misconception of the issues that properly arose in this case. Exhibit 18 may be wrong as compared to Exhibit 9 or it may be wrong as compared to Exhibit 23, but the question in this action is, does it contain a sufficiently clear definition of the southern boundary of the land demised? The defendant has a definite case on the southern boundary of the land demised. He says that the southern boundary is not the red line of Exhibit 18, but the arbitrators' line of Exhibit B. That case I understand and appreciate. But if that case fails, as in my opinion it has failed, of what use is it to pick holes in the map on which the demise was made, and propound riddles for Mr. Thomson? Mr. Thomson says that the angle formed by the red line and the line from the eastern extremity of the red line to the trijunction point of Lodna, Jharia Khas and Pandeberra is 52'10 degrees. He says that the corresponding angle in Murray's map is 49'20 degrees. The riddle put by the learned Vakil to Mr. Thomson was, why don't the angles agree? Mr. Thomson answered, because my map is wrong. The true answer should have been, as Mr. Pugh has satisfied me, that a wrong trijunction point was taken by Murray.

It is worth while examining this point a little more in detail, if only to remove a grievance of the defendant. A confusion has undoubtedly been created in his case by reason of the fact that the trijunction pillar of Pandeberra, Jharia Khas and Lodna has disappeared, and is now buried in a tramway bank. This, I find, established in the case. The revenue survey maps Exhibits 23, 26 46, and 47, and particularly Exhibit 47, show the trijunction point to be on the west bank of the river. This I find also established on a critical examination of the maps and on the Commissioner's evidence to which I have already referred. When the encroachment by the defendant was discovered, Mr. Thomson supervised the preparation of a map of the land demised by Mr. Murray. At that time he pointed out a sunken rail 52 feet to the west of the river bank as the trijunction pillar of Jharia Khas, Lodna and Pandeberra. The trijunction point, therefore, in Murray's map as in the Commissioner's map is 52 feet to the west of the trijunction point as in the revenue survey maps. The result is that the angle formed by the partition line and the line from the eastern extremity of the partition line to the trijunction point in Murray's map differs from the corresponding angle in Exhibit 18, which is a tracing from the revenue survey map. This is the explanation of the difference in angle between Murray's map and Exhibit 18. So far as Exhibit 23 is concerned, it must be remembered that the angle could only be calculated if the partition line were correctly laid thereon. Mr. Thomson estimated in the witness box by means of a protractor. The estimate of an angle on a small scale map after laying a line thereon, all in the witness box in the course of a severe cross-examination, is a matter of no small difficulty and I attach no importance whatever to his admission that the angle in Exhibit 23 varies from the angle in Exhibit 18. It is well worth remembering that some of the defendant's maps show an angle of 52 degrees, Exhibit 24 for instance, and Exhibit 16A, which the defendant sent to the plaintiff Company in October 1910 In my view, Mr. Thomson's admissions were based on data which were incorrect and misleading. I do not think that Mr. Thomson's admission can be taken as an admission that the land demised to the defendant comprises an area less than 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks. I hold that the defendant has not shown that there is any deficiency in the area demised to the defendant.

My conclusions on this part of the case are, first, that the lease was expressly on a map and that map must be decisive on the question of boundaries unless there is a conflict between it and the boundaries set out in the schedule to the lease, secondly, that Exhibit 18, and not Exhibit B, is the map referred to in the lease, thirdly, that there is no conflict between Exhibit 18 and the boundaries set out in the schedule to the lease and that consequently Exhibit 18 must prevail, fourthly, that it is not open to the defendant to rely upon any deficiency of area demised as a defence to this action and fifthly, that the defendant has not shown that there is any deficiency in the area demised.

I hold that the red line in Exhibit 18 is the southern boundary of the land demised, and that the plaintiff Company is entitled to a declaration to that effect.

I now proceed to the next point, namely whether the defendant has actually extracted coal from plaintiff Company's portion of Mouza Lodna. On this point, there are numerous admissions of the defendant himself. It appears that the plaintiff Company discovered the encroachment on 25th July 1910. Mr. Morrison, the General Manager, at once wrote to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., complaining that the encroachment was a serious one. There is a letter of 26th July 1910 from Mr. Lindsay to Mr. Morrison which definitely states that the defendant had called to see Mr. Lindsay and told that he first found about the encroachment in the month of May last. The defendant, in that interview, complained that the encroachment was due to the malice of his old surveyor who misled him as regards the workings. This interview and admission were admitted in the cross-examination of Mr. Thomson. Mr. Thomson in his evidence has stated that the defendant came to his office and admitted the encroachment, and asked for easy terms in the matter of payment of damages. This also was admitted in his cross-examination, the only point made being that the talk of compromise ought to have been held sacred and should not have been divulged. In the Calcutta High Court where the plaintiff Company first instituted the suit, a suit which was dismissed on the question of jurisdiction, the defendant's Counsel and attorneys definitely stated that Exhibit 24, the working plan of the defendant's colliery, correctly showed the extent of defendant's mining operations. These admissions were made for the purpose of resisting an application by the plaintiff Company for inspection of the defendant's colliery to ascertain the extent of the defendant's trespass. Exhibit 24 undoubtedly shows mining operations by the defendant beyond the line of pillars on the south, so that if the red line and the line of pillars are identical the encroachment is admitted.

It was argued, however, that all these admissions were made on the assumption that the red line and the line of pillars were identical and that as Mr. Thomson has admitted that they are not identical, there is no evidence before the Court to establish encroachment by the defendant. It is difficult to examine a contention of this nature, since the point was not raised in the written statement, either expressly or by implication. It will be necessary to examine Mr. Thomson's admission, but before doing so, it is as well to point out that the line of pillars as the practical line of demarcation between the two estates has stood for over thirteen years without any challenge or contest. It is obvious that a theoretical boundary line on the map could serve no useful purpose if it were not represented on the ground by a practical line of demarcation. It was in order that such a line might be laid on the ground by consent of parties that Messrs. Turner & Co. invited Golap Babu to nominate a surveyor. Golap Babu left the matter entirely to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., but sent his son as his agent to represent him at the survey. Mr. Thomson's evidence has satisfied me that great care was taken to produce correctly the theoretical line on the ground. Golap Babu's agent accepted the demarcation, and Golap Babu himself has acted on that demarcation, as will appear from the lease which he executed in favour of Ram Lal Sinha. To hold in favour of the respondent would be to say that parties can withdraw from solemn engagements of this nature whenever any inaccuracy is afterwards discovered. In my view, once the parties have agreed to represent a theoretical boundary line on the map by a practical line of demarcation on the ground, it is not open to them or to any of them, in an action for wrongful extraction of coal, to show that they are not identical.

It will be well, however, to examine the admissions of Mr. Thomson. He does indeed say that the red line and the line of pillars are not identical. But this admission logically follows from his first admission, namely, that the red line is inaccurate. Mr. Thomson relied on the accuracy of Murray's map for which he was responsible. He had to admit that Murray's map showed an angle of 49 degrees 20 minutes between the partition line and the line from the eastern extremity of the partition line to the trijunction point of Jharia Khas, Lodna and Pandeberra. He had to admit that the corresponding angle in his map was 52 degrees 10 minutes. He was driven to the conclusion, in his frame of mind the logical conclusion, that his red line was not correct and was fixed too much to the north. In its right position, therefore, it would give more land to the defendant, in other words, the deflected partition line would come to the south of and enclose a larger area than the pillar line. Hence it followed that the red line and the pillar line were not identical.

The vice of the whole cross-examination is, as I have shown, in assuming the trijunction point of Jharia Khas, Lodna and Pandeberra in Murray's map to be correct. If the revenue survey maps are to be accepted as correct, that trijunction point in Murray's map is 52 feet to the west of the true trijunction point. This is admitted by the Commissioner himself. The riddle put by the Vakil for the defendant to Mr. Thomson was this: "Why don't the angles agree?" Mr. Thomson's answer was, "because the red line and the pillar line don't agree". His answer should have been, "because Murray started from a wrong trijunction point."

In my view, therefore, Mr. Thomson's admission is based on wrong da a supplied to him and cannot prejudice the case of the plaintiff Company.

The respondent also relies on the evidence of the Commissioner. In one portion of his evidence, he did say that the partition line as represented by pillars on the ground does not agree with the red line as drawn in Exhibit 18. But it is worthy of nose that he treated the red line and the pillar line as identical. One of his instruction was "to find out the distance of the red line laid down in the plan filed with the plaint.....from the mouth of the incline No. 1." His report on this point is, "the distance of the red line laid down in the plan filed with the plaint from the mouth of incline No. 1 is 372 feet". In his evidence in Court he stated as follows: "By the red line in my report I meant the line of pillars". What reason is there, then, for his assertion that the two lines do not agree? The only justification that I can see for his evidence is that he shows the partition line in two lines meeting at station 1, station 21 to station 1 being one straight line and station 1 to station 2 being another short straight line, whereas the red line in Exhibit 18 is one straight line. This conflict may be due to a variety of reasons, due, for instance, to the fact that the westernmost pillar, as is admitted by the Commissioner, is not now in existence, due, it may be, to the fact that it is difficult, if not impossible, to represent a short straight line in a small scale revenue map such as Exhibit 18 is, or due to some error of the Commissioner himself. But since the Commissioner did not lay the red line on the ground as he should have done under the instructions issued to him, I decline to hold, merely on this evidence, that the two lines are not identical. My conclusion is that the defendant has not established that the pillar line is not identical with the red line.

But the learned Subordinate Judge has recorded a finding that Exhibit 24 is not reliable. In order to appreciate this finding, it is necessary to remember that Exhibit 24 is the defendant's own map, prepared by his own surveyor, Sudhamoy, made over by the defendant himself to the plaintiff Company, and admitted by him to be correct in the Calcutta High Court. A tracing from Exhibit 24 is part of the plaint itself and the plaintiff Company relies upon it for showing the extent of the encroachment. There is no suggestion in the written statement that Exhibit 24 is inaccurate. It was assumed all through that Exhibit 24 correctly represented the underground workings of the defendant. In my view, the defendant ought not to be encouraged to take up the position that Exhibit 24 is inaccurate.

The learned Subordinate Judge first relies on the evidence of Mr. Thomson. He said that Exhibit 24 was not correct because the westernmost boundary pillar was not shown in it. That is no ground for rejecting Exhibit 24 entirely. He also said in a general way that Exhibit 24 was incorrect in some particular without mentioning what that particular was. His evidence on this point is as follows: "I have reason to believe that Exhibit 18, Exhibits 9, 16A and 7A are incorrect on some point or other.....I have got reason to believe that the blue map Exhibit 17A, Exhibit 21 are incorrect in some particulars". Exhibits 7A and 17A are tracings from Exhibit 24. He does not give any reasons, but reading the whole of his evidence, it seems to me that he was driven to this conclusion from his admission that there was a conflict between the red line and the pillar line. With that point, I have dealt. In my judgment Mr. Thomson's evidence did not justify the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge arrived.

But the learned Subordinate Judge relies upon certain other circumstances. "Exhibit 41, plan made by R. C. De," says the learned Subordinate Judge, "shows defendant's workings and it shows only one gallery up to the boundary line. The others were in 1906 at a distance from it." But Sudhamoy's map Exhibit 24 shows the defendant's workings beyond the boundary line. Exhibit 41 shows defendant's 9 galleries worked and still no encroachment. Exhibit 24 made in 1909 shows only defendant's 6 galleries worked and encroachment. The defendant did not drive galleries further to the south after 1906. Exhibit 21 also does not show any encroachment. Sudhamoy's map is, therefore, not reliable.

In view of the admissions repeatedly made by the defendant that Exhibit 24 correctly represented his underground workings, the argument employed by the learned Subordinate Judge is certainly a remarkable one. Such an argument, in my judgment, begs the very question which the Court has to determine. The question is, has the defendant broken his bounds and extracted coal from the plaintiff Company's mine? Exhibit 24 shows that he has. The plaintiff Company relies on Exhibit 24 for showing the extent of the mining operations carried on by the defendant. The plaintiff Company does not allege that the defendant committed any act of conversion prior to 1906—the defendant does not admit that he did. Therefore, it is nobody's case that Exhibit 41, the working plan of 1906, would show any trespass by the defendant. In fact, on another question, on the question of limitation, the plaintiff Company relies on Exhibit 41 for showing that the act of conversion must have been committed after 1909. With that argument, I shall have to deal very fully hereafter. But the learned Subordinate Judge assumes that which has to be established, that the defendant stopped all mining operations in 1906, and comes to the conclusion that Exhibit 24 must accordingly be inaccurate.

As I have said, such an argument begs the very question which has to be determined. The appellant Company says: "We show that the defendant has extracted coal from our colliery since Exhibit 41 ceased to be the working plan of the defendant and Exhibit 24 became his working plan, and we rely on a comparison of Exhibit 41 and Exhibit 24", The learned Subordinate Judge says: "Exhibit 41 shows that there was no encroachment at all, and, as the defendant stopped all mining operations in 1906, Exhibit 24 must be inaccurate". The reasoning, in my opinion, is fallacious. He had first to determine the question whether the defendant did in fact stop all mining operations in 1906.

Exhibit 41 does not show any encroachment. Exhibit 24 does. This is the common case. The defendant now says that Exhibit 24 must be erroneous because he stopped all mining operations in 1906. According to his evidence Exhibit 24 was ready sometime in September or October 1909, and that he actually saw it in March or April 1910. I do not believe this portion of his evidence, but I will assume that he saw it in March or April 1910. In March or April 1910, therefore, he knew that the plan was erroneous, if his case is true that he did not conduct any mining operations since 1906. Yet he admitted the encroachment to the plaintiff Company and solemnly discussed the question of damages. Thereafter, he put forward every defence that he could think of to the plaintiff's suit, but it never occurred to him to say that Exhibit 24 which was the only evidence of encroachment against him was erroneous. This part of the argument depends not on any expert knowledge of surveying but on a simple question of fact, namely, whether he conducted any mining operations since 1906. That was within his own personal knowledge. In my view, his repeated admissions that Exhibit 24 correctly represented his mining operations are inconsistent with his evidence in Court, unsupported by any documentary evidence, that he did not conduct any mining operations since 1906. I hold that the defendant has not proved that Exhibit 24 is inaccurate.

If that be so, then Exhibit 24 is conclusive on the point. That admittedly shows underground trespass by the defendant. It was admitted in the High Court that this map or a copy of it which was filed in the High Court correctly represented the underground workings of the defendant. I hold, therefore, that the defendant has extracted and carried away coal from the plaintiff Company's portion of Mouza Lodna.

That being so, the question at once arises whether the plaintiff Company's claim for value of the coal taken away is barred by the law relating to limitation of suits and whether the liability to perform the covenant under the lease executed by Golap Babu in favour of the plaintiff Company runs with the land so as to enable the plaintiff Company to sue upon it for damages. I will consider the question of the covenant first. It runs as follows: " It is settled that for the convenience of carrying the business of both parties as well as to obviate chances of future dispute, a 30 feet broad barrier or a Bundh of coal will be kept on the southern boundary of the land settled with me, that is, on the northern boundary of the land of 12 annas 9 pies share that is left, after the settlement with me, in Mouza Lodna. Out of the same (30 feet) I shall work after leaving out 15 feet towards my own boundary and you will also similarly work after leaving out 15 feet towards your own boundary. If any of the two parties encroach upon the said Bundh and loss is thereby caused to the other party, then the party at fault will be liable for the loss to the other party and vice versa." It being ascertained that the red line is identical with the pillar line, it has been established on Exhibit 24 that the defendant has cut through the barrier and has extracted coal therefrom. The defendant denies his liability on the covenant on two grounds, first, on the ground that the covenant cannot be said to be a covenant running with the land and secondly, on the ground that he is an under-lessee and not an assignee of the term. He urges further that, in any event, he is not liable on the covenant for cutting through the plaintiff Company's portion of the barrier inasmuch as the plaintiff Company, and not he, is the covenantor in respect thereto.

The principle is well established that covenants that touch and concern the thing demised, as distinguished from those which are collateral thereto, are said to run with the land and bind the assignees. The principle was established in the leading case known as Spencer's case (10) and has been exhaustively discussed in various cases which need not be enumerated here. It is sufficient to say that the cases establish that to run with the land, a covenant must necessarily affect the nature, quality or value of the thing demised, independently of collateral circumstances, or affect the mode of enjoyment. The covenant in question is found in most mining leases and is very necessary for the protection, not only of the property demised, but of the neighbouring colliery. It is intended to prevent spread of fire and influx of water. Can it be suggested that the covenant does not necessarily affect the nature, quality or value of the thing demised or affect the mode of enjoyment. In my view, only one answer is possible, and that is, that no such suggestion can be made.

I confess that I had some doubts as regards the plaintiff Company's portion of the barrier, not due to the argument advanced before us on behalf of the respondent, but due to the fact that that portion of the barrier is not part of the thing demised. So far as the argument before us is concerned, it is met by the form of the covenant itself. The covenant is not only not to work the covenantor's portion of the barrier, but not to "encroach upon the said Bundh." The "said Bundh" is a barrier 30 feet broad, 15 feet on the defendant's portion of the property and 15 feet on plaintiff Company's portion. Therefore, the argument advanced before us on behalf of the respondent does not press me at all. The covenant is wide enough to cover the entire barrier. What pressed me is this. Is the defendant liable on the covenant for doing someting not on the land demised, but on the neighbouring land? Having considered the matter very carefully, I have come to the conclusion that he is. It seems to me that Ricketts v. Enfield Churchwardens (11) is directly in point. By deed made between the Church Wardens of the one part and one Battley of the other part, the Church Wardens demised to Battley a parcel of land, subject to the covenant on the part of Battley that he would not erect or set up any section, building or projection between the front boundary line of the land demised and a line demarcated on the plan as building line, such line being drawn at a distance of 30 feet from the said front boundary line. This thirty feet was, therefore, the lessee's portion of the barrier. The Church Wardens on their part covenanted that they or their assigns will not erect or permit to be erected on the adjoining land of the Church Wardens lying between the western boundary of the land demised and a point of 110 feet each of a road any erection, building or projection between the front boundary line of the adjoining lane and a building drawn at a distance of 30 feet from the said boundary line. This thirty feet was the lessor's portion of the barrier. Thereafter the Church Wardens entered into a building agreement with one Thomas with respect to the plot of land adjoining the west side of Battley's premises. Thomas erected a building, a portion of which consisting of a square bay projected some 4 feet beyond the building line. The plaintiff, as the assignee of Battley, brought an action on the covenant against the Church Wardens. It was argued that the covenant did not directly touch or concern the thing demised inasmuch as the plaintiff complained of something done, not on the land demised, but on the neighbouring land. That is precisely the point here. That argument was negatived by Neville, J. That learned Judge, following the dictum of Lord Collins in Dewar v. Goodman (12) held, that, as between landlord and tenant, a covenant may touch and concern the land demised, although nothing has to be done on the land demised. The question is, does it affect the nature, quality or value of the thing demised. In my opinion it does, because the invasion of the barrier involves a corresponding risk to the thing demised. In my opinion, the covenant in question is a covenant that runs with the land and would bind the defendant, provided he is an assignee of the term.

This brings me to the argument that the defendant is an under-lessee and not an assignee and is, therefore, not liable on the covenant. The proper test to be applied, when a question of this nature is raised, is to see whether the lessee under the head lease has parted with his whole interest or with a greater interest than he himself possessed. If he has, then the instrument of transfer, by whatever name it may be called, is in reality an assignment. Beardman v. Wilson (13). The documents in the case show that Golap Chander Sarkar parted in favour of Ram Lal Sinha with every interest that he had in the land demised and that Ram Lal Sinha likewise parted in favour of the defendant with his whole interest in the land demised. But it was urged on behalf of the defendant that the defendant reserved to himself the right to surrender the land whenever he thought it necessary to wind up his business. In my view, the right to surrender does not make the lease any the less a permanent lease. There is in every lease—and permanent leases do not form an exception—a right inherent in the lessor to re enter in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that on breach thereof the lessor may re-enter. Such an express condition will not make the lease any the less a permanent lease.

(13) (1868) 4 C. P. 57; 38 L. J. C. P. 91; 19 L. T. 282; 17 W. R. 54.

The lease, in my view, is a permanent lease, subject to an express condition that the lessee would be at liberty to surrender if it became necessary for him to wind up his business. There is authority for the view that a lease for the whole term but subject to a power to re-enter on non-payment of rent operates as an assignment and not as an under-lease. See Palmer v. Edwards (14). In my view a lease of the entire interest of the lessee, subject to a power to surrender, stands exactly on the same footing. Such a lease would, therefore, operate as an assignment and not as an under-lease. It follows, therefore, that the defendant is liable on the covenant, and liable for the invasion of the plaintiff Company's portion of the barrier as well as for that of his own portion.

It seems to me, however, that whether the covenant runs or does not run with the land, and whether the interest of the defendant is that of an under-lessee or that of an assignee, the defendant is liable on the covenant on the principle laid down in Tulk v. Moxhay (15). The covenant, though affirmative in form, is negative in substance. It is a restrictive convenant; it restricts the right of the lessee to conduct his mining operations in any portion of the barrier. By reason of the equitable doctrine of notice, the assignee—and it has been held an under-lessee, see John Brothers Abergarw Brewery Company v. Holmes (16)—may stand on the same footing with regard to collateral covenants, provided they are negative in substance, as with regard to those which actually concern the thing demised. The doctrine is founded on the principle that if an equity is attached to property by the owner, no one purchasing or taking an under-lease with notice of that equity can stand in a different situation from the party from whom he purchased or took an under-lease. As Lord Chancellor Cottenham pointed out in Tulk v. Moxhay (15), "If that", namely, the argument that the purchaser was not bound by any covenant that did not run with the land, "if that were so, it would be impossible for an owner of land to sell part of it without incurring the risk of rendering what he retains worthless." On this principle it has been held that an under-lessee will incur liability on convenants of a restrictive character of which notice, either actual or constructive, can be imputed to him, "the burden of the restrictive covenant being an equitable interest in the land inhering in and annexed to the land."

That being so, the question arises whether the defendant has notice, either actual or constructive, of the covenant contained in the lease of Golap Chander Sarkar. In my view, every person who acquires a leasehold interest is bound to investigate the title of his lessor and is affected with constructive notice of any covenant contained in any document forming part of the chain of title of his lessor. Now, what are the documents forming chain of title of his lessor? Clearly the lease executed by Golap Chander Sarkar in favour of his lessor Ram Lal Sinha and the lease executed by Messrs. Laik and Banerji in favour of Golap Chander Sarkar. There is, in the defendant's own lease, a clear reference to the lease executed in favour of his lessor. The defendant binds himself to pay to Golap Chander Sarkar directly the rent, royalty and commission payable by his lessor to Golap Chander Sarkar. Surely there was an obligation on him to examine the lease by virtue of which his lessor was in possession. That lease would at once give him notice of the covenant which is fully set out in paragraph 7. There is authority for the proposition that an under-lessee has constructive notice of the covenants of the head lease where the under lessor, on the face of the under-lease, appears himself to be holding under a lease. Tritton v. Bankart (17). Even if it were held that the defendant is not even an under-lessee but a mere occupier under a lease, he would still be bound by the covenant, on the principle that if a person by the leave of another who is bound by a covenant as to the use of land enters into possession with notice of the obligation, he will be restrained from violating that covenant. Mander v. Falcke (18).

I hold that the defendant is bound by the covenant respecting the barrier, that he has broken that covenant and that the plaintiff Company is entitled to damages for breach of the covenant.

I now come to the question of limitation. It was not contended before us that the claim for damages for breach of covenant is barred by limitation. Obviously it is not, for six years' rule applies under Article 116. But it was argued, and argued with great force and determination, that plaintiff Company's claim for damages for underground trespass is barred by limitation.

In order to see which Article of the Limitation Act applies to the plaintiff Company's suit, it is necessary to understand its case. The suit is a suit for value of the coal wrongfully cut and appropriated by the defendant. It is, therefore, an action in trover and, in my view, either Article 48 or 49 would apply. It was argued that the action is one really for compensation for trespass upon immoveable property, but, in my view, although the plaintiff Company was entitled to maintain such an action, it is not one which it has actually brought, it is not suing for injury to the immoveable property, but for value of the coal removed by the defendant and converted to his use. Identically the same view was taken by Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Jadu Nath v. Hari Kar (19).

It is now important to consider whether Article 48 or 49 applies, for the starting points are different. It seems to me that Article 48 is a special section, whereas Article 49 is a general section and the well-established rule is that where the special provision applies, the general provision does not apply, even though the words employed are wide enough to cover the case. Now Article 48 deals only with specific moveable property which falls under one of two classes, namely, (1) such property as has been lost or (2) as has been acquired by (a) theft, (b) dishonest misappropriation or (c) conversion. No other kind of moveable property is affected by this article. If the case is not covered by Article 48, then undoubtedly Article 49 will apply, but in my view Article 48 applies. What is the plaintiff Company's complaint? That the defendant has broken the barrier, severed the coal from the property in possession of the plaintiff Company, and has carried it away. That is theft, pure and simple, or conversion. The defendant knew that he had overstepped the boundary, his own working plans, Exhibit 41 and 24, are conclusive on the point. It may be urged, however, that as the plaintiff Company was not actually working that identical portion of the colliery, it could not be said to be in possession of it. There is no substance in the argument. It will be remembered that there was actual demarcation by boundary pillars between the land demised and the remaining portion of Mouza Lodna. There is ample evidence, and that from the side of the defendant himself, that the parties took possession by the boundary pillars. It has been held that if a person having title to all the seams of the coal under a defined surface enters upon one seam, he will be taken to be in possession of all the seams over which he has title. Low Moor & Co., v. Stanley Coal Co. (20), Low Moor & Co. v. Stanley Coal Co. (21), Davis v. Shepherd (6). Therefore, the plaintiff Company was in possession of the coal as severed and removed by the defendant. The defendant, on his own working plan, was aware of his unauthorised intrusion upon the possession of the plaintiff Company. In my opinion his act is theft, pure and simple.

If that is objected to by the defendant, the plaintiff's action is undoubtedly an action which at common law would be called an action in trover, a remedy available to the aggrieved party to recover the value of personal chattels converted by another to his own use. As will be found in a well-known work on Torts, "An act of conversion may be committed (1) when property is wrongfully taken, (2) when it is wrongfully parted with, (3) when it is wrongfully sold in market overt although not delivered, (4) when it is wrongfully retained, and (5) when it is wrongfully destroyed or changed in nature. Any one who without authority takes possession of another man's goods with the intention of asserting some right or dominion over them is prima facie guilty of conversion." (Clerk and Lindsell or Torts, 6th Edition, page 252.) That is exactly the complaint which the plaintiff Company makes against the defendant. Its complaint is that the defendant has without authority taken possession of the coal belonging to the plaintiff Company with the intention of asserting some right or dominion over them. The plaintiff Company is, therefore, charging the defendant with conversion. Does Article 48 or Article 49 apply?

It will be noticed that the word 'conversion' is used by the Legislature in Article 48; it finds no place in Article 49. It must be presumed that when the Legislature has deliberately used a term which has a known legal significance in law, it has attached to that term that known legal significance. In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff Company's suit falls under Article 48 of the Limitation Act and time began to run when the plaintiff Company first learnt in whose possession the coal removed was. If that be so, it is conceded that the plaintiff Company's suit is within time.

Even if Article 49 applies, the plaintiff Company's suit is still within time. For this purpose it will be necessary to consider the evidence somewhat in detail, especially the working plans of the defendant. The plaintiff Company is unable to give the date of actual encroachment, but it says that the coal must have been removed after the 4th February 1909, that is to say, after the commencement of the defendant's lease. It ought to be mentioned here that although the defendant's lease is dated the 4th February 1909, he was in possession of the demised land certainly in 1906, perhaps earlier, under a license from Ram Lall Sinha. The action was brought in the Calcutta High Court on the 19th January 19 1. That suit was dismissed on the 20th February 1912, the Court being of opinion that it had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The suit was re-filed in Purulia on the 10th June 1912. Provided the plaintiff Company makes good its point that the plaintiff Company actually extracted coal after the 4th February 1909, the suit is well within time, as the plaintiff Company would be entitled to have the time from the 19th January 1911 to the 20th February 1912 excluded from calculation.

Mr. Morrison, the general manager of the plaintiff Company, discovered the encroachment on the 25th July 1910. Mr. Morrison's letter to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., dated the 25th July 1910, is of importance. It runs as follows:—

"Dear Sirs,

This morning Mr. Argyle and I inspected Babu B. B. Bose's Lodna Colliery.

The manager could or would not produce the working plan, but he produced what he called a working tracing which was so neatly cut off by the barrier that it aroused my suspicions of encroachment.

On inspecting the workings we found that they extend well over the barrier in places into our property.

The encroachment appears to me to be quite a serious one and I will be glad if we will get Babu B. B. Bose to produce the plan from which the above-mentioned tracing was made, also his written permission for our surveyors to survey his workings.

The matter is most urgent as the dip workings are rapidly filling with water.

Should he hesitate to give necessary permission we must take legal proceedings at once".

On receipt of this letter Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. had an interview with the defendant. The result of the interview is set out in Mr. Lindsay's letter to Mr. Thomson, dated the 26th July 1910, which runs as follows:—

"My dear Thomson,

Further to our official letters of date. B. B. Bose has been in and says that he is writing this evening instructing his manager to hand you over the working plans of the Colliery. He tells me that he first found out about the encroachment in the month of May after he had engaged a new surveyor and that he was having a fresh plan made which is not yet completed. He says that the encroachment was due to the malice of his old surveyor who misled him as regards the workings. He states that three galleries only have been driven about 7-8-10 feet through the barrier. Whether he hoped that the water would hide his misdeeds goodness knows. Anyhow he will probably try and delay things until his surveyor returns from work he is doing at Sitarampore. This should not interfere with you, as he says he is also instructing his manager to give you every assistance you may require".

The defendant himself on the 27th July wrote the following letter to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co.:—

" Dear Sirs,

With reference to your letter and my interview of yesterday, I beg to inform you that as desired by you I have instructed my Colliery manager to submit the working plans to your manager and further instructed him to allow your manager to inspect my mines whenever required".

Two points are established in the correspondence; first, that the defendant admitted the encroachment to the plaintiff Company and said that he found it out only in the month of May, and, secondly, that he promised to hand over his working plans to the plaintiff Company.

The defendant's case is that the encroachment, if any, took place before 1906, that a plan prepared by R. L. Dey (Exhibit 41) was his only working plan and that Exhibit 24 known as Sudhamoy's plan, upon which the plaintiff Company strongly relies, was not his working plan.

The plaintiff Company's case is that Sudhamoy's plan Exhibit 24 came into operation as the working plan from October 1909, that till it came into operation, R. L. Dey's plan Exhibit 41 was the working plan of the defendant, that anything which does not appear in Exhibit 41 but does appear in Exhibit 24, must have been after April 1909 inasmuch as under the rules framed under a Statute the working plan must show workings within six months and that, therefore, coal has been extracted from the disputed area after April 1909. A comparison of the two maps makes the plaintiff Company's point perfectly clear. Exhibit 41 does not shew any encroachment whereas Exhibit 24 does.

It is relevant to ask, when did the encroachment take place? The defendant says, if it took place at all, it must have taken place before 1906. Exhibit 41, which was his working plan in 1906 and continued to be the working plan up to October 1909, contradicts that case at once. A working plan, if it is to be of any value, must shew the workings. Even the defendant admits that a working plan must shew workings as they proceed. It follows, therefore, that the encroachment did not take place in 1906, and could not have taken place within six months of the time when Exhibit 41 ceased to be operative.

The defendant's case of course is that Exhibit 41 is still his working plan. Exhibit 41 contradicts that case, because even now the encroachments are not shewn in Exhibit 41. Obviously some other plan came into operation as a working plan. Plaintiff Company says that Exhibit 24 is that plan. If Exhibit 24 is the working plan of the defendant, that concludes the matter.

It is necessary then to enquire what view the defendant himself takes of this plan. He admits that Sudhamoy prepared the plan Exhibit 24 for him. He says that he commissioned Sudhamoy to prepare this plan after his lease on the 4th February 1909, and that Sudhamony took 7 or 8 months to prepare the plan. The plan was, therefore, ready some time in September or October 1909. Under the rules framed under a Statute working plans have to be produced for the inspection of the Mining Engineer from time to time. The defendant admits that he produced Exhibit 24 for the inspection of Mr. Adam, the Chief Inspector of Mines, in 1911 or 1912. From the evidence of Mr. Simpson, Inspector of Mines and a mining specialist to the Government of India, I am satisfied that Exhibit 24 was produced before him for his inspection. It is difficult to understand why Exhibit 24 should have been produced before them if it were not the working plan of the defendant. Reference has already been made to Exhibit 15, the letter of the defendant to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., in which he undertook to send his working plans (not plan) to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. He did in fact send not only Exhibit 41 but also Exhibit 24 to them. On the date of that letter, that is to say the 27th July 1910, he undoubtedly thought that Exhibit 24 was his working plan. In my view, it is established that Exhibit 41 was the working plan of the defendant until Exhibit 24 was ready and that from that time, that is to say, September or October 1909, Exhibit 24 was the working plan of the defendant.

If that be so, then any encroachment which is not shown in Exhibit 41 but which is shown in Exhibit 24 must have been committed since April 1909, since Exhibit 41 ceased to be operative in September or October 1909, and since, under the rules, Exhibit 41 was bound to shew the workings correctly within six months. Exhibit 41 does not show any encroachment by the defendant; Exhibit 24 shews the whole of the encroachment. It follows, therefore, that the encroachment by the defendant has taken place since April 1909, and that the plaintiff Company's suit is within time.

Great reliance was placed on the evidence of Sudhamoy that Exhibit 41 was the only working plan of the defendant's Colliery when he prepared the plan of seam No. 12. In order to appreciate this evidence it is necessary to understand that we have in this suit nothing to do with seam No. 12. We are concerned only with seam No. 14. His evidence is that he first prepared Exhibit 24 which is the map of seam No. 14. This is not disputed by the defendant. After preparing Exhibit 24 he prepared another plan of seam No. 12. As I understand his evidence, it comes to this, that Exhibit 41 was the only working plan of seam No. 12 while he was preparing the plan of seam No. 12.

This point is made good on a comparison of Exhibit 21 and Exhibit 41. Exhibit 21 is a copy of Exhibit 41 which the defendant supplied to the plaintiff Company in 1906. It does not show any working of seam No. 12. Exhibit 41 which was supplied to the plaintiff Company in 1910 shews working of seam No. 12. Exhibit 24 does not shew any working of seam No. 12. It follows, therefore, that though from September or October Exhibit 41 ceased to be the working plan of seam No. 14 with which we are concerned in this suit, it continued to be the working plan of seam No. 12 and was the only working plan of seam No. 12 while Sudhamoy was making the plan of seam No. 12. This evidence, in my opinion, does not discredit the case of the plaintiff Company.

I come to the conclusion that the plaintiff Company's suit is within time and that it is entitled to recover damages from the defendant for the unauthorised extraction and removal of the plaintiff Company's coal.

It is necessary now to consider the form of the decree to which the plaintiff Company is entitled. It is entitled to a declaration that the red line in Exhibit 18 is the boundary line between the lands demised and the remaining 12 annas 15 gandas of Mouza Lodna in the possession of the plaintiff Company. It is also entitled to recover damages from the defendant for breach of covenant and for the removal of the plaintiff Company's coal. The issue as to damages has not been determined by the learned Subordinate Judge, and it will, therefore, be necessary to remand the case to the lower Court for the trial of that issue. So far as the question of damages for breach of covenant is concerned, the Court below in fixing the amount will be guided by section 73 of the Indian Contract Act. So far as the question of damages for the conversion is concerned, the matter is of some difficulty. The plaintiff Company is in any event entitled to the market value at the pit's mouth of the coal worked and gotten by the defendant from the plaintiff Company's mine. The question is, is the defendant entitled to all just allowances for the costs and expenses incurred by him in bringing such coal to the pit's mouth, including the cost of getting or severing the coal. The Courts in England have adopted two rules, known as the harsher and the milder rule, according as the defendant's act has been mala fide and bona fide. If he has acted "fairly and honestly," or "inadvertently," or under "a mere mistake" or under a "bona fide belief of title," he has usually been allowed the expense both of getting and severing and also of bringing to bank. If, on the other hand, the defendant has acted "without any colour of title," or "in a manner wholly unauthorised and unlawful" or if his conduct was "negligent" or "wilful," he has been held not entitled to an allowance for getting and severing though, in many cases, he has been allowed the expense of getting to bank. In my view it cannot be said that the defendant acted fairly and honestly or under a "bona fide belief of title". The belief of title followed the conversion—it did not precede it. No question as to the area demised was raised by the defendant until the conversion was discovered. He cannot be said to have acted "fairly and honestly" when Exhibit 41 gave him clear notice that he had reached the barrier. Nor do I see how he may be held to have acted "inadvertently" or "under a mere mistake." It may be that he was misled by his surveyor who had a malice against him. That was his first line of defence which he put forward to the plaintiff Company. If that were his defence in Court, I would undoubtedly have adopted the milder rule in assessing damages. That defence not having been put forward, I am bound to hold on Exhibit 41 that the defendant has acted deliberately and that the act was a wilful one. Having considered the matter very carefully, I am of opinion that the plaintiff Company is entitled to the value at the pit's mouth of the coal worked and gotten by the defendant from the plaintiff Company's mine, making to the defendant all just allowance for the cost and expenses incurred by him in bringing such coal to the pit's mouth but not including the cost of getting or severing the coal.

We set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and allow this appeal.

The plaintiff Company is entitled to a declaration as aforesaid and to a finding by the Court below (1) as to the damages sustained by the plaintiff Company by reason of the breach of covenant on the part of the defendant and (2) as to the market value at the pit's mouth of the coal worked and gotten by the defendant from the plaintiff Company's mine, making to the defendant all just allowances for the costs and expenses incurred by him in bringing such coal to the pit's mouth but not including the cost of getting or severing the coal. The Court below will try this issue with all convenient speed on the materials in the record without giving parties opportunity to adduce further evidence on the subject and return its finding to this Court within two months from the time it receives the record from this Court.

The plaintiff Company is entitled to costs here and in the Court below from the defendant.

FOSTER, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was between two neighbouring Colliery owners within Mouza Lodna in the district of Manbhum; the plaintiff being the successor-in-interest of the lessor of defendant No. 2 Golap Chander Sarkar (who is since dead, his son being substituted). In 1894 Raja Jay Mangal Singh as proprietor of the whole Parganna of Jharia made a Mokarrari settlement of the underground coal of Mouza Lodna with Jadab Lall Banerji and his partner Ambika Charan Laik by two leases, each covering an eight-anna share dated the 30th July and the 1st August. In 1896 on the 14th April the said firm Laik and Banerji granted a Dar-Mokarrari of 3-annas 3-pies share of Lodna sub-soil to Golap Chander Sarkar whom the plaintiffs style pro forma defendant. This Dar-Mokarrari settlement was the outcome of the mediation of arbitrators in a dispute as to title. In 1899 on the 30th September Golap Chander Sarkar executed a sub-lease of his interest in favour of Ram Lall Sinha, who is also styled pro forma defendant. In 1909 on the 4th February Ram Lall Singh made a settlement of his interest in Lodna with Bepin Behari Bose, who is described in the plaint as the principle defendant. The Mokarrari interest which Laik and Banerji obtained from the Raja in 1894 has also passed by sub infeudation to the plaintiff Company, Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. having in February 1898 executed an indenture admitting that they had acquired a Dar-Mokarrari of Lodna and other villages on behalf of the plaintiff Company from Laik and Banerji. Thus, for all practical purposes, the plaintiff Company may be admitted to be entitled to 16 annas of the sub-soil of Mouza Lodna subject to the lease of 3 annas 3 pies which has now passed to the principal defendant Bepin Behari Bose. The plaintiff alleges trespass by the principal defendant beyond the defendants' boundary, and breach of covenant in respect of a barrier stipulated for in the lease of 1896 to Golap Chander Sarkar: and the Company seeks damages therefor, after a declaration that a red line drawn on a plan marked 'A' (Exhibit 18 in the suit) is the correct boundary between 2.

annas 3-pies share of the defendants and 12-annas 9-pies share of the plaintiffs The alleged encroachments are depicted in a plan marked 'B' attached to the plaint (Exhibit 17-A of the suit).

Before considering the issues which arise in the suit I propose to set out the principal facts which have brought the present dispute into this Court. In this judgment the pages quoted are the pages of the paper book.

On the 26th July 1910, Mr. Thomson, the general manager of the Lodna Colliery, wrote to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., the managing agents of the Company, that he and another had on the date of the letter inspected Babu Bepin Behari Bose's Colliery in Lodna and had asked for the working plan. When only a tracing was produced which shewed the galleries cut off by the line of barrier, his apprehension was aroused that in fact the workings had transgressed the barrier. He then inspected the workings and found that they extended well over the barrier and in places right into the plaintiff's property (Exhibit 4, P. 25). Interviews followed between Turner Morrison & Co. and Babu Bepin Behari in Calcutta. In October Babu Bepin Behari Bose moved his lessor Ram Lal Sinha to appeal to Babu Golap Chander Sarkar to address Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. on the question of the correctness of the south boundary of the 3 annas 3-pies share (P. 148), and thereupon Babu Golap Chander Sarkar wrote a letter to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. requesting them to have the area tested (P. 44). In the following December Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. wrote an important letter, Exhibit 85, to Babu Golap Chander Sarkar definitely refusing to consider the demarcation of the 3-annas 3-pies share and setting out their case in the same manner as it is set out in the plaint. A little more than a month later on the 19th January 1911 the Lodna Colliery Co., Ld., filed a plaint in the Calcutta High Court making Bepin Behari Bose sole defendant (P. 31). In the subsequent proceedings two questions were considered by the Judges sitting on the Original Side, firstly, whether inspection should be granted to the plaintiffs (P. 82), and secondly, whether the Court had jurisdiction (P. 80). Inspection was refused, the defendant Bepin Behari Bose having admitted the correctness of the plan annexed to the plaint in respect of the underground working. The plaint was returned to the plaintiff in the second proceeding on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction; the date of this is 27th February 1912. On the 10th June 1912 the suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Purulia and damages were sought against the principal defendant Bepin Behari Bose, the other defendants being expressly added only pro forma.

The principal defendant Bepin Behari Bose filed a written statement, in which it was contended that the plaintiff had no cause of action and had not clearly stated the time when the alleged cause of action accrued; that the suit was barred by limitation; that the plaintiff had incorrectly described the boundaries of the defendant's demise, the south boundry being in fact a line fixed by arbitrators in 1895 and the north and west boundary being a line of pillars shewing the limits of possession given by his lessor to Golap Chander Sarkar in 1895; that the plan on which the red line is drawn is no part of the lease to Golap Chander Sarkar, is incorrect in itself, was signed by the person connected with Golap Chander Sarkar the demisee only because of misrepresentation, and in any case is not binding upon the defendant Bepin Behari Bose. The defendant denied the alleged trespass and contended that in any case the land coloured red in the plan B (Exhibit 17A of the suit) was part of the defendant's area and so there had been no trespass; that the defendant's acts were always under the inspection and within the knowledge of the plaintiff Company; that the suit based on the covenant for a barrier cannot stand against the defendant, and in any case the arbitrators' line being the proper demarcation, there has been no trespass in respect of the barrier alleged in the plaint; that the two plans are incorrect, and the damages are incorrectly estimated. Golap Chander Sarkar also filed a written statement to approximately the same effect, and he filed with his written statement a plan marked 'A', which is now Exhibit B of the suit and which purports to shew the line fixed by the arbitrators in December 1895. He also pleads non-liability and urges that the plaintiff's 'A' (Exhibit 19) is invalid for want of registration. The written statement of Ram Lall Sinha is in similar terms.

On these pleadings the issues in which questions of fact are involved are Nos. 3, 8 and 16, 13 and 19 as framed in the lower Court. Issue No. 3 refers to the question of limitation, issues Nos. 8 and 16 to the question of trespass, issue No. 13 to the question of breach of covenant and issue No. 19 to the relief to which plaintiff is entitled.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs to each of the defendants on the 30th March 1916. He found that the plaintiff's documents filed with the plaint were incorrect, and he relied upon certain admissions made in the deposition of Mr. Thomson, the Company's local agent. He did not find that the rest of the evidence was sufficiently reliable to prove the plaintiff's alleged boundary. He also relied upon the report and the plans of the Pleader commissioner in the suit and found positively that the defendants had proved that the area demised was bounded in the manner described in the written statements. He also held that the suit was barred by limitation. Against this decision the plaintiff Company has appealed.

Before discussing the pertinent issues, it is necessary to deal as concisely as possible with the facts disclosed in the oral evidence adduced by the parties, reserving, however, for its proper place the question whether the plaintiff's maps, boundary stated and area are correct.

The first witness for the plaintiff is Mr. Thomson. He says that a month after he came to Lodna, that is, in July 1897, he employed one Narendra Nath Mukerjee to demarcate the defendant's block. On behalf of Golap Chander Sarkar, Golap's son, Jatindra Nath Sarkar, was present as agent and representative, and Mr. Thomson himself represented Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. Mr. Thomson first took the position of incline No. 1 within the 12-annas-9-pies share and after measuring 325 feet perpendicular distance therefrom he drew a line on a trace of the revenue survey east and west and found that the area enclosed slightly exceeded 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks; and thereupon he drew another line slightly to the north so as to include the proper area. The reason which impelled him to do this is to be found in this lease of 1896, (Exhibit I) (page 153) to Golap Chander Sarkar, where it is stated that arbitrators had drawn a line at a distance of 325 feet to the north of the Company's incline No. 1, and that the 3 annas 3-pies share represented an area of 190 bighas 7 cottas 7 chattaks on the revenue survey map. After this was done, Narendra Nath Mukerjee planted posts along the line on the ground itself and Mr. Thomson checked the line and found it correct. Thereupon copies of the revenue survey map were prepared shewing the position of the demarcation, and one copy which is Exhibit 18 in the suit was signed by all concerned after Mr. Thomson had written out the certificate thereon. Mr. Thomson describes his discovery of the encroachment in July 1910, and shows how the plaintiff managed to get from the defendant Bepin Behari Bose what he calls the working plans of the defendants (Exhibit 41 and 24). Exhibit 24 was made in 1909, and shows extensive encroachment. Exhibit 41 was originally prepared in 1906 and shews almost no encroachment, there being numerous entries along the edge of the barrier of the words 'stop galleries.' Mr. Thomson says, owing to the rapid inflow of water into the workings on the south he could not test the whole of Exhibit 24, but he took it to be correct; and it is the basis upon which the claim in the plaint is filed and the source from which Exhibits 7A and 17A were taken. This plan Exhibit 24 was made for Bepin Behari Bose by a local surveyor Sudhamoy Dutt, who is plaintiff's witness. Mr. Thomson says that when the negotiations for a compromise fell through in August 1910, the defendants began to dispute the correctness of the area of the defendants' alleged portion. Thereupon Mr. Thomson employed as assistant Mr. Murray in October 1910 to make a plan (Exhibit 9). Mr. Thomson alleges that the barrier being necessary for safety of the plaintiff's Colliery, the plaintiff has had to leave a new barrier adjacent south of the richest seam in Lodna, No. 14, which lies in the western half of the Mouza. In cross-examination Mr. Thomson fared badly; I shall refer to this later in this judgment. I may say that his cross-examination took 7 days and was conducted by a Pleader expert in survey.

The next witness to be considered is Sudhamoy Dutt, who commenced his survey of the defendant's Colliery in April 1909 at the request of the defendant's manager. Exhibit 28 is the plan so made, and it shews the trijunctional point on the river bank as in the enlarged revenue survey map, Exhibit 47. It also showed extensive transgression in the working of the defendant's Colliery beyond the pillar line. Possibly rumours of this discovery by Sudhamoy Dutt may have come to the ears of the plaintiff Company's local employees, and this may be what led to Mr. Thomson's action in July 1910. Sudhamoy states that the extreme southern galleries were so full of water that he had to have them pumped out and even then he had to work in places where the mud was knee deep. The learned Subordinate Judge has discredited this witness's evidence on what appear to me to be insufficient reasons. Another map made by this witness is Exhibit 42. He made this in 1915, on behalf of one P. C. Roy, who had a dispute with the defendant concerning the north-west boundary.

The next witness of importance is Babu Lachmi Narain Sarkar, the Pleader commissioner. I shall discuss his evidence later.

The next witness is Mr. Richardson, the discussion of whose evidence, which is purely technical, I must also defer.

I now come to the defendants' evidence. Golap Chander Sarkar, who was a distinguished Vakil of the Calcutta High Court, was examined on commission. He describes the negotiations which led to his obtaining a leasehold interest in Lodna. It appears that, before the Raja leased to Laik and Banerjee, one Mukta Ram Singh Roy had taken what purported to be a lease of eight annas of Mouza Lodna sub-soil from certain potters (Kumhars), who claimed to have permanent heritable interest on the surface and underneath in eight annas of Mouza Lodna, scattered over various parts of the village. It will be remembered that at that time there was much uncertainty in Bengal in respect of title to the sub-soil. Mukta Ram Singh Roy's claims as lessee ultimately brought him in 1895 into conflict with Laik and Banerjee, who claimed as lessees of the Raja, the Zemindar of Perganna Jharia. There followed a batch of suits under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act; and Exhibit B of this case seems to have been originally a map filed in those suits to indicate the disputed properties. Two Pleaders, Babus Indra Nath Banerjee and Khiti Bhushan Mukherjee, intervened, and in December 1895, a meeting was held at Jharia, at which Babu Golap Chander Sarkar passed a cheque for Rs. 5,200 to Babu Jadab Lal Bannerjee, on the understanding that Golap Chander Sarkar, as owner of a share in Mukta Ram Singh Roy's lease, would be given a lease of a block defined by metes and bounds corresponding to a share of 3 annas 3 pies. The cheque book was shown in Court subsequently (P. 309). It appears from Golap Babu's evidence, and the evidence may be accepted in the absence of any serious contest, that the arbitrators then proceeded to Lodna, and on Exhibit B above mentioned, after measurement of the ground, drew a line 325 feet perpendicularly from the month of incline No. 1 to the north of Jadab Babu's Colliery, Jadab Babu having insisted that this distance should be kept between the incline and the south boundary of the 3-annas 3 pies share. On the line are the initials of Babu Khiti Bhushan Mukherjee and the date. This is the arbitrators' line which the defendants assert was the finally fixed boundary on the south of the defendants' allotted area; and the defendants assert that whether that boundary was correctly or incorrectly laid it was definitely fixed in the lease Exhibit I as the south boundary; the only proviso being that if the line was found when produced to enclose a less area than 190 bighas 7 cotthhs 7 chittaks, the area proportionate to 3-annas 3-pies share, the deficit would be made up to the north-west of the incline, at least 325 feet from the incline, on the selection of the lessee Golap Chander Sarkar. The witness states that after the lease to Golap was executed in the following April, Jadab Babu transferred his whole interest to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., and Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co, wrote inviting him to send a surveyor for measurement according to the terms of their lease, in collaboration with their surveyor. That invitation is Exhibit D (P. 150) and it fixes the date of the joint survey as Saturday the 17th July. In answer to this letter Golap Babu wrote to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. that he reposed full confidence in them and did not propose to send any surveyor, and he asked the Company to measure the land by means of their surveyor, and he sent his son Jatindra Nath Sarkar to be his agent and representative at the locality. His son came back bringing a copy of the survey plan of the Mouza with a line drawn to shew the partition, and the witness adds later that his son, coming back with the plan, stated that possession had been delivered.

The next witness is Jatindra Nath Sarkar. He describes the arbitration in 1895, and says that in July 1897, he went as his father's representative, understanding that the provision in the lease for a survey was about to be fulfilled, that Mr. Thomson drew the line on Exhibit 18, asserting that it contained the stipulated area; on that assertion he signed Exhibit 18. He deposes that all the time he was under the impressior, induced by Mr. Thomson's representations, that the arbitrators' line had been followed as the south boundary. He was then aged only 22 years, and he had failed in the Entrance Examination twice. He did not see the pillars till November or December 1897, and he did not see the boundary first indicated by the posts fixed by Narendra Nath Mukherjee, having left for Calcutta immediately after signing the plan.

The last witness on the defendants' side whose evidence we have to consider is Bepin Behari Bose, the principal defendant. He admits that he had been in possession of the colliery before taking lease from Ram Lall Sinha in 1899, and his deposition and his lease show that he was sharing profits with Ram Lall Sinha during that period (pages 220 and 162). He had in fact made pits, inclines, cooly-shed, offices and installed engines, boilers, pumps, and other permanent stock, before he took the lease. He admits that Sudhamoy Dutt was employed by him to survey the colliery because he wished to develop his property, but he denies that Sudhamoy did the work correctly. Looking at Exhibit 41 he admits that it shews the workings of the collieries as they proceeded, an admission which supports the plaintiff's case that Exhibit 41 shews, besides the condition of affairs in 1906 when it was first prepared by R. C. De, the subsequent workings since the original date of preparation. He explains the entries on this plan Exhibit 41 of the words "stop galleries" by saying that he had stopped further workings in 1906, so that the boundary line should not be transgressed. This statement is irreconcilable with the evidence of Sudhamoy Dutt that in 1909, when Sudhamoy had prepared Exhibit 24, Exhibit 41 was the working plan in use in the colliery. It seems to me very probable that a tracing of Exhibit 41 was what was shewn to Mr. Thomson in the inspection described in Exhibit 4 (page 25). In Exhibit 4 Mr. Thomson announced to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. that he had discovered an extensive encroachment and his suspicions had at first been aroused by the appearance of the tracing shewn to him. In any case, the defendants have not shown any other working plan in the technical sense of the term. The technical sense is that given in the Government of India rules under the Indian Mines Act. Bepin Behari Bose denies that Exhibit 24 has ever been used as a working plan. The working plan prescribed by the Government rules must shew all the workings up to 6 months ago. So if Exhibit 41 was not the working plan at the time of Mr. Thomson's visit and discovery of the encroachment, some other working plan has been kept back behind by the defendants; if it is the working plan, Sudhamoy Dutt's survey of 1909 (Exhibit 24) shews that it was a false document, inasmuch as it showed an incorrect description of southern galleries.

I now come to discuss the issues the decision of which involves the ascertainment of the boundary over which the plaintiff Company alleges trespass. These are issues Nos. 8. and 16. The first question to consider is whether the arbitrators' line on Exhibit B represents the southern boundary as finally settled by the arbitrators and adopted in the lease, Exhibit 1. The defendants' case is that Khiti Bhushan Mukherjee as arbitrator drew perpendicularly a line on Exhibit B at a distance of 325 feet from the mouth of the incline up to a certain point leaving the rest of the line undrawn, so as to allow for a possible deflection southward of the produced line, if the produced line was found to contain less than 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks. This, the defendants say, is the only possible construction of the lease, Exhibit I, and the schedule containing details of boundaries; and it is contended that the survey was prescribed in the lease as the future completion of the lease, and the surveyor was to be bound by this description of the boundary. It seems to me to be inconsistent with the terms of the lease, Exhibit I, to hold that the southern boundary was to be necessarily the arbitrators' line as drawn in part on Exhibit B. The defendant argues that Exhibit 18 is a document outside the lease and quite irrelevant when Exhibit I taken with Exhibit B shows the completed contract. The mention of a future survey was, he would urge, a provision for a purely ministerial work, and the surveyor could not travel outside the line and the instructions fixed by the parties. As I read the lease, Exhibit I, with its schedule "Details of boundaries," I am of opinion that the necessary boundaries are fixed in the first part of the schedule, ending with the south boundary "remaining 12-annas 9-pies share of Mouza Lodna." My reason for this opinion is that in the lease of 1899 executed by Golap Chander Sarkar in favour of Ram Lall Sinha (page 74) the demised land is described as delineated in the plan attached to the deed which was a copy of Exhibit 18, and the boundaries scheduled in that document correspond to the boundaries in the first part of the schedule in Exhibit I. A perusal of Exhibit 83, the lease to Ram Lall Sinha, must indicate to any one that the parties to that lease had before them Exhibit I; for the text of the lease is in many respects a repetition of the text of Exhibit I. As to the rest of the scheduled description of boundaries of Exhibit I, it seems to me that read with the body of the lease, its purport is that a competent surveyor had yet to define the boundary on a copy of the revenue survey map and put the boundary pillars on the ground according to that boundary line so fixed. I say, on a copy of the revenue survey map, because the text of the lease shews that the parties had fixed the area according to the revenue survey area and had allotted the amount proportionate to the 3-annas 3-pies share (P. 155. LL. 11-20). I also take the schedule to indicate to the future surveyor that the south boundary must not come within 325 feet of the arbitrators' line. If his calculation of the area comes so far south as to be identical with the arbitrators' line and encloses less than 190 bighas 7 cottas and 7 chattaks, then the lessee's area will be made up by land which the lessee may select to the northwest of the incline. On this consideration I disagree with the principal respondent's two contentions, that the arbitrators' line is final, and that any plan such as Exhibit 18 shewing another line for the south boundary would be outside the lease and null and void for want of registration. So I hold that the lease, Exhibit I, was not intended by the parties to be self-contained, and the arbitrators' line was not necessarily the south boundary.

I come now to the question whether as the plaintiff maintains Exhibit 18, the plan made on the 21st September 1897, and the pillar line on the ground are in fact the complement of the lease, and represent the fulfilment of the contract contained in Exhibit I for future survey and demarcation. We have the lease before us (P. 153), and it seems useless and in fact incorrect method to make deductions from passages here and there. The whole document must be read and each passage taken in relation with the rest of the lease. One thing, however, is clear and outstanding in the lease, Exhibit I, namely that the parties regarded the south boundary as still undetermined, and agreed that delineation upon a map and erection of the pillars were necessary to make complete and certain the quantity and position of the land demised, and that this was required, in the words of the lease, "to prove the identity of the land demised."

Evidently the parties wanted something concrete and definite which they could check and correct if necessary. The details as to the field book and so forth were ancillary to the main intention. In his deposition, Babu Golap Chander Sarkar expressly states that he left the whole matter to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., and I take this to mean that he had at the time no intention of making an independent survey to check the demarcation on the ground; if this is correct, we can understand why Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. were not asked to submit a field book. Exhibit D shews that the survey was fixed to take place on Saturday the 17th July 1897 (page 150). Apparently, in the absence of any statement to the contrary, we must take it that this date was adhered to. Now, Exhibit 18 is dated the 20th July and that date stands below the signature of Jatindra Nath Sarkar as well as the other signatories. It seems, therefore, there is some corroboration for Mr. Thomson's account of what took place, and that Jatindra's attempt in his deposition to reduce the period of his visit to the village is not acceptable. Mr. Thomson took a tracing of the revenue survey map and first drew a line at a distance of 325 feet from incline No. 1. On extracting the area he found it exceeded 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks by something less than 10 bighas, so he moved the line north-west till it stood at 363 feet north of the incline. This trace was then given to the surveyor employed by Mr. Thomson, Narendra Nath Mukherjee, who surveyed the line upon the ground and planted wooden posts. When this was completed, Exhibit 18 was prepared and signed by the parties. The subscription on Exhibit 18 is of the utmost importance. Jatindra Nath Sarkar accepts the boundary coloured red laid down in his presence as correctly enclosing 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks. Mr. Thomson, who was responsible for the map, certified that the area was correctly shown. Narendra Nath Mukherjee, the surveyor, certified that he had put down the boundary according to the red line. This certificate of Narendra Nath Mukherjee indicates the truth of the plaintiff's assertion that Jatindra Nath Sarkar was present at the laying of the posts and did not leave the village till this part of the work was completed. Mr. Thomson says that when the line of posts was laid, he himself checked it. After the preparation of Exhibit 18 Narendra Nath Mukherjee proceeded to substitute stone pillars for the posts and completed the task in two days. There is no suggestion that the stone pillars were placed otherwise than on the site of the wooden posts. The defendants' objection that Narendra Nath Mukherjee should have been called as witness by the plaintiff is met by the appellant's uncontradicted statement that Narendra was subpœnaed but did not appear. Obviously the whole of this transaction could not have been completed without survey on the ground, and I fail to understand how the defendants can assert that everything was done on the office table and not on the field. The suggestion rests merely on the statement of Jatindra Nath Sarkar.

It is also quite clear from the evidence that this transaction of the 17th to the 20th July 1897 included the delivery of possession according to the pillars on the ground. On pages 177 and 191 Golap Chander Sarkar is seen to have made admissions, already quoted, to this effect when examined on commission. Read with with all this Exhibit 55 (p. 67) dated the 23rd July 1910 must be Golap Babu's receipt for the plan corresponding to Exhibit 18 sent by Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. On the following 17th October 1910 Babu Golap Chander Sarkar forwarded to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. a letter from Ram Lall Sinha stating that Bepin Behari Bose had recently surveyed the lease-hold property and found that the area within the pillars amounted to only 175 bighas; and he asked for a re-adjustment of the pillar boundary on the south. Golap Chander Sarkar added in this letter: "I may be permitted to add that although my lease relating to 3-annas 5-gandas share of the Lodna coal land had been executed by Babu Jadab Lall and others before they sold their right to you, yet I obtained actual possession of my share of the land after you had been put into possession. In fact it was your surveyor who measured the land allotted to me and as I had and still have full confidence in the officers of respectable English merchants like your honourable selves, I did not think it necessary to have a surveyor on my behalf to be there to test the correctness of the measurement." (Exhibit C and Exhibit 32 pages 148 and 44.)

It seems likely that in a transaction so described the parties relied rather upon the pillar line than upon the meagre small scale tracing Exhibit 18. The parties were in effect making a partition of a valuable seam of coal, and every foot more or less involved far more than a partition of the surface. There is ample expert evidence on the record to shew that the thickness of a line of the scale of Exhibit 18 (that is, the revenue survey scale of 1320 feet to the inch) corresponds to a width on the ground of 30 feet. Thus as the learned Counsel for the respondants puts it, we can visualize a line on the revenue survey map as something like a road 30 feet wide. There is also expert evidence to the effect that scaling out and extraction of area from the small scale revenue survey maps are matters of great delicacy which require experience and the use of a magnifying glass. In the circumstances it seems to me that the parties, whilst making Exhibit 18 part of the paper document of the lease, were far more interested in the pillar line upon the ground. The defendants raised the contention, in the course of the trial in the original Court, that the pillar line must on the evidence be taken to be something different from the red line in Exhibit 18; and the learned Subordinate Judge refused to allow the plaintiffs to amend the plaint by substituting the words 'pillar line' for 'red line'. Whatever the merits of this order may be, the reasons given are in my opinion unsatisfactory. In my opinion the plaintiff need not have troubled to amend the plaint, if he could shew that the 'red line' and the 'pillar line' were identical. The respondents' contention is discredited by the facts that they relied upon the Commissioner's report as correct, and that the Commissioner in his small scale map put the line of pillars upon the 'red line'. (In this connection the original map and not the copies should be seen, and the survey lines should be distinguished from the boundary line.) No doubt the Commissioner asserts that the 'pillar line' on the ground is deflected between the last but one and last westernmost pillars. But the plaintiff appellant points out that the extreme westernmost pillar has disappeared and admits that the 'pillar line' runs perfectly straight. So here the Commissioner made a mistake, somewhat similar to the mistake which he corrected on the eastern extremity of the said line. Two years after the pillars were put down by Narendra Nath Mukherjee, Golap Chander Sarkar leased the share to Ram Lall Sinha and attached a plan, a copy of Exhibit 18, to that lease as part of it, stating that it correctly shewed the area of 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks of which he had taken settlement and was in possession and enjoyment: I have already quoted Exhibit C and Exhibit 32 as showing admissions by Golap Babu and Ram Lall Sinha that the pillar line was the south boundary. We also find that in 1902 Golap Chander Sarkar, in order to assure his title, took from the sons of Mukta Ram Singh Roy a deed of release in respect of 3 annas 3 pies, and in that document, the south boundary is described as the boundary pillars of the remaining 12-annas 9-pies share of Mouza Lodna. This is Exhibit 25 (p. 37), and the whole document contains a summary of the history of what had happened up to the completion of the lease by Jadab Babu to Golap Chander Sarkar. So much for the admissions of and evidence against the defendants Golap Chander Sarkar and Ram Lal Sinha on this point. Golap Babu's son, who is now a defendant, states in his evidence (p. 213): "by the 'red line' in plan Exhibit 18 I understand 'pillar line' on the ground...I all along knew that the pillar line was the southern boundary line until in 1910 I came to know that the area was short". The evidence against the defendant Bepin Behari Bose on this point is still stronger. In the Calcutta High Court the plaintiff filed Exhibit 18 and Exhibit 7A, the latter showing the actual encroachment underground. Exhibit 18 shows the 'red line' and Exhibit 7A shows the 'pillar line'; from this it is clear that the plaintiff regarded the red line and the pillar line as identical, and nowhere in the pleadings in the Calcutta High Court or in the Purulia Subordinate Judge's Court do we find any assertion that the plaintiff was wrong in assuming the identity of the two lines. In Exhibit 87 (p. 82) we find that Bepin Behari Bose admits in a proceeding in the High Court that the plan Exhibit 7A correctly shows the workings, and that the defendant has overstepped the boundaries set up by the plaintiff, but not the defendants' proper boundary. Here we find no assertion that the 'pillar line' is any different from the red line. In his evidence in Court Bepin Behari Bose states, 'I took lease of 190 bighas of land covered by the pillar line on three sides, the river being on the east' (page 222). The defendants assert that the plaintiffs have introduced a new case, but a reference to Exhibit 85, dated the 9th December 1910, (page 79) and to the third paragraph of the petition of objection to appointment of the Commissioner, dated the 31st March 1914, shows that the case of the plaintiff is not a new one (pages 7[illegible] and 276). After this it seems unnecessary to labour the question whether the parties have always regarded the pillar line and the red line the line on the ground and the line, on the map, as identical. Mr. Thomson no doubt made some damaging admissions on this point, but I do not think this sufficient to prove that the Commissioner was wrong when he marked the two lines as identical on his small scale map. The small difference on the westernmost end of the line in that map is after all away from the part of the boundary over which the plaintiffs assert a trespass.

If the parties contemplated the reservation of 30 feet of barrier to which each was to contribute 15 feet, it is difficult to see how they could have carried out the agreement without something on the surface of the earth to guide them. The expert evidence shows that a barrier between coal mines is regarded as a very important matter, and it would be absurd to think that the parties working underneath would have each to take in hand his copy of Exhibit 18 with its small scale and meagre figures, and survey underground in order to fix the limits of the barrier. The pillar line on the surface would give practical and intelligible guidance to the two colliery owners, which would be a common basis between the parties and which would afford a clear and easy means of comparison between the distance from the pillar line to the mouth of any incline and from the mouth of that incline to the furthest gallery. Thus it seems to me that the red line and the pillar line, being identical, taken with the lease Exhibit I, furnish a complete and satisfactory means of identifying the demised property. This fact must have been recognised by the lessees in the two subsequent sub-leases, and those lessees had their own interest to consider. It is significant that the first specific assertion that the area included was different from the area mentioned in Exhibit I, was made in October 1910, two months after Mr. Thomson had charged the defendant with trespass (Exhibit C, page 148). No doubt on Exhibit 24, Sudhamoy Dutt's map prepared in 1909, we see the south line described as 'boundary line (disputed)', but that is insufficient to prove that the question of area was pressed before October 1910. The defendant may have had this entry on Exhibit 24 made when he found that the result of his surveyor's survey was such as was likely to get him into trouble with the plaintiffs. But the dispute as to boundaries and area evidently first took a definite shape in October 1910. Under the circumstances it seems to me that the onus has shifted upon the defendants to show that their block as described in Exhibit 18 and by the pillar line contains less than the stipulated area, 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chittaks. To establish this the defendants rely upon the Commissioner's report and Mr. Thomson's admissions, as well as certain other evidence which, they assert, proves that the plaintiffs are relying upon a boundary line on the north of the block which does not in fact exist. Taking the first Pleader Commissioner's evidence, we see that that gentleman was of opinion that he was not directed by the Court to enquire and report whether the trijunctional pillars shewn in his map tallied with those depicted in the revenue survey map. So he apparently took the visible pillars as they were pointed out by the parties, and took the sites of those pillars which had disappeared according as the parties, one or other or both, indicated them. As to the important north east trijunctional point between Khas Jharia, Lodna and Pandeberra (his station 10) he states—and the statement appears to be a true one—that Mr. Thomson himself indicated the site, pointing to a sunken rail on a tramway bank and asserting that the trijunctional pillar lay 20 feet below the surface. Quite incorrectly he asserts that there is only one trijunctional point on the north-east, namely that at station 10, but here he is contradicted by defendants' witness Mahanando Uppadhaya and by the Mouza boundary lines in the revenue survey maps, which, however, are on so small scale and cover so small space at these two points that they require study with the magnifying glass or with the aid of a certified professional enlargement, such as Exhibit 47. I attach great weight to this last named map. Both in arguments in Court and in the evidence the same error has been committed by taking the picture of a pillar on the revenue survey map to be the sole indication of the trijunctional point. Here the two pillars being only about 130 feet apart, it was natural for the surveyors to put one pillar to serve as the picture of both, the real trijunctional points being indicated by the lines of boundaries of adjacent villages. It was this mistake which led the Commissioner to exclude, as he admits he excluded, the portion north of the line 10—R from the village area. As regards the point 10 he trusted to Mr. Thomson's conjecture. Now a reference to his instructions will shew that he was directed to ascertain the northern and western boundaries of Mouza Lodna (p. 280) and he was given a revenue survey map Exhibit 23 by the Court (p. 143, L 28). So it seems that he was under a misapprehension of the instructions when he did not find out the northern boundary by survey. The only trustworthy source that he had of information as to the trijunctional points was Exhibit 22, and he subsequently, when preparing his report, was given another revenue survey map, Exhibit 46. Mr. Richardson, who is undoubtedly an expert of considerable experience, has prepared and put in a map Eexhibit 28, which shews that the trijunctional point of Khas Jharia, Lodna and Pandeberra does not lie at point 10 as indicated by the Commissioner but at some distance away north-east, and that this mistake has resulted in a dislocation of the entire northern boundary. The Commissioner himself estimated the difference in area to be 14 bighas 13 cottahs 5 chattaks. Mr. Richardson's evidence is uncontradicted. All that the Commissioner states is that the north line which he has drawn and the north line according to the revenue survey map are 'practically' the same. It is difficult to see how he can maintain such a position, especially when in his small scale map he appears to have followed the revenue survey; and the result is that the trijunctional point when put upon the Commissioner's large scale map from his small scale map will be in a different position from point 10. In this connection his cross-examination at P. 141 is important. He says that the two points, i. e., the point on the small scale map and the point on the large scale map are only 38 feet apart and a distance of 38 feet cannot be shown on the small scale map; but he does not meet Mr. Richardson's finding that the error has caused the entire north boundary, as shewn by the Commissioner in his large scale map, to fall considerably south of the real revenue survey boundary line. Another mistake has resulted from his error which is of great importance in the case. This is that the angle formed by a line from the trijunctional point to the eastern extremity of the partition line, also called the red line, and the partition line itself, must vary. So if the Commissioner's trijunctional point be taken, the partition line is dislocated and must be drawn in such a way as to pass south of the red line and the pillar line, which as I have found above must be taken to be identical.

Now a study of Exhibits 45, 44, L, I, A, 83, 54 and 25 will shew that almost invariably the northern boundary was described as the limits of the adjacent Mouza, and there is no means shewn on the record of finding those limits except by the use of the revenue survey and the Thakbust map. The revenue survey map, Exhibit 23, contains a certificate that it has been compared with the Thakbust map (Exhibit 49). The defendants suggest that there are boundary pillars of Mouza Lodna on the north erected by Babu Jadab Lal Bannerjee, but the evidence consists in some vague statements of the witness Mahananda Upadhya and a passage in Exhibit L. This evidence leaves us uncertain where these pillars were put, and how many are still in existence. Moreover, in Exhibit I, there is no mention of any north boundary other than the boundary of Lodna Mouza itself, and Exhibit I mentions the revenue survey map as the basis for calculating the area of the 3 annas 3 pies share. Moreover, in Exhibit B which the defendants would call a part of their title deeds, the northern boundary would be north of the Commissioner's north boundary (P. 138, ll. 1-7) Again, it is to be remembered that the defendants' rights as sub-lessees are derived from the original lease by the Zemindar to Babu Jadab Lal Bannerjee and Ambika Charan Laik, and that the whole series of transactions, leases and sub-leases, refer to underground rights and not surface rights. Thus it is only reasonable to suppose that the leases and sub-leases had regard to the Zemindari property in the sub-soil, and not to the rights on the surface, such as those of cultivators and tenure-holders. If the revenue survey map is correct, it is a good indication of the Zemindar's possession in the years 1851-1862, and to that extent good evidence of the title of the Zemindar. Certainly the lessees and sub-lessees of the Zemindar would be entitled to use this evidence against any persons overstepping the boundary of the revenue Mouza. For all these reasons I hold that no importance can be attached to the Commissioner's map and report.

The mistake as to the trijunctional point on the north-east was shared by Mr. Thomson, and there was also this additional complication that there was another important pillar lost, namely, the westernmost pillar of the partition line. The partition line should have been drawn approximately straight, and not with a deflection at the last but one pillar on the west. Mr. Thomson's cross-examination was largely founded upon the position of these two points, namely, the trijunctional pillar at the north-east and the last partition pillar on the west; and he was driven to admissions that his map Exhibit 18 was incorrect on comparing it with other maps. The maps which shew approximately the correct angle are Exhibit 18, Exhibit 24, Exhibit 16A and Exhibit 42 (Point D). The error as to the position of this trijunctional point seems to have arisen in 1910. On the revenue survey maps the angle can only be calculated if the partition line be laid thereon, and Mr. Thomson certainly made a damaging admission in Court when he so found the angle on Exhibit 23 and estimated it by means of a protractor at 49 degrees 50 minutes. I take this to be what is meant on page 101, line 13. The estimate of an angle on a small scale map in Court by a witness under examination in the witness-box is no easy matter; and in any circumstances it is a task of great delicacy and requiring some experience. Mr. Pugh for the appellants contends that the angle so stated by Mr. Thompson is incorrect; but on the other hand, it is pertinent to ask why the mistake was not cleared up. On the other hand Mr. Richardson's evidence and his map Exhibit 28 must be given very great importance. Mr. Thomson was driven into finding certain errors in distances and angles, and then he was asked whether he still considered the map to be correct. Quite logically he answered "No." This answer obtained for the defendants the great advantage of having upon the record what appeared to be repudiation of the whole map. So it is very necessary to consider what were Mr. Thomson's reservations. These are to be found on page 101, where he states that his answers are given on the basis of data put before him by the cross-examining Pleader. In his re-examination he states that he considers these data to be certainly not satisfactory or certain. I now proceed to trace those data. The first part of the cross-examination of Mr. Thomson at page 95 results in an admission that Exhibit 16A does not agree with the revenue survey map. Exhibit 16A is a map which Mr. Thomson had had tested by his subordinate, Mr. Murray, in 1910, when the defendants had raised the question of inadequacy of area and had sent the plaintiffs this map, Exhibit 16A. Mr. Murray's map is Exhibit 9. Read in its context, the evidence seems to be that Exhibit 16A is different from the revenue survey in two respects, namely, that it shews no trijunctional pillars and that it was tested by Mr. Murray in Exhibit 9 and found correct. Mr. Thomson also says that Exhibit 16A agrees with the Commissioner's map. Both these statements are somewhat incorrect, for the angle at the eastern extremity of the partition line in Exhibit 16A differs from the angle in Exhibit 9, Mr. Murray's map. Evidently Mr. Murray was in the same error as Mr. Thomson in thinking that the sunken rail on the tram line corresponded with the trijunctional point. The Commissioner also made the same mistake. So the two admissions of Mr. Thomson are of little value, if we are to search for the real truth. Then the cross-examining Pleader took Mr. Thomson to Exhibit 9, and by working around the north-east trijunctional point he obtained an admission that Mr. Murray's map disagreed with the revenue survey map and with Exhibit 18. It is significant that the cross-examining Pleader kept Mr. Thomson's attention concentrated on points where the disappearance of pillars has caused some doubt as to the position of the points. On Exhibit 18 there are shown three trijunctional points on the east side of Lodna, one the disputed and doubtful one, and the other two undisputed. If the test was to be convincing, the cross-examining Pleader should surely have proceeded from the undisputed points, where the pillars are now in existence. Mr. Thomson had been responsible for Exhibit 9, as it was part of his report to his employers, and so he is ready to repudiate any map that does not agree with it. So on page 97 he rejects Exhibit 17A, the ferro print filed with the plaint showing the encroachment, which was drawn from Exhibit 24. The slight difference between these two maps is indicated by the vanished pillar on the western extremity of the boundary line. After this, further admissions were extracted from the witness that Mr. Murray's Exhibit 9 does not agree with the revenue survey map, Exhibit 23; here again the source of the difference is to be found at the point D, that is, the trijunctional point, and also in the fact that Exhibit 9 shows an error in that part of the boundary line on the west which is outside the disputed area of this case, (that is, the part between the last existing pillar and the pillar which has disappeared from the extremity). Mr. Thomson fixed a point C-3 on Exhibit 9 as the correct west extremity of the partition line, taking distances from various points and comparing them with the distances derived from the revenue survey map, Exhibit 23, which he had in his hands; all this time, it is clear, his mind did not advert to or realise the misapprehension that he and Mr. Murray had laboured under in regard to the position of the north-east trijunctional point. He could not put his finger on the source of the error. This point C. 3 must under the circumstances be taken to be an entirely imaginary point having no connection with facts. It is derived from absolutely incorrect data, namely, the position of points on the north boundary line of Mr. Murray's map. Mr. Murray's whole north boundary line is just as much open to exception as the Commissioner's line. These discussions show how little weight can be attached to the data which led Mr. Thomson to say that Exhibit 18 cannot agree with the original which he prepared in July 1897 in the presence of Jatindra Nath Sarkar. It will be remembered that there was an original and two copies of Exhibit 18. The data are (1) the angle at the eastern extremity of the partition line in Exhibit 18, (2) the corresponding angle on the revenue survey map and (3) the position of the western extremity indicated on Mr. Murray's map by the figures C-3. In the face of Mr. Richardson's evidence, and after a study of the maps, I am of opinion that the defendants cannot reasonably claim that Mr. Thomson's admissions amount to conclusive evidence that a less area than 190 bighas 7 cottahs 7 chattaks is included between the south boundary line as delineated in Exhibit 18 and the north and west boundaries as shown by the revenue survey maps and the east boundary, the eastern bank of the Chatkori river. At page 102 he admits that if he takes Exhibit 18 by itself he cannot assert that the defendants have been guilty of any encroachment. I have already shewn that taking Exhibit 18 with other maps such as Exhibit 24 and Exhibits 7A and 17A, the defendants must be held to be guilty of encroachment.

It is convenient here to sum up my findings of fact.

I find that at the conference in December 1895, the arbitrators decided that Golap Chandra Sarkar should on payment of a premium be entitled to a sub-lease of a block of land on the north of Lodna Mouza equivalent to 3 annas 3 pies share. The only stipulation made by Babu Jadab Lal Bannerjee on his own side was that the south boundary of the new parcel to be allotted to Golap Babu should not pass within 325 feet of Jadab Babu's incline No. 1. This agreement resulted in the lease and counterpart Exhibits I and A executed in April and July 1897. The document of the lease was completed in July 1897 by Exhibit 18, signed by the parties, and possession was given at the same time after demarcation on the ground. I find that the arbitrators' line was not necessarily the south boundary, and that in fact the lease Exhibit I and the map Exhibit 18 leave no doubt as to the situation and boundaries of the land demised, and I hold that the said land can be easily identified. I find that the defendants are bound by the document so completed, and that the south limits of their parcel are clearly indicated on the ground by the line of pillars which is indentical with the red line on the map. The boundaries so fixed have been always recognised as such by the parties in their dealings with each other and with others. I find that the defendants' attempt to shew that they have less than the stipulated area 190 bigha 7 cottahs 7 chattaks must fail, as their arguments depend on data, which to say the least are extremely uncertain, for instance, the position of the missing trijunctional pillar of Khas Jharia, Lodna and Pandeberra, and the missing pillar on the west extremity of the partition-line. The Exhibits 17A, 7A and 24 correctly show the defendants' workings.

It follows from the above conclusions that the defendants have trespassed and abstracted the coal and have also contravened the covenant for a barrier contained in Exhibit I, the principal lease. The plaintiffs' case on this point rests on the evidence and the survey (1909) of Sudhamoy Dutt, the defendants' surveyor. The plaintiffs after discovery of the encroachment on the 25th July 1910 (page 25) called for the working plans (page 26), and received from Bepin Behari Bose Exhibit 41, which is undoubtedly a working plan, and Exhibit 24, which Bepin Behari Bose says is not his working plan (page 222, L. 11). Mr. Thomson attempted to check by survey on his own part the defendants' "new plan" (Exhibit 6, page 26), but Exhibit 7 shows that the rise of water in the galleries hindered the work (page 27). But the partial survey showed that Sudhamoy's plan Exhibit 24 was correct so far, and the plaintiffs accepted it, and prepared Exhibit 7A and 17A therefrom. These were filed with the plaints in the High Court and in Purulia. In the High Court proceedings (page 82) we see that the plaintiffs asked for inspection and Bepin Behari Bose resisted on the ground that he wished to keep the water where it was (page 170), and he entered an admission that the plan annexed to the plaint correctly shewed the underground workings by which he had raised coal (page 82). All this is corroborated by oral and documentary evidence; and the defendant, although he now denies the correctness of the plans (Exhibits 7A and 17A), does not produce any good evidence to meet the evidence of Mr. Thomson and Sudhamoy Dutt. I hold that the defendant has in fact trespassed and abstracted the coal and has broken the barrier. In my opinion the dates of these acts of the defendant cannot be ascertained from the evidence, except that they must fall between April 1909 and July 1910; but the defendants are the persons who have special knoweldge of the dates and are keeping it back, and who, moreover, are proved, without any evidence to the contrary, to have shown Mr. Thomson a working plan (probably a tracing of Exhibit 41), which was incomplete and fraudulently misleading.

I am not discussing the issues on purely legal points. I agree fully with the judgment of my learned brother and with the order proposed.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 23, sub-sec. (1), cl. (1)—Market value of land, what is—Tenure-holder, value of interests of—Tenancy, precarious nature of—Method of valuation—Commercial value to be preferred to abstract legal rights.

The market value of land is the price that an owner willing, and not obliged, to sell might reasonably expect to obtain from a willing purchaser with whom he was bargaining for the sale and purchase of the land. [p. 151, col. 1.]

In determining the amount to be awarded as the market value of the interests of a tenure-holder and the sub-tenants under him in land acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, in respect of which the rent was enhanced prior to the acquisition and a premium paid to the landlord in lieu of higher rent, the tenure-holder is entitled to the capitalized value of the rent as enhanced in addition to the amount paid as premium. [p. 151, col. 2.]

The fact that a tenancy is of a precarious nature, that is to say, is held by tenants-at-will with no transferable interest in the land, and who may at any time be called upon by the tenure-holder to leave the land, is no justification for the conclusion that the interests of these tenants have no market value, especially where it is found that frequent sales of their interests have taken place and substantial prices realized. In such cases it is the commercial value of the rights, and not abstract legal rights, that must be looked at in determining the market value of such rights. [p. 151, col. 2; p. 152, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

NOS. 19 AND 40 OF 1918.

These appeals are directed against the award made in a Land Acquisition Case in respect of land acquired at Serajgunj for the purpose of the Sara Serajgunj Railway. We are concerned in these appeals with two sets of claimants, one is a tenure-holder (Hem Chandra Choudhury) and the others are sub-tenants, described as merchant tenants, in actual occupation of the land acquired. The appeal preferred by the Roy Choudhuries, the merchant tenants, relates only to one plot of land. The appeal preferred by the Choudhury tenure-holder includes that parcel as also other parcels of land We shall at this stage consider the parcel of land included in the appeal by the merchant tenants and if the other lands included in the appeal preferred by the tenure-holder require separate consideration, we shall discuss the matter hereafter.

The question before this Court is the determination of the market value of the land required, within the meaning of section 23, sub section 1, clause (1) of the Land Acquisition Act It has been pointed out in judicial decisions in Bombay and in this Court [Collector of Belgaum v. Bhimrao (1), Bombay Improvement Trust v. Jalbhoy (2), Government of Bombay v. Esufali Salebhai (3) and

Dunia Lal v. Gopi Nath (4)] that the value of land should ordinarily be determined as a whole and the question of apportionment of the compensation awarded amongst claimants of different degrees should thereafter be taken into consideration. This view, however, has not always been accepted in practice and the procedure adopted in the case before us has been followed as a matter of convenience, namely, that the market value of the interests claimed by persons who held interests of different degrees in the property acquired has been determined successively and independently of each other. Now what is the market value either of the land as a whole or of a specific interest in the land acquired? Reference may usefully be made to the two definitions given in two of the reported cases, namely, the cases of Bombay Improvement Trust v. Jalbhoy (2) and Kailas Chandra v. Secretary of State for India (5). In the former case, the market value of land was stated to mean the price which would be obtainable in the market for that concrete parcel of land with its particular advantages and its particular drawbacks, both the advantage and the drawback being estimated rather with reference to commercial value than with reference to any abstract legal rights. In the second case the market value of land was described as the price that an owner willing, and not obliged, to sell might reasonably expect to obtain from a willing purchaser with whom he was bargaining for the sale and purchase of the land; in other words, the price which it will bring when it is offered for sale by one who desires, but is not obliged, to sell and is bought by one who is under no necessity of having it [Wernicke v. Secretary of State (6)].

Now, let us determine the market value of the interests of the tenure-holder and the sub-tenants under him, in the case before us. The land acquired falls into two classes. One portion of about 4 bighas and 2 cottas is described as Bazar land and the remainder about 6 bighas 5 cottas is described as back land. As regards land of former class, which has a frontage of 385 cubits and is also described as front land, the Collector has awarded to the tenure-holder the capitalized value of the rent actually recovered by him from the sub-tenants. It has been contended before us on behalf of the tenure-holder that this is not adequate. On the other hand, on behalf of the Secretary of State, we have been pressed to take the view that the sum awarded is really more than adequate. It is pointed out that some years ago when the tenant in occupation transferred his interest in the land to the present occupant, the rent was increased from 4 annas a cubit to 6 annas a cubit; that is, from Rs. 24 a bigha to Rs. 36 a bigha. The Senior Government Pleader has contended that it is not probable that the rent can be further increased and that consequently the capitalised value of the present rent, which is the rent actually levied for more than 10 years, is adequate compensation to the tenure-holder. This argument may be conceded to be not without weight, but it does not take into account one important element in the case. When the rent was enhanced from 4 annas a cubit to 6 annas a cubit, a premium was paid by the new tenant to the landlord at the rate of Rs. 192 per bigha, in other words, the landlord at the time took the premium and did not claim a higher rent as he might well have done if no premium had been paid. Consequently, it is not sufficient to award to the tenure-holder the capitalized value of the rent as then settled. In our opinion the amount awarded to him should be increased by Rs. 192 per bigha. In respect of the back land, which is also described as agricultural land, the award has been made on the basis of the rent at present levied, namely, Rs. 10 per bigha. The tenure-holder does not claim any additional amount in respect of this land.

We have now to take into consideration the case of the merchant tenants. The Court below in concurrence with the Collector has not awarded them any compensation. The ground for this decision is that the tenancies of these persons are of so precarious a nature, that they cannot be deemed to have any market value. It has been found on the evidence that the merchant tenants are tenants-at-will and that they have no transferable interest in the land. They may at any time be called upon by the tenure holder to leave the land; and if they transfer the land the transferee is not entitled to retain possession against the wishes of the superior landlord. In our opinion these facts do not necessarily justify the conclusion that the interest of these merchant tenants has no market value. It is conceivable that under the circumstances mentioned no buyer can be found in the open market for these lands; and if that had been established as a fact, the position might well have been maintained that their interest has no market value. But as was pointed out in the case of Bombay Improvement Trust v. Jalbhoy (2), in the determination of the question of market value we have to look to the commercial value rather than to abstract legal rights. It has been established by the evidence beyond the possibility of a doubt that although the interest of these merchant tenants is so precarious that they themselves and their transferees may be compelled to leave the land at the will of the superior landlord, still their interest in the land is frequently sold and substantial prices are paid by the purchasers. The purchasers thereupon approach the landlord and get his consent to the sale, sometimes upon payment of premiums and sometimes upon payment of increased rent. In these circumstances it is impossible for us to hold that these merchant tenants have an interest in land which has no market value. We are not concerned with the motive which induces the intending purchaser to acquire title to such precarious interests in land. We are concerned with the unquestionable fact that such sales are common; and they are common because purchasers are able in usual course to secure recognition from the landlord. The conclusion appears to us to be inevitable that compensation must be awarded to the merchant tenants in respect of their interest in the land acquired. Here considerable difficulty presents itself. The case in the Court below was not approached from the point of view which has presented itself to us in this Court, and the evidence as to the value realised on the occasion of sales is not only conflicting but of a somewhat doubtful nature. The prices stated in several of the conveyances included the value of the interest in the land as also of structures on the properties conveyed and sometimes the value of the good will of the business which was carried on there. In such circumstances, a remand and retrial would ordinarily be inevitable, but the parties have wisely come to the conclusion that no useful purpose would be served by a remand for a fresh enquiry. At their request we have decided to act as assessors ourselves and to make an award on the basis of such materials as are on the record. Our decision is that the merchant tenants should have, in respect of the bazar lands, Rs. 400 a bigha, and for the back or agricultural land, Rs. 200 a bigha; to this will be added the usual statutory allowance. As between the Secretary of State on the one hand and the tenure-holders and the merchant tenants on the other, the costs will be proportional. As between the tenure-holder and the tenants under him, there will be no order for costs either here or in the Court below.

(4) 22 C. 820.

(6) 2 Ind. Cas. 562; 13 C. W. N. 1046.

F. A. No. 40 of 1918.

One of the plots in this appeal is also the subject-matter of Appeal No. 19 of 1918 and has already been dealt with in our judgment in that case. We have now to deal with the other plots included in this appeal. The award in favour of the tenure holder in respect of these plots will be modified according to the rates stated in our judgment already delivered. There will be the same order for costs.

F. A. No. 41 of 1918.

In this case the compensation granted to the tenure holder will be increased on the basis of our judgment in First Appeal No. 19 of 1918. Costs will be in proportion. Hearing fee Rs. 200.

KESHRIMAL v. KIDHAI.

In a conveyance, by sale, of land a convenant for quiet enjoyment and freedom from encumbrances should, in the absence of any express covenant on the point and independently of the Transfer of Property Act, be held to be implied, as being in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. [p. 153, col. 2.]

Where there is no prescribed general law to which the decisions of a Court must conform, and the Court must proceed according to justice, equity and good conscience, the Court may follow the principles of English Law applicable to a similar state of circumstances. [p. 153, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the appellate decree, in Civil Appeal No. 77 of 1917, decided by the Additional District Judge, Akola, on 26th April 1918, reversing the decree of the Sub-Judge, Buldana, in Civil Suit No. 153 of 1916, dated the 6th February 1917.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir Bepin Krishna Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts material for the purposes of this appeal are as follows. Bhowanji, the husband of defendant No. 1, and Piraji, defendant No. 2, sold a 1/3rd share in a survey number to Amolakchand now deceased. The plaintiff, as the legal representative of Amolakchand, sued for the amount which he had to pay to a previous mortgagee on account of a mortgage not disclosed in the sale-deed. He relies upon a clause in the sale deed to the following effect :—

"From this date you are its owner and in possession thereof. We or our kinsmen and relatives have ceased to have any right thereto. You may enjoy it from generation to generation. If any of our relatives or kinsmen obstruct you in the enjoyment of the property sold to you, we are responsible and we will not put you to any kind of worry and trouble on that account."

The defence was that the above clause did not profess to give the purchaser any guarantee that the land sold was free from incumbrances and that it was only the equity of redemption that was sold.

The first Court held that the clause contracted for an unqualified indemnity and decreed the claim partially.

The lower Appellate Court held that the sale-deed contained no covenant with respect to the payment of any prior incumbrance one way or the other and section 55 (1) (a) of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply, as that Act was not in force in Berar at the date of the sale. It held that the purchaser was, in the absence of a special agreement, not entitled to be reimbursed by the vendor for the payment made by him and dismissed the suit.

In this Court it is urged that section 55 (1) (a) introduced no new principle but merely embodied what was already the law on the subject and the principle of that section should have been applied. It is also urged that the covenant does undertake to indemnify the purchaser for a payment of the kind in dispute. In the 3rd ground of appeal the covenant is said to be as follows:—

"If my relations or anybody else molest you then we are liable—we will not let you suffer for it."

This is not a proper translation of the clause referred to above. That clause refers only to obstruction by any of the vendors' kinsmen, and not to obstruction by any stranger. It cannot be interpreted as referring to any obstruction in assertion of any mortgagee's rights. The question, however, remains whether a covenant for quiet enjoyment and freedom from incumbrances, or, in other words, a covenant that the land sold shall be quietly enjoyed free from incumbrances, should, independently of the Transfer of Property Act, be held to be implied in a conveyance by sale of land. Under the English Law such a covenant is always implied in the absence of any express covenant on the point: see Williams on Vendors and Purchasers, 2nd Edition, pages 33, 41, 46 and 652; Dart on Vendors and Purchasers, 7th Edition, pages 124 and 788. Where there is no prescribed general law to which the decisions of a Court must conform, and the Court must proceed according to justice, equity and good conscience, the Court may follow the principles of English Law applicable to a similar state of circumstances. Varden Seth Ram v. Luckputty Royee Lallah (1). It would only be in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience to imply a covenant on the part of the vendor to indemnify the purchaser against incumbrances created by himself and not disclosed in the covenant. A number of grounds were taken in the memorandum of appeal before the lower Appellate Court, but they all seem to have been given up as appears from the 3rd paragraph of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. As the only ground which was pressed, and upon which the lower Appellate Court, reversed the first Court's decree, has been found to be untenable, the lower Appellate Court's decree is set aside and the first Court's decree is restored. The appeal succeeds. The appellant will get his costs in all Courts from the respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u), Code of Civil Procedure, against an order of remand made under Order XLI, rule 23, Code of Civil Procedure, in a suit for recovery of possession of land upon declaration of title by purchase. The disputed property was mortgaged on the 7th April 1892 by Ali Chand Bibi, Sheik Isuf and Sheik Joman to the father of the plaintiffs to secure a loan of Rs. 130. The mortgagee sued to enforce the security and obtained the usual mortgage decree on the 15th December 1897 for a sum of Rs. 344 and costs of the litigation. On the 21st March 1903 the decree-holder purchased the property in execution sale for a sum of Rs. 255. On the 9th June 1906 the auction-purchaser executed a conveyance of the property to one of the mortgagors Ali Chand Bibi for a consideration of Rs. 200. The conveyance was not registered as required by law, but the original owners, whose possession had not been disturbed by the auction purchasers, continued in occupation. Meanwhile, Sham Kishore Dey, who held a decree for money against Ali Chand Bibi and Sheikh Isuf, had, in execution, purchased the right, title and interest of his judgment-debtors on the 21st December 1894. For some unexplained reason, he did not take possession for many years and symbolical possession was delivered to him only so recently as 30th December 1909. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit on the 29th March 1915 for recovery of possession on the strength of their title by purchase at the mortgage sale on the 21st March 1903. They joined as defendants the representatives-in-interest of their mortgagors (defendants Nos. 1—9) as also Sham Kishore Dey, purchaser of the right, title and interest of their mortgagors (defendant No. 10). They ignored the conveyance executed by them on the 9th June 1906. The suit was defended by defendants Nos. 1 and 10. The Court of first instance found that the conveyance was genuine and held that although it was inoperative as a conveyance by reason of non-registration, the plaintiffs were equitably estopped from setting up a title inconsistent with the agreement to sell, which could be specifically enforced against them. In this view, he dismissed the suit with costs. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge has held that the conveyance is inoperative in law and that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed, subject to the exercise of right of redemption by the tenth defendant. In this view, the Subordinate Judge has set aside the decision of the primary Court and remanded the suit. The present appeal has been preferred by the tenth defendant alone.

On behalf of the appellant, it has been argued that the plaintiffs are disentitled to possession, as the agreement to sell was specifically enforceable, and placed them in the same position in a Court of Equity as if the requisite legal documents had been duly executed and registered. We are of opinion that this contention must prevail.

It is well settled, as the result of a long series of decisions in this Court, that when in pursuance of an agreement to transfer property the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite legal documents had not been executed and registered, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed, provided specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement, in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined; Bibi Jawahir Kumari v. Chatterput Singh (1), Singheeram Poddar v. Bhagbat Chander Nundi (2), Bepin Behari Mitter v. Tinkowri Pathak (3), Secretary of State v. Forbes (4), Sarat Chandra Ghose v. Sham Chand Singh Roy (5), Puchha Lal v. Kunj Behary Lal (6), Khagendra Nath v. Sonatan Guha (7). These decisions are based on the well-known doctrine of equity enunciated in Walsh v Lonsdale (8), that under certain circumstances, equity regards that as done which should have been done. The result attained in these cases was reached by the Judicial Committee in the case of Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (9) by the application of the doctrine of part performance enunciated in Maddison v. Alderson (10). Illustrations of the application of that principle will be found in Khagendra Nath v. Sonatan Guha (7), Jnan Chandra Das v. Rajani Kanta Pal (11) and Mahammad Shafikul Huq v. Krishna Gobinda Dutta (12). In the case last mentioned, Richardson, J., pointed out that the view adopted in this Court, though not in conformity with that taken elsewhere, Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (13), Chidambara Chettiar v. Vaidilinga Padayachi (14), Ramanathan Chetty v. Ranganathan Chetty (15), Timangowda v. Benepgowda (16), is supported by the observation of Lord Moulton in Loke Yew v. Port Swettenham Rubber Co. (17): "The present action, from this point of view, is an action by a bare trustee of land to eject the beneficial owner who is and has for years been in possession of the land and has cultivated it." The transferee under the conveyance was never disturbed in her enjoyment of the property; the possession which she was allowed to retain lulled her into security or partial security; she might otherwise have at any time claimed specific performance of the contract of sale, and as the agreement had not been denied by the plaintiffs before the institution of the suit, no question of limitation could be successfully raised in answer to a cross suit if such had been instituted forthwith. In such circumstances, there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs are not entitled to relief in a Court of Equity, whether we apply the rule in Walsh v. Lonsdale (8) or Maddison v. Alderson (10).

As a last resort, the plaintiffs have urged that the tenth defendant should not be allowed to take up this defence, as the agreement to sell was not made with him. We are of opinion that there is no force in this contention. In the first place, the question was raised in the written statement of the first defendant, a representative-in-interest of the person in whose favour the infructuous conveyance was executed, and at his instance the fourth issue was specifically framed in the following terms:—

"Did the plaintiffs sell their interest in the disputed land to Ali Chand Bibi on receipt of consideration? If so, is the suit tenable?"

This issue was decided against the plaintiffs by the trial Court. They appealed and got the decision reversed on an erroneous ground. The fact that the tenth defendant alone has appealed does not debar the Court from an enquiry into the grounds of the decision of the Subordinate Judge. In the second place, the tenth defendant is not a stranger to the property. He has never lost his right of redemption. If he is called upon by the plaintiffs to redeem their security, he is competent to defeat the claim by proof that their conduct has been such as to disentitle them to assistance from a Court which is enjoined to decide the rights of parties with reference to rules of justice, equity and good conscience.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored. This order will carry costs, both here and in the Court of Appeal below.

Civil rivision against the order of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Execution Case arising out of Civil Suit No. 285 of 1918, dated the 12th June 1919.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick and Mr. D. W. Kathalay, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The firm of Harduttarai Rampratap, partners Harduttarai and Rampratap Gorakhram, obtained a decree in the Bombay High Court against the present applicants. The decree was transferred to the Court of the 1st Additional District Judge, Akola, for execution. On 12th April 1919 an application was made on behalf of the decree-holders, stating that the decree-holder Harduttarai has died and that in his place the name of his undivided son be brought on record. The Judge held that this can only be done by the Court that passed the decree. On 2nd August 1919, the question was re-argued and the Court then came to the conclusion that the executing Court could bring on record a legal representative under the provisions of section 42 of the Civil Procedure Code. He, therefore, set aside his previous order and proceeded to go into the question as to who were the legal representatives of Harduttarai. The present application for revision is filed on the ground that the lower Court to whom the decree had been transferred for execution had no jurisdiction to enquire as to who were the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder, that being a matter for the Court that passed the decree.

It is further contended that the lower Court had erred in reviewing its own order declining to entertain the application for substitution of the names.

I do not think that the case comes within the section quoted by the lower Court, namely, section 42 of the Civil Procedure Code, for a Court executing a transferred decree has no power to entertain any objection regarding the right of the person shown in the order as the person entitled to execute the decree. Three of the four High Courts in India have held that in the case of a judgment-debtor the application for execution against the legal representatives must be made to the Court which passed the decree: in Hirachand v. Kasturchand (1) and Swaminatha Ayyar v. Vaidyanatha Sastri (2) it has been held that the application for execution in such a case must be made to the Court which passed the decree.

It is settled law that where a decree is sent to a Court for execution and is subsequently transferred by assignment and the transferee applies for the execution of the decree to the Court to which the decree was sent for execution, such application should be made not to such Court but to the Court which passed the decree: see Kadir Bakhsh v. Ilahi Bakhsh (3), Manoroth Das v. Ambica Kanta Bose (4) and Amar Chundra Banerjee v. Guru Prosunno Mukerjee (5).

The only case I can find as regards the decree holder is Musammat Dhunesh Kceree v. Oolfut Hassein (6). It seems to me clear that application in the present case should have been made to the Court that passed the decree and that the action of the lower Court in entertaining the application itself is incorrect. Having come to this finding, it is unnecessary to enter into the other grounds raised in the application for revision. I set aside the order dated the 2nd August 1919.

Because the application for the substitution of names has to go to the Court that passed the decree, it does not always follow that execution need be stopped: see Order XXI, rule 15, Civil Procedure Code. A copy of the High Court's decree is not before me, so I am unable to state whether this rule would or would not apply. If it does apply, the execution can proceed after the Court has made such order as is necessary for protecting the interests of the representatives of the decree-holder not applying.

The non-applicants will pay the costs of this application. I fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 15.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 99—Sale in contravention of provisions of section—Purchase by mortgagee—Redemption, suit for, by mortgagor without setting aside sale, whether maintainable.

Where a mortgagee has, in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, attached the mortgaged property and brought it to sale and purchased it himself, the mortgagor, in order to establish and enforce his right of redemption and to have accounts taken as between mortgagor and mortgagee, must get the sale set aside in accordance with the procedure, and within the time prescribed, before he can sue for redemption. [p. 169, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24-Pergannahs, dated the 14th June 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Basirhat, dated the 19th of January 1915.

UTTAM CHANDRA DAW v. RAJ KRISHNA DALAL.

FACTS appear from the following order of reference of Chitty and Walmsley, JJ., dated the 18th June 1918 :—

"This appeal is preferred by Uttam Chandra Daw, defendant No. 1, the mortgagee, and arises out of a suit for redemption. The Courts below have given the plaintiffs a decree in accordance with the decision of this Court in Pancham Lal Chowdhury v. Kishun Pershad Misser (1). The facts of that case were very similar to the facts of the case now before us, which are briefly as follows :—On 6th April 1891 Sayema Bibi, Takim Gazi and Tabrez Sirdar executed an usufructuary mortgage of the lands in suit in favour of the appellant, to whom possession was delivered. On the same day, however, the mortgagors took settlement of the mortgaged lands from the appellant, attorned to him as tenants, and thus resumed possession of the property. The mortgagors having made default in payment of the rent, the appellant brought a suit for rent against them, obtained a decree, and in execution caused the equity of redemption to be sold and purchased it himself. The sale was on 5th December 1892, and the appellant took possession of the property in 1895. He has ever since been in possession. The mortgagors died, and on 25th April 1902 Ada Bibi, the widow of Tabrez, who was also daughter of Sayema Bibi, purported to sell the equity of redemption, which she claimed had descended to her, to Khiti Nath Bhattacharjee, the father of defendants Nos. 5 and 6. On 16th May 1913 these defendants sold the land to the plaintiffs, who filed the present suit on 20th November 1913. It was argued for the appellant (1) that the decision above cited was erroneous and that the mortgagors had lost their right to redeem and (2) that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in allowing the mortgagee interest on the sums expended by him at 9 per cent. per annum only instead of at the rate of interest specified in the mortgage bond, viz., $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. With regard to the first question, if the case cited stands, we are bound by it and this appeal must fail. We feel, however, considerable doubt as to its correctness. The learned Judge who delivered the judgment confesses that the point is open to argument. The question may be stated thus :—Where a mortgagee has, in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, attached the mortgaged property and brought it to sale and purchased it himself, can the mortgagor or his transferee without first getting the sale set aside successfully maintain a suit for redemption of the property? Woodroffe and Casperez, JJ., held that he could do so on the ground that, although the sale not having been avoided was a subsisting sale, still the mortgagee was in the position of a trustee for the mortgagor.

That such a sale is not void but voidable is now settled by the Full Bench decision in Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (2). It was contended before us [as in Pancham Lal's case (1)] that the sale must be taken to subsist with all its consequences until it is set aside and that until then the mortgagor has no right to sue for redemption. Here also, as there, any application or suit to set aside the sale is long since barred by limitation.

The decision in Pancham Lal's case (1) appears to us to be in conflict with the decision of the Privy Council in Khiaraj-mal v. Daim (3). No doubt in that case their Lordships' decision was based on general principles of equity, as the transactions there in question were prior to and so not governed by, the Transfer of Property Act. But they held that the sales could not be treated as void or be then avoided on the grounds of any mere irregularities of procedure in obtaining or executing the decrees. The sales were treated as a nullity only against such of the mortgagors as were found to have been no parties to the proceedings or not properly represented on the record.

The decision in Pancham Lal's case (1) has not been accepted as correct by the other High Courts. It is sufficient to refer to Dharanikota Venkayya v. Budharazu Surayya Garu (4), Sahadu Manaji v. Devlya Jaba Mahar (5), Lal Bahadur Singh v. Abharan Singh (6) and Sheo Narain Ojha v. Ram Jatan Ojha (7).

In these circumstances as the question is one of considerable importance and is frequently cropping up, we think that it should be referred for the decision of a Full Bench.

We may mention that in Narayan Chandra Poddar v. Keshab Lal Dhai Bhai (8) Fletcher and Smither, JJ., declined to refer the question to a Full Bench having regard to the circumstances of that case. Here the circumstances are in favour of the appellant mortgagee as the plaintiffs are obviously speculating in litigation.

With regard to the second question as to the rate of interest to be allowed to the appellant, it is obvious that, if the question propounded for the decision of the Full Bench be answered in the negative, this question will not arise. We accordingly express no opinion upon it at the present state."

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, for the Appellant.—I will give a brief outline of the facts. The appeal arose out of a suit for redemption of an usufructuary mortgage of a plot of Mourasi Mokarari land measuring about 18 bighas, which was executed in the appellant's favour by Takim and Tabrez and Sayema Bibi in 1891. On the same day the mortgage was executed the mortgagors took settlement of the land as tenants from the appellant. The mortgagors having defaulted in paying rents, the appellant in execution of the rent decree purchased the equity of redemption of the mortgagors in 1892. In 1902 the daughter of Sayema, who was also the widow of Tabrez, sold the equity of redemption to Khitinath, the father of defendants Nos. 5 and 6, who again sold the land to the present plaintiffs. The question for your Lordships' decision is whether the plaintiffs can redeem the mortgage. I shall begin with Pancham Lal's case (1) relied upon by the District Judge. I submit that case overlooks what was said by the Privy Council in Khiarajmal's case (3), although Pancham Lal's case (1) was decided in reference to it. In Pancham Lal's case (1) observations on the question of adverse possession and limitation were relied upon. I submit those observations in Khiarajmal's case (3) were made not in connection with the question of limitation but that of adverse possession. [Reads Khiarajmal v. Daim (3)]. The real decision of the Privy Council was that a sale under such circumstances was not a nullity, but a mere irregularity which could be avoided within the prescribed time after which the mortgagee would be barred. Such of the mortgagors who were represented in the execution proceedings might redeem while those who were not represented could not do so. I would contend that in this view the Pancham Lal's case (1) is inconsistent.

I shall next refer to Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (2) (Reads the judgment of Mookerjee, J.)

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Was the sale in this case confirmed?]

Yes.

[WOODROFFE, J.—The finding in this case is that the sale was held with the consent of the mortgagors.]

Yes, my lord. My position is that in the circumstances of the present case the plaintiff has lost his right to redeem. I am entitled to rely upon section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act and to have the presumption in my favour that leave to bid was obtained and the sale took place regularly. A necessary corrollary from the Full Bench decision is that the sale being a mere irregularity, the mortgagee cannot redeem after the prescribed period of limitation. If it is a proceeding to which both the purchaser and the mortgagor are parties and if the sale is voidable, it is difficult to see how the mortgagor can exercise his right of redemption. The position of a mortgagee is not that of a trustee.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—What do you say of the case of Kamini Debi v. Ramlochan Sirkar (9)?]

That I submit has been got rid of by the Privy Council decision in Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Macnaghten (10). That case was referred to in Khiarajmal v. Daim (3)but the judgment was not on that footing.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Are the findings of the District Judge not material in this case?]

I submit not in view of the case in Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Macnaghten (10), The sale certificate says that the bid was offered by the decree-holder's Pleader and that the sale was subsequently confirmed. The certificate was issued by the Court.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhury (with him Babu Satya Ohara Sinha), for the Respondents.—Your Lordships have noticed that the District Judge says that there is no evidenceto show whether the permission to bid was granted or not. The suit for rent was evidently brought under the Bengal Tenancy Act and section 173 provides that no permission is necessary.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Is section 173 applicable to the case? The sale was of the holding. There could be no sale of the equity of redemption.]

We do not know under what Act the proceedings were taken. The District Judge ought not to come to the conclusion he has arrived at upon a presumption under section 114 of the Evidence Act. He should have taken evidence.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—The sale certificate says that what was sold was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. There is no mention of the words that property in arrears was sold. The sale could have been under the provisions of section 294 of the old Civil Procedure Code (Order XXI, rule 72 of the present Civil Procedure Code.] No such sale could be held without the Court's permission and if no permission is obtained the sale is voidable. Section 114 applies where the Court has certain duties to do, e g., issue notices, etc. Here there is no duty incumbent upon the Court. See Illustration (e), section 114, Evidence Act. I submit there is no judicial or official act. The decree-holder instituted the suit on his mortgage and the decretal amount was taken as interest of his mortgage money.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Does not the sale certificate point to the fact that permission was given?]

(10) 16 C. 682; 16 I. A. 107 (P. C.); 5 Sar. P. C. J. 45.

No. Whether the permission was given or not the form of the certificate would be the same in any case.

The other question which was referred to in the remand order is the most important one. If the mortgagor has the right of redemption when the mortgagee purchases in execution of his own decree the equity of redemption, the observations in Khiarajmal v. Daim (3) and Pancham Lal Chowdhury v. Kishun Pershad Misser (1) are not in point. If the decree is for money out of the mortgage debt, in that case it has been uniformly held that the mortgagor is always entitled to redeem irrespective of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Here the decree was for rent.]

Rent for what? It was the rent which was to be appropriated by the mortgagee as interest of his mortgage debt. As regards the findings of the District Judge, they are erroneous for two reasons, viz, he ought not to have relied upon the presumption under section 114 and he is wrong under section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. As regards the second portion of the remand order the Judge does not come to a finding as to whether the mortgagors consented to the sale. The mortgagee by his purchase has not acquired an irredeemable right.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—What does section 99 say?]

It does not give the mortgagee the right to sell the mortgaged property in a suit for money arising out of the mortgage debt or not connected with the mortgage debt at all. The section is very wide. Presumption as to the granting of permission, I submit, points the other way. Section 99 is clear. Hence the Court is not likely on enquiry to permit the mortgagee decree-holder to bid. In the absence of evidence to the contrary the Judge was wrong in presuming under section 114 that permission was actually given.

Babu Manmatha Noth Roy, in reply.—If I have to suppose that leave to bid was given the case would be easier for me. Section 99 refers to the question whether the property is to be sold or not, it does not provide whether leave to bid is to be given or not. If the contention of the other side be true, then the sale would have been stopped. The permission must have been granted under the Civil Procedure Code and not under section 99. What is necessary in view of Mahabir Pershad Singh's case (10) is the leave to bid. I submit the presumption is in my favour It is not at all necessary that the fact that the decree-holder was the mortgagee should be brought to the notice of the Court. (Refers to Order XXI, rule 72, Order XXXIV, rule 14.) It is not open to the other side to go into the question of permission to bid, as it was never in any stage of the suit raised, not even before the Divisional Bench of this Court. It was only suggested by the Full Bench in remanding the case. Of course evidence must in such cases be given. If you think it necessary, the case will have again to be remanded. Then I submit there is no difference between a decree for money on mortgage debt and outside it. A necessary corrollary from the decisions in Khiaraj-mal v. Daim (3) and Ashutosh Sikdar v. v. Behari Lal Kirtania (2) is that where the mortgagor fails to avoid the sale within time, he is barred by limitation. See Narayan Chandra Poddar v. Keshab Lal Dhai Bhai (8), Sheo Norain Ojha v. Ram Jatan Ojha (7), Mallkarjun v. Narhari (11), Dharani-kota Venkayya v. Budharaju Surayya Garu (4).

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhury.—In Malkarjun v. Narhari (11) the question that the mortgagee is a trustee when he purchases property not connected with the mortgage could not arise. There are two classes of cases, which held that the mortgagee did not acquire an irredeemable right. A third class of cases have held that where the property has been purchased by a third person the mortgagor has no right. I submit the mortgagors were not tenants. By the document the mortgagor was merely permitted to remain in possession of the land on payment to the mortgagee half of the usufruct of the property. The arrangement was not a sub-lease but it was in one and the same transaction. The decree was on the footing that the terms of the mortgage were violated by the mortgagor in not paying half of the usufruct. Hence the suit for the price of the usufruct. It was not a suit for rent. I submit there was no kabuliyat but the stipulation was in course of the mortgage transaction. The tenancy, if there was any at all, was in the sense that the mortgagor was to be in possession to pay the interest to the mortgagee by giving him half of the usufruct. What, in other words, was payable to the mortgagee was not rent but interest. In cases where the mortgagee purchases the property in execution of a decree, he does not acquire an irredeemable interest. See Bhuggobutty Dossee v. Shamachurn Bose (12), Martand Balkrishna Bhat v. Dhondo Damodar Kulkarni (13)

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Does the sale pass the equity of redemption?]

No. The mortgagor does not lose his equity.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What does the purchaser then get for his money?]

It merely adds to the mortgage security. That is what has been held in Martand Balkrishna Bhat v. Dhondo Damodar Kulkarni (13). If you hold that the equity of redemption passed, still the mortgagee holds it as a trustee for the mortgagor which the latter is entitled to redeem on payment of the mortgage money as well as the purchase-money together with any money the mortgagee might have spent for the protection of the property. See Erusappa Mudaliar v. Commercial and Land Mortgage Bank Limited (14). See also Muthu v. Karuppan (15).

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Look at Dharanikota Venkayya v. Budharaju Surayya Garu (4). There they have dissented from Martand Balkrishna Bhat v. Dhondo Damodar Kulkarni (13) and Muthu v. Karuppan (15).]

That case disposes of the observations of the Judicial Committee as obiter dicta. I submit you should follow the cases of this Court which directly bear on the point before you. I rely on Kamini Debi's case (9) to show that the mortgagor's right to redeem is not affected.

Babu Manmotha Noth Roy in reply.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is "where a mortgagee has, in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, attached the mortgaged property and brought it to sale and purchased it himself, can the mortgagor or his transferee without first getting the sale set aside successfully maintain a suit for redemption of the property."

The plaintiff sued for redemption of what was described by the learned District Judge as a usufructuary mortgage bond in respect of 18 bighas of land executed in favour of Uttam Chandra Daw (defendant No. 1) by Sayemi Bibi, Takim Gazi and Tabrez (or Tamraj) Sardar on 6th April 1891. Possession was given to defendant U. C. Daw under the bond, but on the same day the mortgagors executed a kabuliyat in favour of the above-mentioned defendant, whereby they attorned as tenants to him. Subsequently the mortgagors, as tenants, made default in payment of rent and the above mentioned defendant sued Sayema, Takim and Tabrez and obtained a decree. During the course of the hearing before the Full Bench a discussion arose as to the nature of the suit and the decree. The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs has supplied us with a translation of the decree. It is headed "Rent decree" and after reciting that the defendants had been given possession upon a stipulation to give half of the crops grown on the lands and half of the fruit of the trees on the land in lieu of interest and reciting that the three defendants had not given the plaintiff the share of the Aman paddy and that the plaintiff had brought the suit for Rs. 97 3 annas 4 gandas, being the value at the rate of Rs. 36 per bis of 2 bis 14 aris, plaintiff's half share of 5 bis 8 aris, the entire produce of 12 bighas of land at the rate of 9 aris per bigha, it was thereby ordered and decreed that the suit be decreed upon contest, that the plaintiff do recover from the defendants Rs. 98-14-15 gandas as per account therein set out: the decree directed that the defendants should pay the above amount to the plaintiff within 15 days from the 18th May 1892, failing which the defendants would be ejected from the land. The decree was dated the 25th May 1892. In execution of this decree the above-mentioned defendant, U. C. Daw, purchased the equity of redemption on the 5th December 1892: the sale was confirmed in January 1893, the sale certificate was granted in April 1893 and the defendant took possession in 1895.

Sayemi, Takim and Tabrez died and any interest they had was inherited by Tabrez's widow, who was also the daughter of Sayemi. Tabrez's widow on the 25th April 1902 sold what purported to be the equity of redemption in respect of the mortgaged land to K. N. Bhattacharji, the father of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6. After the death of K. N. Bhattacharji, viz., on 16th May 1913, the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 sold their interest in the land to the plaintiffs On the 20th November 1913 the plaintiffs brought this suit in which they claim the right to redeem the mortgage of the defendant U. C. Daw.

This case was before the Full Bench on a previous occasion and it was then considered material to have a finding upon the questions (1) whether the appellant (i.e., the defendant U. C. Daw) obtained the permission of the Court to bid at the sale of the equity of redemption on the 5th December 1892; and (2) whether the mortgagors consented to the sale thereof to the appellant, on the ground that if the mortgagee had obtained leave to bid, he would be in the same position as an independent purchaser. If such leave had been obtained or if the mortgagors had consented to the sale, the question submitted to the Full Bench would not arise. Accordingly, the Full Bench directed that the record of the Execution Case No. 1125 of 1892 in the Court of the Munsif at Basirhat should be sent to this Court with a finding by the lower Appellate Court on the above mentioned two questions.

It appears that the record of the execution case was destroyed, in accordance with the rules, many years ago.

The learned District Judge held that there was no evidence relating to the first point, but came to the conclusion that it would be an irregularity for the Court to allow the decree-holder to bid at the sale without taking the express permission of the Court and that, therefore, as he did bid at the sale, it should be presumed that he had the permission of the Court to do so, and he relied upon the provisions contained in section 114 of the Evidence Act and Illustration (e). As to the second question the learned Judge found that there was no evidence relating thereto and that in view of his first finding the second question was not material.

On the further hearing of this case by the Full Bench it was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the presumption that the decree-holder obtained permission to bid should not be drawn; 1st, because it was contrary to the provision of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (which was in force at the time of the sale) for the decree-holder, who was the mortgagee, to bring the property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under section 67 and 2nd, that even if leave to bid at the sale were given by the Court, it would have been beyond the jurisdiction of the Court to give such leave in view of the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Having regard to the terms of this section and in view of the absence of any evidence on the question, in my judgment it would not be right to draw the inference that leave was given to the defendant U. C. Daw to bid at the sale of the equity of redemption.

Having regard to the Full Bench decision in Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (2) it must be taken that the sale of the equity of redemption in contravention of the terms of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act was not a nullity, but an irregular and voidable sale, liable to be avoided on proof that the terms of that section had been contravened. It was contended, however, on behalf of the defendant U. C. Daw that the terms of this section had not been contravened, because the defendant had not brought the property to sale in his capacity of mortgagee, but in his capacity of landlord, and that the amount decreed in his suit was due to him as landlord from the plaintiffs as tenants under the kabuliyat.

It was admitted that if the defendant U. C. Daw had purchased the equity of redemption in the capacity of landlord in execution of a decree for a claim, irrespective of the mortgage, he would be in the same position as a third party and the mortgagors must set aside the sale before they could sue for redemption, but it was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that although the decree might, in form, be a decree for arrears of rent, it was in substance a decree for interest due under the mortgage. The decree is described as a "rent decree," the amount decreed is the value of a certain quantity of paddy and costs and there is a direction in the decree that if the defendants failed to pay the amount within the time specified in the decree, the defendants were to be ejected from the land. On these facts it appears to me that the appellant did not bring the equity of redemption to sale in his capacity of mortgagee, but in his capacity of landlord, and if that be the correct view, that is sufficient for the disposal of this case and the appeal should be allowed. I hesitate, however, to base my judgment solely on this ground, for although the lower Appellate Court found that the suit was for rent, the point now relied upon by the plaintiffs in this suit, viz., that although in form it was a suit for rent, it was in substance and reality a claim for arrears of interest under the mortgage, does not seem to have been considered.

And the learned Judges who referred the matter to the Full Bench seem to have assumed that the appellant brought the equity of redemption to sale in his capacity of mortgagee and in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. In view of this and as we have not a translation of the material documents, viz., the mortgage bond, and the kabuliyat before us, I think it is necessary to consider the case on the assumption made by the learned Judges who referred the matter to the Full Bench.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiff contended, first, that under the sale of 5th December 1892 the equity of redemption did not pass to U. C. Daw and that the money paid by him at the sale should be treated as nothing more than a further advance by him on the security of the mortgage.

Secondly, that if the equity of redemption did pass by the sale to U. C. Daw, he held it as trustee for the mortgagors and their assignees, the plaintiffs, who are entitled to redeem on payment of the mortgage debt plus the money paid by the mortgagee at the sale and any money which may have been properly expended by the mortgagee, while in possession, for the protection and preservation of the mortgaged property.

In view of the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (2) to which I have already referred, in my judgment the first point is untenable. It must now be held that the sale of 5th December 1892 was not void, but merely voidable. No steps have been taken to set aside the sale in accordance with the prescribed procedure and the time for so doing has long since passed. Consequently the equity of redemption purchased by the appellant U. C. Daw at the sale passed to him and no title to the equity of redemption passed either by the conveyance of 25th April 1902 to K. N. Bhattacharjee or by the conveyance of 16th May 1913 to the plaintiffs. It should be noted that the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs said that he regarded his second point as the better of the two, and it is obvious that the first is inconsistent with the second which was based upon the allegation that the mortgagee held the equity of redemption as a trustee for the mortgagors.

With regard to the second point, assuming for the moment (but without deciding) that by reason of the sale of 5th December 1892 the appellant U. C. Daw became trustee of the equity of redemption for the mortgagors, it appears to me clear that this suit would not lie. The suit is based upon the ground that the plaintiffs are the owners of the equity of redemption and are, therefore, entitled to redeem the mortgaged property, whereas this argument is based upon the assumption that the property in the equity of redemption passed by the sale to the appellant U. C. Daw. If that be so, the plaintiffs had no interest in the property except as "cestui que trust" and they could not sue for redemption. This is further made clear by the accounts which upon the basis of this argument would have to be taken as between trustee and cestui que trust, accounts which would be different from those taken in a suit for redemption.

Upon the above-mentioned assumption the suit is really one to enforce a trust, and if it were treated as such it would be out of time, for Article 148 of the Limitation Act of 1908 would not apply, but Article 120 would apply. The sale was in December 1892 and the suit was not brought until the 20th November 1913, viz., after a lapse of nearly 21 years.

These considerations show, in my judgment, that the question referred to the Full Bench should be answered in the negative.

This conclusion does not, in my judgment, conflict with the principle laid down in the dictum of Lord Davey in Khiarajmal v. Daim (3), viz.: "Their Lordships throw no doubt on the principle, which has been acted on in many cases in India, that a mortgagee cannot, by obtaining a money decree for the mortgage debt, and taking the equity of redemption in execution, relieve himself of his obligations as mortgagee, or deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem on accounts taken and with the other safeguards usual in a suit on the mortgage." The mortgagor's right in this respect is provided for in section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, but inasmuch as it has been decided by the Full Bench of this Court that a sale, though held in contravention of section 99, is not a nullity but is an irregular and voidable sale, liable to be set aside merely on proof that the terms of the section have been contravened, it follows that, under the circumstances mentioned in the question referred to the Full Bench, the mortgagor, in order to establish and enforce his right of redemption and to have accounts taken as between mortgagor and mortgagee, must get the sale set aside in accordance with the procedure and within the time prescribed, before he can sue for redemption.

In my judgment the question referred to the Full Bench should be answered in the negative, the appeal should be allowed and the suit should be dismissed with costs both in this Court (including the reference) and in the Courts below.

WOODROFFE, J.—As I said in Pancham Lal Chowdhury v. Kishun Pershad Misser (1), the question which has been debated before us is open to argument but as this Bench is of opinion that a suit to redeem will not lie where there has been a sale and purchase by the mortgagee which has not been set aside, I accept that view. Whether a suit in such a case to have it declared that the mortgagee purchaser is a trustee for the mortgagor will lie, need not be decided because this is not such a case, and if it were, it would be barred for the suit is brought 21 years after the sale. In my opinion neither Article 148 nor section 10 of the Limitation Act would apply to such a suit, if maintainable. As the terms of Article 148 show, it refers to a suit for redemption and not to a suit where the equity of redemption has passed out of the plaintiff who seeks to enforce a trust in his favour upon the taking of an account, which is not that of an ordinary mortgage suit.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject-matter of this litigation is a tract of land, 18 bighas in area, held in Mourasi Mokarari Jote right by one Zahid Gazi under Jnanendra Nath Roy Chowdhuri and others. On the death of Zahid Gazi, the tenancy was inherited by three persons, who on the 5th April 1891 mortgaged it by way of conditional sale to secure a loan of Rs. 170 taken from Uttam Chandra Daw, the first defendant in this suit (now appellant before us). Under the terms of the mortgage instrument the mortgagee became entitled to possession of the premises, and was to enjoy the profits in lieu of the interest which was fixed at the rate of Rs. 37-8-0 per cent. per annum. The mortgage money was made re-payable on the 12th April 1898. On the date of execution of the mortgage, the mortgagors took a lease of the lands from the mortgagee. The lease recited that the mortgagee had taken possession and had agreed to let out the lands to the mortgagors for the period of the mortgage, that is, till the 12th April 1898. The tenants were to cultivate the lands, take half the produce themselves and deliver the other half to the lessor or Rs 50 as the value thereof. The lease further contained a provision that if the tenants failed to deliver the produce or pay the money value thereof in due time, the lessor would be at liberty to eject them from the lands. On the 28th January 1892 the lessor sued the lessees for value of crops due, and for ejectment if the sum decreed should not be paid within the time prescribed by the Court. The records of that suit have been destroyed, but as the decree made therein is described on the face of it as "rent decree," there can be no doubt that the suit was treated as one for rent. The suit was decreed on the 18th May 1892 for a sum of Rs. 92-14-9 and the decree contained a direction that the judgment-debtors should be ejected, if the amount adjudged due was not paid up within fifteen days. The sum was not paid, with the result that the decree was executed and the lessees were ejected on the 4th July 1892. The tenancy thus came to an end. The decree-holder subsequently took out execution of the decree for realisation of the money due. On the 5th December 1892, the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in the Jote (that is, the equity of redemption) was sold by auction and was purchased by the decree-holder himself; the sale was duly confirmed on the 5th January 1893, and the sale certificate was granted to the purchaser on the 18th April 1893; the equity of redemption thus became united with the interest of the mortgagee. On or about the 24th April 1902, however, one of the mortgagors, who had by inheritance taken the shares of the other two, professed to sell the equity of redemption to one Khiti Nath Bhattacharjya for a sum of Rs. 81. On the 16th May 1913, the sons of Khiti Nath Bhattacharjya, who had died meanwhile, conveyed the equity of redemption to the plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 350, the purchasers retained out of the consideration money Rs. 170 and undertook to pay the dues of the mortgagee. On the 20th November 1913, the plaintiffs on the strength of their purchase of the equity of redemption instituted the present suit against the mortgagee for redemption and recovery of possession. The mortgagee resisted the claim on the ground that as the equity of redemption had vested in him on the 5th December 1892, the plaintiffs had acquired no title thereto by their purchase and were consequently not competent to redeem the property. The Courts below have concurrently negatived this defence and have held, on the authority of Pancham Lal Chowdhury v. Kishun Pershad Misser (1), that notwithstanding his purchase of the equity of redemption, the mortgagee was liable to be redeemed by the mortgagors or their representatives-in-interest. The mortgagee defendant appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard in the first instance by Chitty and Walmsley, JJ., who held that the decision in Pancham Lal Chowdury v. Kishun Pershad Misser (1) was inconsistent with that of the Full Bench in Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (2) and consequently expressed a doubt as to its correctness. They accordingly referred the following question to a Full Bench for decision:—

"Where a mortgagee has, in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, attached the mortgaged property and brought it to sale and purchased it himself, can the mortgagor or his transferee, without first getting the sale set aside, successfully maintain his suit for redemption of the property."

The matter was heard by a Full Bench (Sanderson, C. J., Woodroffe, J., Chitty, J., Fletcher, J., and Chatterjea, J.) on the 20th November 1918 when the Court gave the following direction:—

"We direct that the record in Execution Case No. 1128 of 1892 in the Court of the Munsif of Basirhat be sent up to this Court with every despatch, with a finding by the lower Appellate Court as to whether the appellant obtained the permission of the Court to bid at the sale of the equity of redemption on the 5th December 1892 or whether the mortgagor consented to the sale thereof to the appellant."

The District Judge has reported that the record of the execution case was destroyed in accordance with the rules many years ago, but he has held that on the principle deducible from Illustration (e) to section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, viz., that the Court may presume that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed, the inference may legitimately be drawn that the mortgagee obtained the permission of the Court to bid at the sale of the equity of redemption on the 5th December 1892. The case has now been placed before the present Full Bench for final disposal.

There has been considerable discussion at the Bar upon the question, whether the District Judge has correctly applied the presumption mentioned in section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. On the one hand, we have been pressed to hold that after the lapse of such a long period, the presumption may well be raised that the mortgagee decree-holder obtained the requisite permission as was contemplated in section 294 of the Code, 1882, which has now been replaced by Order XXI, rule 72, Civil Procedure Code, 1908; this is supported by the observation of Scott, C. J., in Sahadu Manaji v. Devlya Jaba Mahar (5). We have been asked on the other hand to hold that as the purchase by the mortgagee was in direct contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is highly improbable that the decree holder could have ventured to ask for the leave of the Court. I am inclined to take the view that leave was not obtained, but, in my opinion, it is not necessary to determine definitely whether leave was or was not granted, because the rights of the parties are not affected by the answer which may be given.

It is indisputable that the sale in this case was held in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, which was in force at the time and provided as follows:—

"Where a mortgagee, in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim, whether arising under the mortgage or not, attaches the mortgaged property, he shall not be entitled to bring such property to sale, otherwise than by instituting a suit under section 67, and he may institute such suit, notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure (1882), section 43."

The sale was not a nullity, but an irregular sale liable to be avoided; merely on proof that the terms of the section have been contravened [Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (2)]. It unquestionably operated to transfer the equity of redemption from the mortgagors to the mortgagee, but it might have been set aside at the instance of the judgment debtors on an application under section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. Such application was not made either before or after confirmation. The sale, therefore, became final and conclusive, and under section 316, Civil Procedure Code, the title to the property sold (that is, the equity of redemption) vested.

in the purchaser from the date of confirmation, so far as regards the parties to that suit and persons claiming through or under them. The period of limitation for cancellation of the sale by an appropriate proceeding has long since expired, and as no fraud is proved, no question of extension of timecan arise. Prima facie, then, the mortgagors lost the equity of redemption on the 6th January 1893, and the conveyances of the 24th April 1902 and 16th May 1913 passed no title to the successive transferees. In this view, the plaintiffs are not entitled to redeem the mortgage property. The right of redemption, no doubt, exists from the moment when the mortgage is made and the security is redeemable on payment of the debt during the subsistence of the mortgage. But the right to redeem is not a personal right; it is an interest in the property mortgaged, so that when the equity of redemption has been sold away, the mortgagor can no longer exercise his right of redemption. This view has been adopted in Dharanikota Venkayya v. Budharazu Surayya Garu (4), Sahadu Manaji v. Devlya Jaba Mahar (5), Lal Bahadur Singh v. Abharan Singh (6) and Sheo Narain Ojha v. Ram Jatan Ojha (7). These decisions are based on the now familiar doctrine that an irregular sale must be formally vacated and cannot be ignored as a nullity. This was enunciated in the clearest possible terms by the Judicial Committee in Malkarjun v. Narhari (11), where they reversed the judgment of the majority in Erava v. Sidramappa (16). In that case a mortgagor sued to redeem, although the equity of redemption had been sold away in execution at the instance of a judgment-creditor and had been purchased by the mortgagee. Lord Hobhouse explained that the sale was irregular, because held in contravention of the requirements of the Civil Procedure Code as to service of notice upon the representatives of the deceased judgment debtor, but it was essential that the sale should first be set aside, as it was a sale held by a Court with jurisdiction. There is consequently no escape from the position that at the date of institution of this suit, the plaintiffs had acquired no title whatever to the equity of redemption and were not entitled to redeem.

A desperate attempt, however, has been made on behalf of the plaintiffs to take the case out of the operation of the principle just explained. It has been argued that the sale of the equity of redemption was held in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, that the mortgagee, purchaser at a sale held in these circumstances, took the property in trust for the mortgagor, and that he might accordingly be called upon at any time within 60 years (under Article 148 of the Limitation Act) to submit to redemption. There is no solid foundation for this contention. The argument is based on the assertion that the sale took place in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. But as has been already explained, the suit was for recovery of rent, although the sum recovered was to be applied in satisfaction of interest due on the mortgage, and it would be an abuse of language to maintain that the suit was for recovery of arrears of interest on the mortgage. Two instructive cases on this point are furnished by the decisions in Anonymous case (17) and Ohimman Lal v. Bahadur Singh (18). In the first of these cases a mortgage and a lease were, as in the case before us, executed simultaneously. Sir John Edge, C. J., observed that the grant of such a lease by the mortgagee to his mortgagor had been invariably treated as a transaction in the nature of a lease and as putting the parties in exactly the same position as that in which they would have stood, if, instead of having been mortgagor and mortgagee, they were the Zemindar and any other person taking a lease of the land. In the second case, precisely the same view was adopted, and it was ruled that the effect of the kabuliyat was to establish between the parties the relationship of landlord and tenant, with the result that a suit on the kabuliyat would lie only in a Revenue Court. A similar view was taken in Khuda Bakhsh v. Alimunnissa (19) and the earlier decisions in Altaf Ali Khan v. Lalta Prosad (20) and Imdad Hasan Khan v. Badri Prasad (21) must be deemed to have been decided on their special facts. In the case before us, the suit was apparently described as a suit for rent; this inference may safely be drawn from the description of the decree, as also from the entries in the register of suits. The decree was made obviously under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (which prescribes a period of grace for fifteen days) and ejectment was obtained under section 89. I feel no doubt that the sale cannot be deemed to have been held in execution of a decree for enforcement of a claim under the mortgage. This conclusion completely sweeps away the foundation for the argument of the plaintiffs-respondents.

But even if we assume that the sale was held in execution of a decree arising out of a claim on the mortgage, the case for the plaintiffs is beset with difficulties. Their contention is that although the equity of redemption has been sold away and it is no longer possible for the mortgagors to obtain a retransfer thereof by avoidance of the sale, they are still entitled to recover the property from the mortgagee on payment of the mortgage money and the purchase-money at the execution sale. In support of this argument they have invoked the aid of a principle of equity enunciated by Lord Davey in Khiaraimal v. Daim (3) in the following terms:—

"A mortgagee cannot by obtaining a money decree for the mortgage debt, and taking the equity of redemption in execution relieve himself of his obligations as mortgagee, or deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem on accounts taken and with the other safeguards usual in a suit on the mortgage."

According to Lord Davey, this principle of equity had been acted on in many cases in India. One of the earliest cases where the doctrine was applied is that of Kamini Debi v. Ramlochan Sirkar (9). There Macpherson, J., held that a mortgagee cannot, in execution of a simple decree for money (the repayment of which is secured by mortgage), properly attach and sell the mortgagor's equity of redemption in the property mortgaged; but, if he does so and purchases it himself, he becomes a trustee for the mortgagor against whom he cannot acquire an irredeemable title. Reliance was placed upon Downes v. Grazebrook (22) to show that where a mortgagee has a power of sale, if he sells in exercise of that power, he cannot himself purchase, that is to say, if he does purchase, he will be declared to be merely a trustee for the mortgagor. Reference was also made to the judgment of Norman, J., in Ramlochun Sirkar v. Kamini Debi (23), Ramlochan Sircar v. Kaminee Dabee (24) and of Phear, J., in Brajanath Kundu v. Gobindmani Dasi (25). [See also the judgment of Markby, J., in Neerunjun Mookerjee v. Oopendro Narain Deb (26)]. The question arose again in the case of Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Macnaghten (10) and Lord Watson held that the decision of Macpherson, J., in Kamini Debi v. Ramlochan Sirkar (9) could be supported, only in cases where the mortgagee purchased without leave of the Court, for leave to bid puts an end to the disability of the mortgagee and puts him in the same position as any independent purchaser. It may be assumed, then, that in 1882, at the time when the Transfer of Property Act was passed, the rule had been recognised by our Courts that where a mortgagee had obtained a money decree for the mortgage debt and had, without the leave of the Court, taken the equity of redemption in execution, he was, on equitable grounds, liable to be treated, notwithstanding his purchase, as a mortgagee holding the property in trust for the mortgagor. The question necessarily arises, what was the effect of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act? The Legislature recognised the prevailing rule of equity, but modified its application in two directions. In the first place, the mortgagee was prohibited to purchase the equity of redemption in execution of his own decree, whether it was a money decree for the mortgage debt or for a claim related thereto or whether it was a decree for a claim entirely unconnected therewith. In the second place, the prohibition was absolute, and the Legislature did not contemplate a purchase by the mortgagee even with the leave of the Court. In these circumstances, the endeavour to engraft upon section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act the pre-existing rule on the subject as discoverable from judicial decisions is opposed to well-recognised principles of construction of Statutes. What has been here attempted by the plaintiffs was emphatically condemned by Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano (27): the purpose of the Statute surely was that on a point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used, instead of, as before, by roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was and extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions. The utility of the legislative enactment would be almost entirely destroyed and the very object of embodying the rule in a code frustrated, if the Court would be called upon to examine the antecedent decisions and to engraft the rule deducible therefrom on the Statute. The mischief is well illustrated by what has happened in the case before us. We were invited to consider the exact effect of the cases already mentioned as also other decisions [such as Bhaggabutty Dossee v. Shamachurn Bose (12), Martand Balkrishna Bhat v. Dhondo Damodar Kulkarni (13), Erusappa Mudaliar v. Commercial & Land Mortgage Bank Limited (14) and Muthu v. Karuppan (15)] and to supplement the statutory rule by the previous law on the subject. This can only lead to confusion, as is shown by the divergence of opinion disclosed in the cases of Muthu v. Karuppan (15) and Dharanikota Venkayya v. Budharasu Surayya Garu (4), which were decided within a few weeks of each other and one learned Judge was a party to both decisions. After the best consideration I have been able to give to the matter, I have come to the conclusion that the severity of the rule embodied in section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act should not be softened by invoking the aid of the pre existing law on the subject. I am consequently unable to follow the decisions in Pancham Lal Chowdhury v Kishun Pershad Misser (1) and Narayan Chandra Poddar v. Keshab Lal Dhar Bhai (8).

Apart from this, even if the contrary view were taken and the equitable principles enunciated in the earlier decisions could be applied, they would be of no assistance to the plaintiffs. The suit is framed as an ordinary redemption suit and not as a suit to enforce a trust. In a suit so framed, a redemption decree can be made only in conformity with section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act. Such a decree, it was not disputed, could not meet the justice of the case, because the defendant could not be deprived of the property only on payment of the mortgage money.

It may be observed finally that section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act has now been replaced by a less comprehensive rule (Order XXXIV, rule 14, Civil Procedure Code). The disability of the mortgagee is restricted to cases where he purchases the equity of redemption at a sale held in execution of a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. The mortgagee, if he has a claim against the mortgagor independent of the mortgage, thus has the same right that other creditors have to realise it by the attachment and sale of the equity of redemption. In such a case, however, the decree-holder must obtain leave to bid under Order XXI, rule 72, and when he has obtained leave, he is in the position of an independent purchaser [Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Macnaghten (10) and Ganga Pershad v. Jawahir Singh (28)]. This differentiates the cases of an execution sale from a private sale of the equity of redemption. There, as observed by Kindersley, V. C., in Gossip v. Wright (29), the Court allows the parties, by an arrangement subsequent to the mortgage, to enter into a transaction by which the mortgagor sells or releases or conveys or gives up (call it what you will) his equity of redemption and makes the estate out and out the estate of the mortgagee. This has now been approved by the House of Lords in Reeve v. Lisle (30), where they affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal in Lisle v. Reeve (31).

My answer to the question referred to the Full Bench is in the negative; where a mortgagee has in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act attached the mortgaged property and brought it to sale and purchased it himself, the mortgagor or his transferee cannot successfully maintain a suit for redemption of the property without first getting the sale set aside.

In this view, the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

CHATTERJEA, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is thus stated in the order of reference:—"Where a mortgagee has in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act attached the mortgaged property, and brought it to sale and purchased it himself, can the mortgagor or his transferee without first getting the sale set aside successfully maintain a suit for redemption of the property?"

It appears that the mortgagors on the 6th April 1891 mortgaged the property in dispute by way of conditional sale, under which the mortgagee was to hold possession and enjoy the usufruct of the property mortgaged by way of interest. On the same date the mortgagors executed a kabuliyat in favour of the mortgagee under which they were to hold the land mortgaged as tenants under the latter on payment of half the produce. It was also provided that on non-payment of half the produce (or the price thereof, Rs. 50) they would be liable to be ejected. The mortgagors defaulted to pay the share of the crops, and the mortgagee thereupon brought a suit for rent and also for ejectment. He obtained a decree for rent and the decree contained a direction that the defendants should be ejected if the decretal amount was not paid within 15 days. The payment was not made and the decree was executed, and the defendants were ejected on the 4th July 1892. The mortgagee subsequently took out execution of the decree for rent and purchased the equity of redemption on the 5th December 1892. The sale was confirmed in January 1893 and possession was taken in 1895. The heirs of the mortgagors sold the land to the father of the defendants Nos 5 and 6, from whom the plaintiffs purchased it on the 16th May 1913 and on the 20th November 1913 brought the present suit for redemption.

A question arose as to whether the defendant obtained the leave of the Court to bid at the sale, and the learned District Judge (to whom the question was referred for a finding) came to the conclusion that although there was no evidence on the point (the execution records having been destroyed) there was a presumption that leave to bid was obtained. I am of opinion, however, that no such presumption can be drawn having regard to the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The first question for consideration is whether the decree obtained by the defendant (the mortgagee) was for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that although there was a kabuliyat executed by the mortgagors in favour of the mortgagee agreeing to hold the land as tenants under him, it was part of the same (mortgage) transaction, and the decree, though in form a decree for rent, in substance was a decree for arrears of interest due under the mortgage. I am of opinion, however, that the decree was for rent as it purported to be. It is true the arrangement was that the share of the crops which the mortgagee would get from the mortgagors would be appropriated as interest on the mortgage, but the legal relation between the parties after the execution of the kabuliyat was that of landlord and tenant. Had the mortgagee let out the land to a third party, it could not be contended that the share of crops payable under the kabuliyat was not rent, even though the same might be appropriated towards interest. The mere fact that the lands were let out to the mortgagor would not alter the relation between the parties. Moreover the fact that the decree contained a direction for ejectment (presumably under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act) if the defendant failed to pay the decretal amount within the time specified, shows clearly that it was a decree for rent, because whatever the arrangement might be, the mortgagee could not (except on the footing of landlord and tenant) obtain a decree for ejectment against the mortgagor. I think, therefore, that the defendant purchased the equity of redemption at the sale as landlord, and not as mortgagee.

It is admitted that if the sale at which the mortgagee purchased was in execution of decree in respect of a claim not arising under the mortgage, the mortgagee acquired the equity of redemption just as a third party would, and the plaintiffs cannot redeem unless they got the sale set aside. As the decree for rent in my opinion was not in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, the defendant acquired an irredeemable title to the property by his purchase at the sale in execution of the decree, the sale never having been set aside. In my opinion, therefore, the suit fails on this ground, and it is unnecessary to consider the other questions raised in the case.

But even if it be held that the decree was in respect of a claim arising under the mortgage, I think the suit will fail, as the sale was never set aside. The contention of the plaintiffs is that the sale need not be set aside, the sale stands but that the mortgagee does not acquire an irredeemable title, he holds the mortgaged property as trustee for the mortgagors, and the latter can redeem on payment of the mortgage money plus the amount spent by the mortgagee in purchasing the property, and any other money which might have been spent by him for the protection of the property; in other words, that the mortgagee by his purchase only adds to his security, and that the rule of equity which governed the relation between the parties before the sale subsists notwithstanding the sale. It is pointed out that the principle of equity, viz., that a mortgagee cannot by obtaining a money decree for the mortgage debt and taking the equity of redemption in execution, relieve himself of his obligation as mortgagee or deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem on accounts taken and with the other safeguards usual in a suit on mortgage, is referred to by the Judicial Committee in the case of Khiarajmal v. Daim (3). But this equity is recognized in section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is now settled, however, by the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (2) that a sale in contravention of the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act is not void but is merely voidable, and admittedly no steps were taken to have the sale set aside. It cannot, therefore, be contended that the equity of redemption subsists in the mortgagor even though the sale is not set aside.

As for the argument that the mortgagee by his purchase holds the property as trustee, the trust (assuming that there is any) must be enforced in a suit properly framed for the purpose, and within the period of limitation prescribed. The suit is not so framed, section 10 of the Limitation Act would not be applicable, and the present suit brought 21 years after the sale is barred by limitation. I would accordingly answer the question referred to in the negative.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 2775 OF 1915.

January 24, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Broadway and Mr. Justice Martineau.

AHMAD KHAN AND OTHERS SONS AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF SAHIB KHAN DECEASED—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

NABI BAKHSH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS, Musammat JAMAL BIBI—DEFENDANT —RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Succession—Pagwand or chundawand—Mekans of Kot Bhai Khan, Tahsil and District Shahpur —Formation into separate groups—Presumption—Collateral succession—Whole blood, whether excludes half blood.

According to the custom prevailing among the Mekans of Kot Bhai Khan in the Tahsil and District of Shahpur, the rule of distribution is the pagwand one and there being no provision in the wajib-ularz for any specific rule in the case of collateral succession, the presumption would be that the whole blood and half blood would be on an equality and would succeed together. [p. 174, col. 2.]

When subsequent to a distribution according to the pagwand rule the whole blood brothers form into separate groups becoming joint in food and cultivation among themselves and entirely separate from their half brothers, the whole blood excludes the half blood in subsequent collateral successions. [p. 174, col 2.]

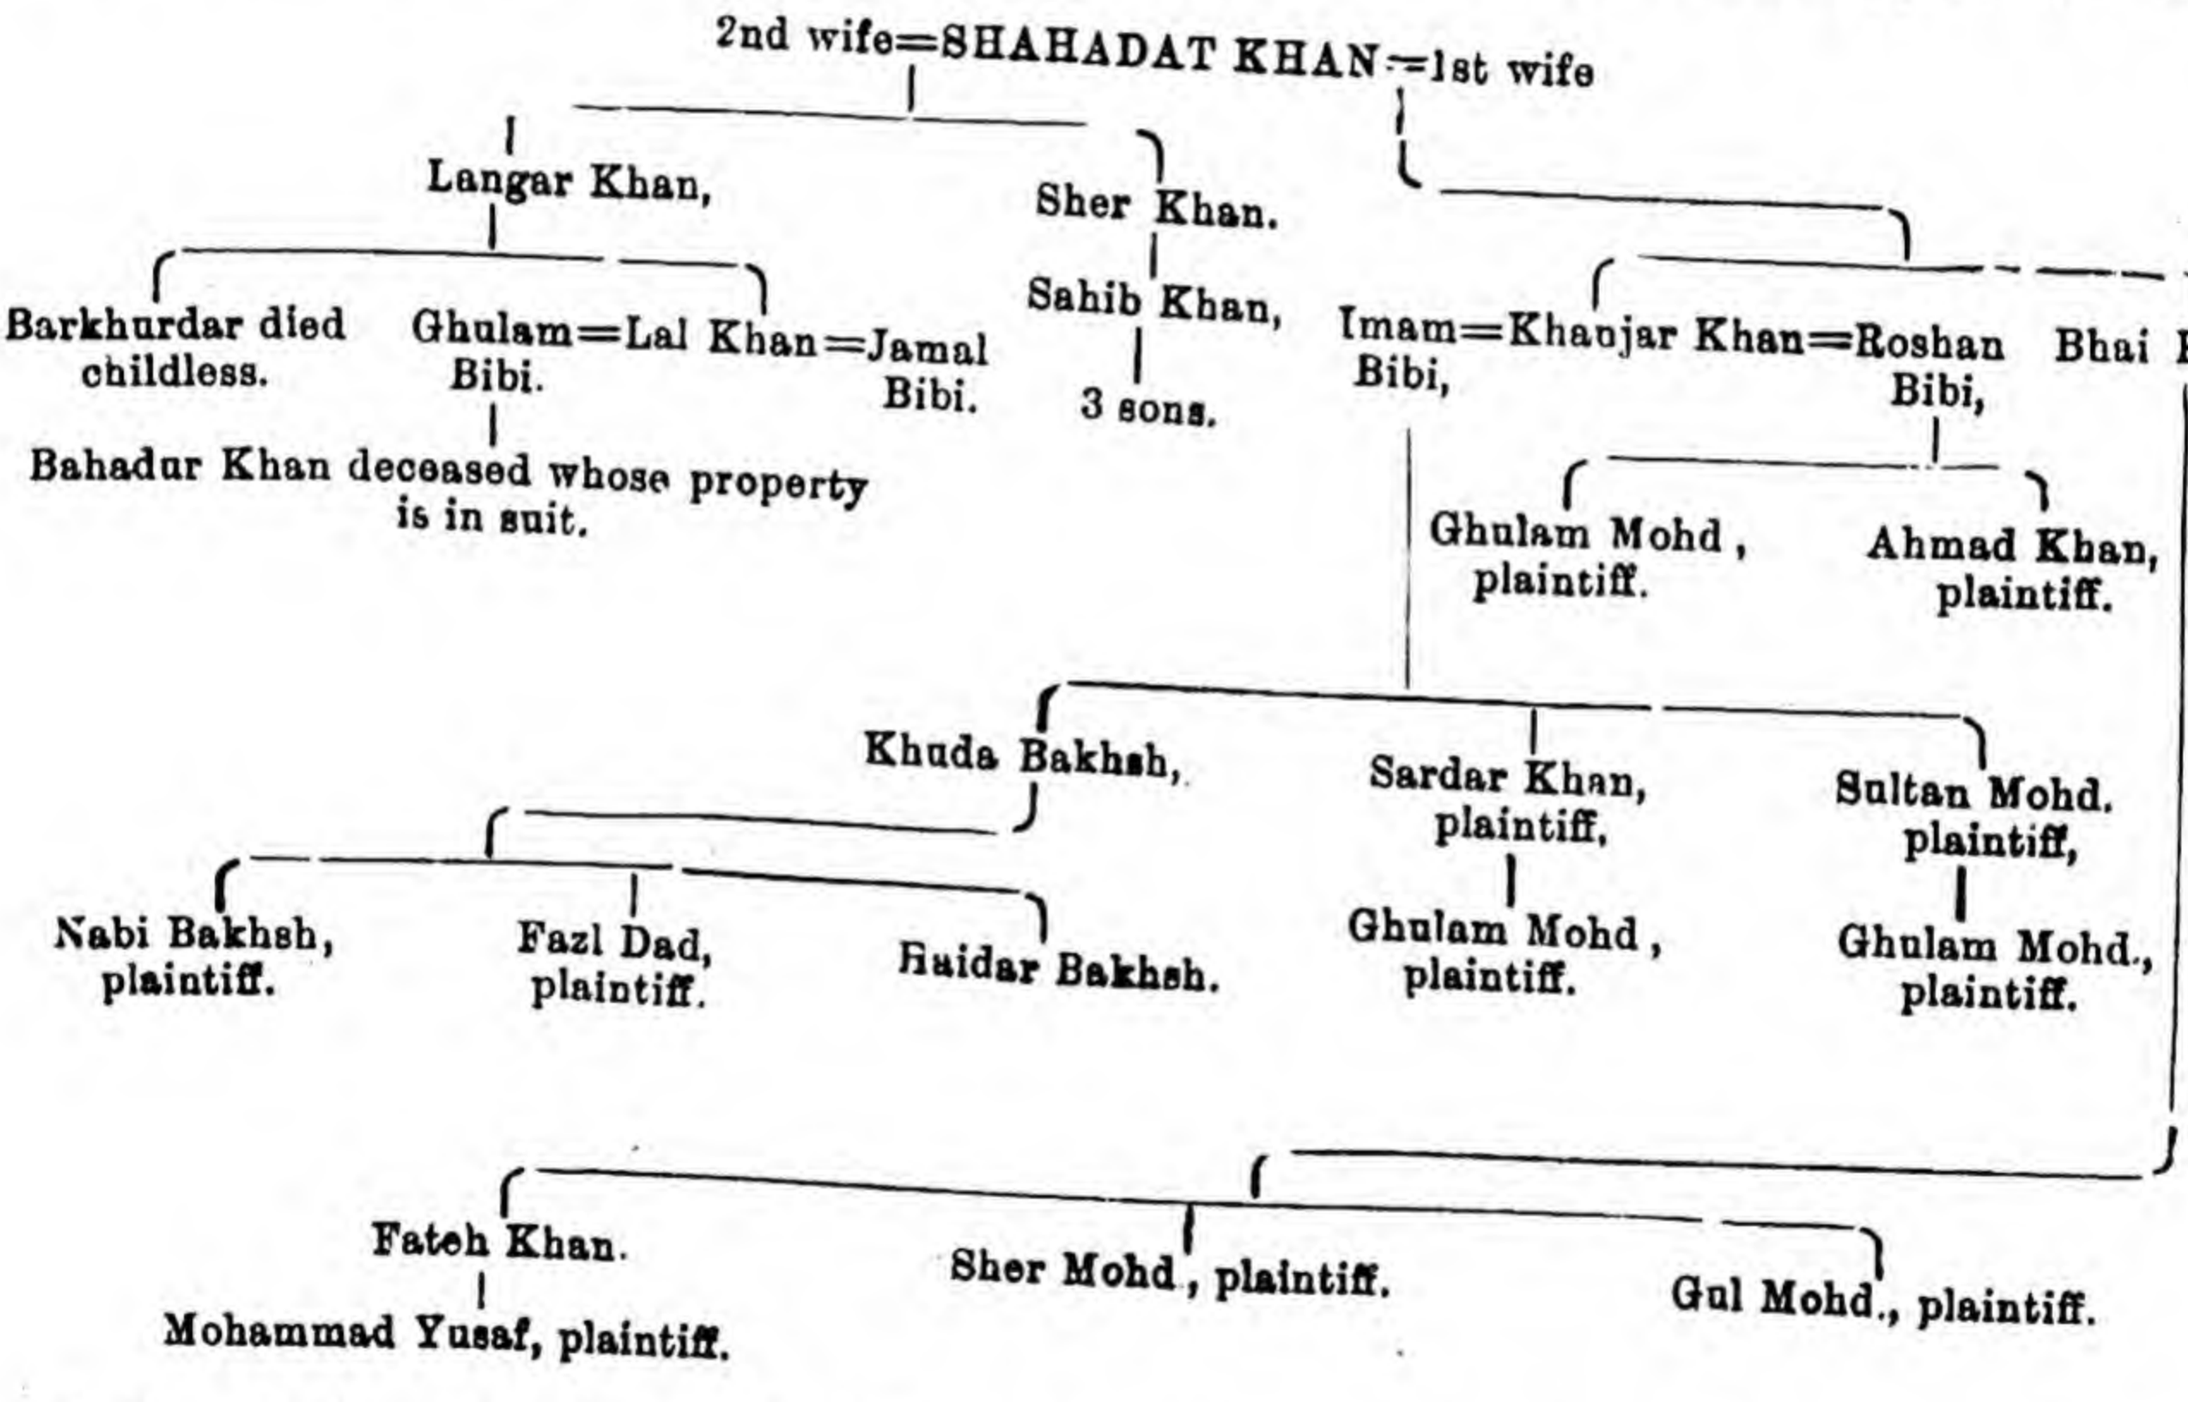
Where the common ancestor of the parties had two wives and divided his property into two equal shares, giving one to the two sons of one wife and the other to the two sons of the other, who took possession in accordance with this arrangement; and it appeared further that ever since the partition the two sets of brothers had been entirely separated from each other, while as among themselves they had continued to be joint in food and cultivation:



Held, that in the distribution by the common ancestor it was intended that thenceforward each group of sons should hold its own portion of the estate independently of the other and that, therefore, in collateral succession the whole blood excluded the half blood, no custom to the contrary having been established [p. 175, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 10th July 1915, granting plaintiffs a declaratory decree to the effect that after Musammat Jamal Bibi's death or re-marriage, plaintiffs and Sahib Khan should be entitled to inherit her estate jointly, plaintiffs taking two-thirds and Sahib Khan one-third of the estate, without costs.

The Hon'ble Mian Fazl-i-Hussain and Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree table will be of assistance as showing the relationship between the parties to the suit out of which this appeal has arisen.

Both plaintiffs-respondents and defendants-appellants are Mekans of Kot Bhai Khan in the Tahsil and District of Shahpur and are descended from Shahadat Khan. The plaintiffs-respondents are descended from Shahadat Khan by his first wife, while the defendants-appellants are descended from him through the second wife. Bahadur Khan, son of Lal Khan, died on the 25th of April 1907 when still a minor. He had been under the guardianship of Sahib Khan, who as such guardian was in possession of his ward's estate. The plaintiffs-respondents instituted this suit, claiming possession of two-thirds of the property left by Bahadur Khan, acknowledging that Sahib Khan was entitled to the remaining one-third. In the plaint it was alleged that Bahadur Khan's mother and step mother as widows of Lal Khan were entitled only to maintenance, according to custom and a compromise which had been entered into between the parties. Sahib Khan, who was the principal defendant, contested the suit on various grounds, the chief one being that on the death of Bahadur Khan he himself succeeded, subject to the right of Lal Khan's widows, to the whole of the estate according to custom. The plaintiffs in their plaint asked for a decree for possession of the property in suit or in the alternative for a declaration of their right to succeed to the estate on the death of Lal Khan's widows. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaratory decree, but not to a decree for possession. He accordingly dismissed the suit for possession, but granted the alternative relief declaring the plaintiffs entitled to succeed on the death or re-marriage of Lal Khan's widows to two-thirds of the property left by Bahadur Khan .Against this decree both parties preferred separate appeals, the defendants through Messrs. Fazl i-Hussain and Mukand Lal Puri and the plaintiffs through Mr. Nanak Chand, the plaintiffs claiming that they were entitled to a decree for possession while the defendants contending that Sahib Khan was entitled to the whole of the property.

The real issue in the case is whether in the case of collateral succession, such as the present, the whole blood excludes the half blood, and this was the point that was taken and argued at the Bar. It is common ground that according to the revenue records relating to Kot Bhai Khan succession is according to the pagwand or per capita rule. Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, however, contended that so far as the family was concerned, the pagwand rule had been departed from and that Shahadat Khan had in his lifetime partitioned and arranged for a future partition of his estate so as to practically follow the chundawand or per stirpes rule. Shahadat Khan had two sons by each of his two wives and during his lifetime divided the bulk of his property into two shares, one share going to the two sons by one wife who continued to hold that share jointly, and the other half going to the sons by the second wife who also continued to hold that share jointly. Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain argued that in this way two definite and distinct groups had been formed so that so far as collateral succession was concerned in each group, the whole blood excluded the half blood. He drew our attention to the terms of the wajib-ul-arzes of villages inhabited by Awans and other tribes mainly in the Khushab Tahsil on the opposite side of the river, according to which it appears that those tribes, while following the pagwand rule, provided for collateral succession by agreeing that in event of the property being partitioned, the whole blood would exclude the half blood but not otherwise. Admittedly no such provision for collateral succession exists in the wajib-ul-arz of Kot Bhai Khan, printed at page 473 of the paper-book (Exhibit P 11). Mr. Nanak Chand, however, contended that the custom prevailing among other tribes who were living on the other side of the river did not afford a sufficient guide for the decision as to whether a similar custom existed amongst the Mekans and he urged that although there were some nineteen villages inhabited by Mekans, in none of these had any such provision been made for collateral succession.

There seems to be no doubt that Shahadat Khan did make a partition of the bulk of his property during his lifetime. Exhibit D 53, printed at page 785 of the paper-book, shows that on the 30th March 1855 the property situated in Kot Bhai Khan was divided into two equal shares; one share was allotted to Bhai Khan and Khanjar Khan sons of one wife and the other share was allotted to Langar Khan and Sher Khan sons of the other wife, and possession was taken by the said sons in accordance with that arrangement. That this was the case is evidenced by an application (Exhibit D 52) at page 785, paper-book, made by Shahadat Khan on the 27th January 1858, in which he asked for the Tahsildar's assistance in being replaced in possession of the property in Kot Bhai Khan which was then in possession of Bhai Khan and Khanjar Khan. The dispute that thus arose in 1858 was settled on 10th of April 1854, when Exhibit D 48, page 772, paper-book, was drawn up. According to this document the property of Kot Bhai Khan was again divided in two equal shares and allotted to Khanjar Khan and Bhai Khan in the one case and Langar Khan and Sher Khan in the other. This arrangement was agreed to by all the four sons, and is referred to in Exhibit P-11 (page 473, paper-book) where, while it is declared that succession is according to the pagwand rule, it is specifically entered that the estate of Shahadat Khan would devolve, according to an order passed on the 14th April 1858 by Pandit Moti Lal, Extra Assistant Commissioner, on Shahadat Khan's four sons according to the deed of partition dated 10th April 1858. Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain urged that as a matter of fact the property was divided on Shahadat Khan's death in accordance with that arrangement and that ever since Khanjar Khan and Bhai Khan and their descendants have held their share then taken of Shahadat Khan's estate jointly inter se and Langar Khan and Sher Khan have held their share of their father's estate jointly inter se. He has contended that so far as lineal succession is concerned, the pagwand rule still exists; but that having once partitioned the property, so far as the collateral succession is concerned, half blood is excluded by the whole blood. Since the death of Shahadat Khan, which took place somewhere about 1860, there has been a certain amount of litigation between the two sets of descendants chiefly in connection with the partition of certain properties which were not originally partitioned, and it was urged by Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain that this litigation still further shows complete separation between the two branches of the family.

As has been said above, Exhibit D-48 (page 778 of the paper-book) shows that there was a partition effected in 1858, and from Exhibit P-11 (page 473 of the paper-book) it is clear that this partition was recorded by the Revenue Authorities and embodied in the wajib-ul-arz. An examination of the revenue records since 1858 and a consideration of the litigation that has taken place between the plaintiffs and defendants also leaves practically no room for doubt that since 1858, they have been entirely separated while as among themselves they have continued to be joint.

Now it was held in Gholam Muhammad v. Muhammad Bakhsh (1) that when an ancestral estate is distributed according to the pagwand rule, it may be presumed that in collateral succession to portions of such estate the whole blood or half blood will be on an equality. This rule has been embodied in Article 26 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, wherein it is stated that when the property of the common ancestor was distributed according to the chundawand rule, the whole blood excludes the half blood, and where the distribution was according to the pagwand rule, the whole blood and half blood succeed together.

In the present case there can be no doubt that according to the custom prevailing among the Mekans the rule of distribution is the pagwand one, and as there is no provision in the wajib-ul-arz for any specific rule in the case of collateral succession the presumption would be that the whole blood and half blood would be on an equality and would succeed together.

"Chundawand" and "pagwand" are, however, rules rather of distribution among heirs entitled than rules of succession, and it was pointed out in Gholam Muhammad v. Muhammad Bakhsh (1) that the above presumption could only be made when the existence of an ancestor with issue by at least two wives, and a pagwand or chundawand distribution of his estate, whether before or after his death, had been proved.

Further in the same ruling it was also held that circumstances may exist in which notwithstanding a pagwand distribution, the whole blood may be found to exclude the half blood in subsequent collateral successions.

This may happen when, subsequent to a distribution according to the pagwand rule, the whole blood brothers form into separate groups becoming joint in food and cultivation among themselves and entirely separate from their half blood brothers, and to quote from page 16 of the report, "when this combination and separation is complete throughout the family, the condition of the family is identical with the condition produced by the chundawand mode of distribution. And when this condition has been reached, it is a reasonable expectation that the same rule of succession will be found to apply as if the original distribution had been chundawand". This view was adopted and given effect to in Ahmad Shah v. Musammat Talia Bibi (2).

(1) 4 P. R. 1891 (F. B.).

To apply the principles and rules above enunciated in the present case, it has to be seen whether there was an ancestor with more than one wife whose estate had been distributed, and further what mode of distribution was adopted.

Again, it has to be seen whether subsequent to such distribution there has been any formation into groups within the meaning of the rules laid down in the said decisions and the proviso to Article 26 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law.

Now it is common ground that Shahadat Khan, the common ancestor, had two wives who each bore him two sons. There can also be no doubt that in his lifetime he made a distribution of his property and executed a document, to which all his sons assented, evidencing that distribution and providing for a similar distribution of any property that was not specifically covered by the actual partition.

What mode of distribution was adopted, however, is a matter that is not wholly free from difficulty. As Shahadat Khan had two sons from each of his wives, his sons would each receive the same amount of property under either the chundawand or pagwand modes. There is, however, some force in Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain's contention that there is an indication in Exhibit P. 11 of a distribution according to the chundawand rule.

In Exhibit P. 11 it will be seen that while the general rule or custom as to succession is stated to be according to "pagwand" it is specifically declared that in the case of Shahadat Khan the devolution of his estate to his sons would be in accordance with the deed of partition of the 10th of April 1858, "attached to the partition record in the village Basta."

This deed of partition, Exhibit D-48, shows that the estate was divided into two equal portions—one of each such portions being allotted to the sons of each wife, which sons held jointly.

Whether this denoted an intention to distribute by the chundawand rule or not, it seems certain that the sons of each wife were treated as a separate entity.

The use of the disjunctive "but" in Exhibit P. 11 also is an indication that in the case of this family the general custom had not been strictly followed.

In these circumstances, it seems clear that the presumption which would otherwise have arisen does not arise in the present case or if it does, it is not of any great force.

It may be as well, at this stage, to state, though the property in suit is situated in four villages and D. 48 specifically deals only with the property in Kot Bhai Khan, there can be no doubt that the same mode of distribution was intended to apply to Shahadat Khan's entire estate, and the subsequent litigation shows that the descendants of the two wives continued to remain separate. The sons and their descendants, of one wife have ever since remained joint in food and cultivation inter se and entirely separate from the sons, and their descendants, of the other wife who, till recently at any rate, have in their turn remained joint inter se.

In these circumstances it would seem that in the present case the plaintiffs' branch of the family have remained distinct and separate from the branch of the defendants, and we, therefore, hold that on the present records the facts point to the conclusion that in the distribution of 1858 it was intended that thenceforward each group of sons should hold its own portion of the estate independently of the other and that, therefore, the whole blood excludes the half blood, no custom to the contrary having been established.

In this view of the case it is not necessary to consider whether the custom prevailing among the Awans and others of the Khushab Tahsil has any bearing on the custom governing the Mekans.

The appeal is accordingly accepted and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs throughout nature of—Future offerings, whether attachable—Execution of decree—Attachment—Assignee of offerings objecting to attachment—Necessary party—Appeal, right of.

The offering or bhog to a deity, which is in the nature of a future perquisite, is an uncertain and indefinite income and is not liable to attachment.

A person who claims property which is attached is a necessary party to the proceedings and is entitled to object to the attachment, and has a right of appeal.

Application against the order of the Munsif, Puri, dated the 23rd July 1919.

Mr. D. P. Das Gupta, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. B. N. Sinha and S. C. Chatterji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Balmakund Kanungo, Manager of the Jagannath Temple, against an order of the Munsif of Puri, dated the 23rd July 1919, directing him to pay to the decree-holder Madan Chotra Rs. 3-10 per diem out of the khei (offering to the diety) due to the Raja of Puri, the judgment-debtor, from the 30th May 1919 until the decree is satisfied. There was a prohibitory order against the applicant served on him on the 30th May 1919. In response to that order, he sent a letter by way of objection to the attachment of the khei due to the judgment-debtor. His objections were two-fold: (1) that the Raja's khei is daily sold and credited to the petitioner in his book, (2) that the Raja took large advances from time to time from him and these advances are set off against the value of those daily kheis. His objection practically was that there was no khei either what accrued in the past, or what may accrue in future, which belonged to the judgment-debtor, and which might be capable of being proceeded against for the satisfaction of the decree. His objection was allowed, so far as the khei accrued to the Raja before the prohibitory order was served on him, viz., 30th May 1919, but as regards the future khei the aforesaid order of the Munsif was passed, which is the subject of the petition before us. This is not a full disposal of the objection of the petitioner. If his contention were good that the khei, past as well as future, was assigned to him, then there was nothing left as belonging to the judgment-debtor, which could be attached in execution of the decree in question. The Court below has not come to any finding on this point. If, on the other hand, the khei was in the nature of a future perquisite on account of the offering or bhog to the deity it was an uncertain and indefinite income, which could not be attached, in view of the authority of the case Shoilo anund Ojha v. Feary Charan Dey (1). It has been held in a uniform current of decisions that a priestly office, with emoluments attached to it, is inalienable, Srimati Mallika Dasi v. Ratanmani Chakervarti (2). The principle is also deducible from the Privy Council case of Rajah Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (3), Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannidhi v. Velu Pandaram (4), Durga Bibi v. Chanchal Ram (5). The property would not then be attachable, and the Court would not have jurisdiction to attach it. The order in this case must, therefore, be set aside, and the case sent back to the Court below for determination of the aforesaid points. The future khei in the hands of the petitioner will remain in his hands, in pursuance of the prohibitory order already issued, and will not be disposed of without an order of the Court below.

It has been objected that the petitioner had no locus standi to make this appeal, inasmuch as he was no party to the different proceedings. Certainly, if the prohibitory order was passed in respect of the property which he claimed to have already passed to him on account of the assignment, he became a necessary party, and was entitled to object to the attachment being issued. As a matter of fact, the Court treated him as such and acted upon the objection laid by him by means of his letter. This contention is overruled.

BUR SINGH v. GUJAR SINGH.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 711 OF 1909.

BUR SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

GUJAR SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Court-fee—Mortgage, suit for redemption of—Appeal, amount payable enhanced in—Appeal, second, Court-fee payable on.

Where in a suit for redemption of a mortgage the mortgagor obtains a decree conditional on payment of a certain sum, but that sum is enhanced in appeal and the mortgagor comes up in second appeal, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of second appeal must be calculated on the difference between the sum alleged by the mortgagor as payable and the sum fixed by the Appellate Court.

Appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Ferozepur Division, dated the 10th May 1909, modifying that of the Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Ferozepur, dated the 27th April 1908, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Sham Lal, for the Appellant.

Lala Dhanpat Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first question for decision in this case is whether the correct amount of Court-fee has been paid on the memorandum of appeal.

The appellant's Counsel argues on the authority of Bhag Mal v. Mohra (1), Ranje Khan v. Bir Bal (2), Hazara Singh v. Lal Singh (3), Muhammad Khan v. Ashak Muhammad Khan (4) and Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (5) that in a suit for redemption the jurisdictional value of a suit is to be determined with reference to the allegations made in the plaint and not with reference to the defence set up by the defendant. The facts of those cases are, however, different from those of this case, in which there is a distinct statement made by the plaintiff on the 30th January 1908 to the effect that if it were held by the Court that, apart from the mortgage in suit, there existed in favour of the contesting defendants another valid mortgage for a larger amount than the sum mentioned in the plaint created by the plaintiff's father, he (the plaintiff) was ready and willing to redeem the same in this suit, and was prepared to pay additional Court-fee, if any, chargeable on the plaint in respect of the redemption of such mortgage.

The lower Appellate Court has found, in agreement with the first Court, that the plaintiff's father effected a mortgage for Rs. 1,600 in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, though they have differed as to the legal effect of the mutation on the footing of that mortgage, which took place after the death of the plaintiff's father. The first Court granted the plaintiff a decree for redemption conditional on payment of Rs. 1,067-2-0, whereas the lower Appellate Court has held that there was a valid mortgage by the plaintiff's father for Rs. 1,600 in defendants' favour, and has accordingly increased the amount payable by the plaintiff to Rs. 1,600. Such being the case it is clear that in view of his statement above referred to, the plaintiff is bound to pay additional Court-fee on the difference between Rs. 1,600 and Rs. 534-4, the latter being the amount of the alleged mortgage sought to be redeemed by the plaintiff, and he cannot, after asking the Courts to adjudicate on the question whether his father did or did not effect a mortgage for Rs. 1,600, now turn round and say that, upon the finding of the lower Courts, his suit, as laid, should have been dismissed, leaving him free to bring another suit for redemption of the mortgage for Rs. 1,600. This latter position is inconsistent with the plaintiff's own pleadings, and we must hold that the question of the existence or otherwise of the mortgage for Rs. 1,600 is directly in dispute in this case.

Upon this view, the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal is insufficient and we call upon the appellant to make good the deficiency at once, as under the order of the Judge in Chambers, he was to be ready to pay in the additional Court-fee, when called upon to do so by the Divisional Bench.

The appellant's Counsel says that his client is not ready with the additional Court-fee stamp, and he asks for time to enable his client to pay the requisite stamp. The respondent's Pleader strongly objects to further time being allowed for the purpose, and we see no reason to grant the request.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, cl. (XI)—Landlord and tenant—Suit by landlord to recover possession from tenant—Court-fee payable—Relationship of landlord and tenant not established as between some defendants and plaintiff—Suit, whether maintainable.

Under section 7, clause (XI), of the Court Fees Act in a suit between landlord and tenant for recovery of immoveable property from a tenant including a tenant holding over after the determination of a tenancy, the Court-fee is to be paid according to the amount of the rent of the immoveable property to which the suit refers, payable for the year next before the date of presenting the plaint. [p. 178, col. 2.]

Where a suit is brought by a landlord for khas possession against several persons between some of whom and the landlord there is no relationship of landlord and tenant, the suit cannot proceed against those persons without a prayer for declaration of title. [p. 179, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24-Pergannas, dated the 14th December 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Diamond Harbour, dated the 22nd August 1914.

Babu Narendro Kumar Bose, for the Appellants.

Babus Sarada Charan Maity and Santimoy Majumdar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession of a tank and also for arrears of rent with damages against three persons, on the allegation that they were the tenants of the plaintiffs under a Kabuliyat for a term of years and that on the expiry of the term, the plaintiffs were entitled to obtain khas possession.

The kabuliyat was executed by defendant No. 1 alone and so far as he was concerned, he stated in his written statement that he had no objection to the plaintiff's getting khas possession. The other two defendants pleaded that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between them and the plaintiffs, and that they held the tank in dispute under a third party (one Amodini Debi) to the suit.

The Court of first instance found the question of title in favour of the plaintiffs and also found that all the defendants were tenants under the plaintiffs and accordingly gave a decree for khas possession as also a decree for rent against all the defendants.

On appeal, the learned District Judge held that the question of title could not be gone into in the suit as framed, as Court-fee had been paid only on Rs. 84, the amount of rent claimed. He accordingly did not go into the question of title. He found that there was relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1, but that the plaintiffs had failed to show that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were also their tenants. In the result the decree of the Court of first instance was reversed except as to the amount of the arrears of rent against defendant No. 1.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

Under section 7, clause (xi) of the Court Fees Act, in a suit between landlord and tenant for the recovery of immoveable property from a tenant including a tenant holding over after the determination of a tenancy, the Court-fee is to be paid according to the amount of the rent of the immoveable property to which the suit refers, payable for the year next before the date of presenting the plaint.

So far as the defendant No. 1 is concerned, it has been found by both the Courts below that he was the tenant. The plaintiff, therefore, was entitled to recover possession of the tank as against him on the expiry of the term. The Court-fee payable in such a suit, as stated above, would be according to the amount of the rent of the property. The rent in the present case is only Rs. 17 per annum. Upon such Court-fee being paid, the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for khas possession against the said defendant. No question of notice arises with regard to the defendant No. 1, because the defendant No. 1 stated that he had no objection to the recovery of khas possession by the plaintiff.

As for the other two defendants, it has been found that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between them and the plaintiff. The suit, therefore, cannot proceed without a prayer for declaration of title and the suit is not framed accordingly. In these circumstances, the learned Pleader for the appellant applies for permission to withdraw the suit so far as the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are concerned with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

The plaintiffs are accordingly permitted to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit with respect to the same subject-matter as against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. They must pay the costs of defendant No. 3 in all Courts and of the defendant No. 2 for the lower Courts only.

The decree of the Court of first instance will be restored as against the defendant No. 1, upon the plaintiffs paying the Court-fee Rs. 1 8 on the plaint leviable on the sum of Rs. 17 in the first Court, as also the same amount (Re. 1 annas 8) on the memorandum of appeal in this Court. The Court-fees must be paid within three weeks from this date and on that being done, the decree of the Court of first instance as against defendant No. 1 will be restored.

The cross-objection on behalf of the defendant No. 1 raises the question whether he ought to be made liable for the rent. But having regard to the clear finding of both the Courts below that the relation of landlord and tenants exists between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1, the cross-objection must be dismissed with costs. We make no separate order for costs of this Court against the defendant No. 1 in the plaintiff's appeal.

Cross-objection dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—The only question in this appeal is whether the parties were joint or separate. Both the lower Courts have come to the conclusion that they are joint. That is purely a question of fact and the conclusion is ordinarily binding on us, but the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant urges that the conclusion at which the Courts below have arrived is based on a misconstruction and misreading of certain documents. As to that the law is that unless there is a question of the legal effect of a deed which may be treated as a document of title or embodies a contract or is the foundation of the suit, a second appeal does not lie. But the learned Vakil for the appellant has relied upon the Privy Council decision in Lala Fateh Chand v. Rani Kishen Kunwar (1). In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "The right construction of documents is a question of law which Judges in second appeals are not, by sections 584 and 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure, precluded from considering by any finding of a lower Appellate Court based on such documents." It is true that the observation is very general in its terms, but their Lordships had to consider the question of wajib-ul-arz, which undoubtedly is a document of title. This case of the Privy Council was considered by Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case of Rajah Makund Deb v. Gopi Nath Sahu (2) and his Lordship, with the Privy Council decision before him, came to the conclusion that the question of consideration of every document is not a question of law. In our view, therefore, we cannot entertain this appeal merely on the ground that the Courts below have misconstrued certain documents. It is conceded by the learned Vakil for the appellant that if this argument fails, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is a finding of fact. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Section 97 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation confers upon every recorded proprietor of a permanently-settled estate, subject to the qualifications specified therein, the right to claim a partition of the estate. It makes no reference directly or by implication, to the mode in which the lands of the estate are held. A Revenue Court has, therefore, jurisdiction to effect a partition of an estate even when the lands of that estate, in whole or in part, are joint with the lands of other estates. [p. 182, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sylhet, dated the 24th April 1917.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, Debindra Narayan Bhattacharyya and Pramatha Nath Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, Babus Rajendra Chandra Guha and Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for declaration that an order for partition of an estate made by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sunamganj on the 15th April 1913 and confirmed successively by the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet on the 14th July 1913, by the Commissioner on the 6th December 1913 and by the Chief Commissioner on the 22nd November 1914, was without jurisdiciton and was consequently inoperative in law. The case for the plaintiffs is that they objected to the applications for partition presented by the defendants to the Revenue Authorities, on the ground that some of the lands of the estates sought to be partitioned were joint with the lands of other estates and the Revenue Authorities were not competent, under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation 1886, to effect a partition of lands included in several estates. This objection was overruled as untenable. The substantial matter in controversy in the present litigation is the question of the legality of the order made by the Revenue Authorities.

The Subordinate Judge has held that the decision of the Revenue Court was not ultra vires and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the declaration and injunction asked for in the plaint.

To appreciate the true position, reference may be made to the application for imperfect partition, which was presented on the 31st October 1911 by the first two defendants, and may be regarded as typical, as the applications presented by the 3rd defendant on the 21st February 1912, and by the 4th defendant on the 22nd March 1912, respectively may be treated, for the solution of the question raised before us, as similar in scope and purpose. The application of the first two defendants describes the estate to be divided as Taluk Krishnamani (Nos. 24, 202-12) appertaining to Perganah Pagla, total revenue Rs. 6-3 annas. Then follows the statement that account No. 1 of that Mahal stands in the names of the petitioners and bears the total revenue Rs. 4-2 annas. This indicates the applicants' own two-thirds share in the Taluk. The next column specifies the Mouzas included in the estate, namely, Dekharhant, Dhamdharpur, and Kastachpur. The fourth column states that the applicants have a two thirds share of the original Mahal. Then follow in the sixth column the names of the other sharers with their respective shares. In the seventh column it is prayed that the lands of the original Mahal, the subject-matter of the application, may be imperfectly partitioned and an allotment in respect of two-thirds share may be made in favour of the applicants. The eighth column contains important statement that the lands of the original Mahal in respect of which the application is made are joint with six Mahals (names and numbers specified). The applicants pray that the lands of the original Mahal in respect of which this prayer is made may be separated from those of the other Mahals and the same may be partitioned, and, treating it as 16 annas, the applicants may be given an allotment representing two thirds of 16 annas. Then follows the statement that the proprietors of the joint Mahals have all been made parties to the proceeding. The question thus arises, whether the Revenue Court has jurisdiction to effect a portion of an estate when the lands of that estate, in whole or in part, are joint with the lands of other estates.

The answer to the question in controversy must depend primarily upon the true construction of the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. Section 3, clause (b), furnishes a definition of an estate; it includes, amongst other things, any land subject, either immediately or prospectively, to the payment of land revenue, for the discharge of which a separate engagement has been entered into. Section 96, which finds a place in the sixth chapter devoted to partition and union of revenue-paying estates, classifies partition as either perfect or imperfect. Perfect partition means the division of a revenue-paying estate into two or more such estates, each separately liable for the revenue assessed thereon. Imperfect partition means the division of a revenue-paying estate into two or more portions jointly liable for the revenue assessed on the entire estate. Section 97 defines the persons entitled to partition and is in these terms:

"(1) Every recorded proprietor of a permanently-settled estate and every recorded land-holder of a temporarily-settled estate, may, if he is in actual possession of the interest, in respect of which he desires partition, claim perfect or imperfect partition of the estate:

Provided that—

(a) no person shall be entitled to apply for perfect partition if the result of such partition would be to form a separate estate, liable for an annual amount of revenue less than five rupees;

(b) no person shall be entitled to apply for imperfect partition of an estate unless with the consent of recorded co-sharers holding in the aggregate more than one-half of the estate;

(c) a person may claim partition, only in so far as the partition can be effected in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.

(2) When two or more proprietors or land-holders would be entitled under sub-section (1) to partition in respect of their respective interests in the estates, they may jointly claim partition in respect of the aggregate of their interests."

It is plain that, subject to the restriction specified in the proviso, every recorded proprietor of a permanently settled estate and every recorded land-holder of a temporarily settled estate may, if he is in actual possession of the interest in respect of which he desires partition, claim perfect or imperfect partition of the estate. The plaintiffs contend that in order to entitle the Revenue Court to effect a partition under section 97, the land comprised in the estate must be land which exclusively belongs to that estate; in other words, if any portion of the land of an estate is joint land of that and other estates, section 97 ceases to be applicable. The defendants contend, on the other hand, that the construction put forward by the plaintiffs narrows the operation of the section in a manner not justified by its language. After a careful consideration of the language of the section, we have arrived at the conclusion that the contention of the plaintiffs should not prevail. The section confers upon every recorded proprietor of a permanently-settled estate, subject to the qualifications specified therein, the right to claim a partition of the estate. It makes no reference, directly or by implication, to the mode in which the lands of the estate are held. If all the lands included in the estate belong exclusively to that estate, no difficulty admittedly arises. But if some or all of the lands included in the estate are the joint lands of several estates, there is no reason in principle why the right to claim partition should be negatived. The duty is imposed upon the Revenue Court to effect a partition of an estate on an application by a person competent to claim partition under section 97. It is plain that the first step in the performance of that duty is to ascertain the lands which constitute that estate. To carry out this preliminary step, it may conceivably be necessary to have recourse to an ancillary measure, namely, to effect a partition of the joint lands of the several estates and thereby to ascertain the lands which belong to the estate under partition. The plaintiffs have contended that this view is open to the objection that it may enable the parties to do that indirectly which cannot be done directly. If a partition were claimed of a portion which constitutes the joint lands of several estates, the application would be forthwith refused, because those joint lands do not constitute an estate within the meaning of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. This may be conceded, but no valid objection in principle can be taken to the procedure indicated. It is a well-known rule of interpretation of Statutes that where a Statute confers jurisdiction, it impliedly grants also the power to do such acts, adopt such measures, and employ such means as are essentially necessary to its execution. If the Legislature had intended that the Revenue Court should have authority to effect a partition of such estates alone as do not include lands joint with other estates, a suitably restricted phraseology might easily have been framed to indicate that view. On the other hand, there is a serious objection to the contention put forward by the plaintiffs. If it be maintained that the joint lands should first be divided by a Civil Court, the result would follow that the Civil Court would in essence be called upon to constitute an estate for the purpose of partition under section 97 and consequently to deal with a matter which affects the Government revenue and is excluded from its jurisdiction by section 154 (1) (f) of the Regulation. But, in this Regulation, as in other legislative enactments of this description, the policy is consistently followed that the partition of an estate which affects the distribution of the revenue should be effected not by a Civil Court but by the appropriate Revenue Court. To take another illustration—suppose a partition has been effected of an estate and four new estates A, B, C, D have thereby been created, in such a way that some lands of the estates are joint though each estate constitutes a separate entity in the revenue records. If, in course of time, estate A passes into the hands of several persons who find it necessary to seek a partition, perfect or imperfect, no partition can, according to the plaintiffs, be effected, because, a partition is not permissible when the lands of an estate (e. g., A) are joint with the lands of other estates (e. g., B., C., D.). If the argument of the appellants were to prevail, no partition, perfect or imperfect, could be made of lands included at one time in an estate which has later formed the subject-matter of partition keeping some of the lands joint. The Court would be slow to place so narrow a construction upon the Regulation and thereby largely restrict the application of its provisions, unless the language used by the Legislature left no escape from such a position.

In view of all this, the appellants have been indeed driven to suggest that neither the Civil Court nor the Revenue Court is competent to effect a partition under these circumstances. Reference has been made to the provisions of section 13 of Regulation VIII of 1800, and section 4 of Regulation XIX of 1814, to show that no partition by Revenue Authorities was possible in respect of lands common to several estates, and our attention has been invited to the cases of Doorga Kant v. Radha Mohun (1) and Oomesh Chunder v. Manick Chunder (2), which affirmed the proposition that when land was held in joint possession, each proprietor receiving his portion of the rent according to his interest in the land, it could not, under the Partition Regulation of 1814, be divided either by the Civil Court or by the Revenue Authorities—not by the former, because such partition might endanger the Government revenue, nor by the latter because such a partition was not contemplated by the Partition Regulation. It has also been suggested that with a view to remove this difficulty, Act VIII of 1876 B. C. included a provision in section 112 for partition of lands common to two or more estates, which has been subsequently reproduced in section 54 of Act V of 1897 B. C. The plaintiffs have contended that, by an oversight, the framers of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation did not embody a similar provision therein. We are of opinion that this assumption, even if well-founded, is of no real assistance in the solution of the question before us, because neither section 112 of Act VIII of 1876, nor section 54 of Act V of 1897, would have covered the contingency which has arisen here. We prefer accordingly to base our judgment upon an examination of the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation.

We may observe that our conclusion is in harmony with what has been recognised as settled law for nearly a quarter of a century. In Abdul Khaliq v Abdul Khaliq (3) Banerjee and Gordon, JJ., ruled that in a suit for partition, without division of revenue, of lands held jointly by the parties in four different estates, governed by the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, although the division asked for might not include all the lands of each of the four estates, the suit was in reality one for an imperfect partition, because such division would result in a division of each of those estates the lands left out forming one portion and the lands sought to be divided forming another. The suit was accordingly deemed barred under section 154, clause (e), of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, which provides that no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction in the matter of claims of persons to imperfect partition, except in cases in which a perfect partition could not be claimed from, and has been refused by, the Revenue Authorities on the ground that the result of such partition would be to form a separate estate liable for an annual amount of revenue less than Rs. 5. The plaintiffs have contended that the expression of opinion contained in this judgment is in the nature of an obiter dictum. We are not prepared to adopt that view, because the reason assigned was essential to justify the conclusion. A similar view was taken by Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ., in Sarat Chandra v. Prokash Chandra (4), where it was ruled that an estate does not cease to be an entire estate within the meaning of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, because a few plots of land are common to it and some other estate or because they are held in some undefined way jointly with other persons. The result followed that where a suit was brought for the partition of an estate, excluding certain portions as being held jointly by third persons, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was still barred by section 154 of the Regulation. These decisions have, so far as we can discover, never been questioned, and we are not prepared, at this distance of time, to treat the matter as if it were res integra. Reference has also been made to the decision in Gouri Krishna v. Sabanunda Sarma (5) which, however, is clearly distinguishable. It was there ruled that a suit for the partition of certain specific plots of land situated within a revenue-paying estate in Assam, the plaintiff, having no joint interest in the other lands of the estate, is not covered by section 154 of

(1) 7 W. R. 51.
(2) 8 W. R. 128.

(5) 32 C. 1036; 1 C. L. J. 421.

the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and is cognizable by the Civil Court, as the Revenue Authorities have no jurisdiction to make such a partition. We need not pause to consider, whether this may be reconciled with the principle involved in the two decisions previously mentioned. But it is plain that the view taken by the majority does not militate against the conclusion that an estate does not cease to be an estate within the meaning of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, merely because its lands are held jointly with the lands of other estates, provided it fulfils the requirements of the definition given in section 3. The proposition adopted by us is identical with that formulated in Brojendra Kishore Ray v. Kali Kumar Chowdhury (6). But we have not placed reliance upon that case, as one of the arguments assigned in support of the decision appears on examination to be incorrect. It was assumed in that case that the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation repealed the Bengal Partition Act VIII of 1876, which in reality was not repealed by the Regulation, for the simple reason that it was never in force in Assam; indeed, it could not be, as it was passed by the Bengal Legislative Council after the separation of Assam in 1874. The Partition Law in force when the Assam Regulation came into operation was Regulation XIX of 1814, which was repealed by section 2. But although we cannot thus adopt the reasoning in the case of Brojendra Kishore Ray v. Kali Kumar Chowdhury (6), we have reached the same conclusion on other grounds.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Muhammadan Law—Divorce—Khulanama, execution of, effect of—Consideration, non-payment of, whether invalidates divorce.

A khulanama executed by the husband constitutes a valid pronouncement of divorce, even if his intention is not to make over the document to the wife until he has received the consideration agreed to by her. [p. 185, col. 1.]

Plaintiff sued for a declaration that she had been divorced by the defendant and was no longer his wife. It appeared that in pursuance of an agreement between the parties, to the effect that the husband should get Rs. 150 and divorce his wife, he had executed a khulanama wherein he had repudiated his wife in unequivocal terms but the consideration money had not been paid:

Held, that there was a complete and irrevocable divorce and the mere fact that the plaintiff did not pay the consideration did not invalidate it. [p. 185, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 3rd April 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Multan, dated the 14th June 1918, decreeing the plaintiff's claim.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S, for the Appellant.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Saddan sued her husband for a declaration to the effect that she had been divorced and that she was no longer his wife. The first Court presided over by a Muhammadan Munsif held that there had been an irrevocable divorce of the sort called a khula and gave the plaintiff a decree accordingly. The lower Appellate Court held that it was agreed by the parties on the 4th November 1915 that Faiz Bakhsh should get Rs. 150 and should thereupon divorce his wife. The divorce deed was written but the money was not paid. In the circumstances the District Judge found it impossible to hold that Faiz Bakhsh did, as a matter of fact, divorce his wife. What he did was that he promised to divorce her if she paid him Rs. 150. He accordingly reversed the Munsif's order and dismissed Musammat Saddan's suit. She has now filed a second appeal to this Court.

Various authorities has been referred to by Counsel for the appellant in support of the contention that the non-payment of the consideration agreed upon does not invalidate a khula divorce. The first authority referred to was Principles of Muhammadan Law by Mulla, 5th Edition, page 179, where we find it stated that the non-payment by the wife of the consideration for a khula divorce does not invalidate the divorce, but the husband may sue the wife to recover the amount payable by her under the agreement. Again, Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law by Wilson, 3rd Edition, page 144, Article 70 is as follows:—

"Failure on the wife's part to make good the consideration agreed upon in a khula divorce does not invalidate the divorce so as to enable the husband to sue for restitution of conjugal rights."

This was also found by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moonshee Buzul ul-Raheem v. Luteefutoonnissa (1). At page 396 we find the following passage:—

"The divorce is the sole act of the husband, though granted at the instance of the wife, and purchased by her. The khulanamah is a deed securing to the husband the stipulated consideration, but it does not constitute the divorce. It assumes it, and is founded upon it. The divorce is created by the husband's repudiation of the wife, and the consequent separation. The law might have provided that non-payment of the consideration should invalidate the divorce, but it is clear, as well from the opinion of the Law Officers of the Indian Courts, as from the authorities cited at our Bar, that the law is otherwise."

Mr. Niaz Muhammad, the respondent's Vakil, does not deny this proposition, but he contends that there was no complete divorce but only an agreement to divorce which was not completed because the consideration was not paid to Faiz Bakhsh. Now it is perfectly clear that before the deed of divorce was written, there must have been an agreement come to between the husband and the wife. Faiz Bakhsh agreed to divorce his wife and in consideration therefor she agreed to pay him Rs. 150. What was done next was that Faiz Bakhsh executed a khulanamah and duly signed it. It states in unequivocal language that he repudiates his wife In Principles of Muhammadan Law by Tyabji, paragraph 143, at page 144, is as follows:—

"According to the Hanafi Law, where the husband executes a document containing a statement that he divorces his wife, and such a document is properly superscribed and addressed in the usual form, showing the name of the writer and the person addressed, it constitutes a valid pronouncement of divorce, irrespective of the intention with which it is written."

The khulanamah executed by Faiz Bakhsh in this case constitutes, according to this authority, a valid pronouncement of divorce, even if his intention was not to make the document over to his wife until he received the consideration agreed to by her. In Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law, 3rd Edition, Article 69 at page 143 says:—

"A khula divorce is accomplished at once by means of appropriate words spoken or written by the two parties or their respective agents, the wife offering and the husband accepting compensation out of her property for the release of his marital rights; it is irreversible."

Now there can be no doubt, as already stated, that prior to the writing of the deed the wife offered and the husband accepted Rs. 150 as compensation for the release of his marital rights. The khulauamah was then written and in the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council, already referred to, the khulanamah was the deed securing to the husband the stipulated consideration, but it did not constitute a divorce. It assumed and was founded upon it. I have, therefore, no doubt at all that the decision of the Munsif was correct and that there was a complete and irrevocable divorce by Faiz Bakhsh and that the mere fact that Musammat Saddan did not pay the consideration did not invalidate it. Faiz Bakhsh's remedy, if so advised, is to sue separately for the consideration agreed upon.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 4 (b), 16—Insolvency of firm—Adjudication, order of—Administration of joint and separate estates, order as to, whether can be made—Act of insolvency—Transfer with intent to delay or defeat creditors—Notice to suspend payment by partner, effect of.

At the time of making an order of adjudication against the partners of a firm the Court need not make any order as to the course of administration in insolvency with reference to the joint estate of the firm and the separate estates of the partners. That is a matter that must be considered and determined during the course of the insolvency proceedings. [p. 186, col. 2.]

A transfer of property with intent to delay or defeat creditors is an available act of insolvency, and although a notice suspending payment of debts by one of the partners of a firm cannot be used for the purpose of getting an order of adjudication against the firm, it can be used for the purpose of showing whether or not transfers which were made shortly before the petition of insolvency were made for the purpose of defeating or delaying the creditors. [p. 187, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, 24-Pergannas, dated the 13th of March 1919.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by three insolvents against the judgment of the learned District Judge of the 24-Pergannas, dated the 13th March 1919, adjudicating them and another person insolvents under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The adjudication was made at the instance and on the petition of certain creditors. It is not suggested that the debts were not sufficient on which an insolvency petition could be filed, but the points taken are these. That adjudication is against four persons who are described as carrying on business within the jurisdiction of the Court under the name and style of so and so. That is the ordinary way of making a petition against the debtors who are carrying on business in co partnership; and the name of the firm is ordinarily used when the names of the partners are not known. The act of insolvency alleged is this that with intent to defeat or delay the creditors, the debtors, within one week before the petition, made a transfer of the greater portion of their stock in trade and were about to execute Benami Kobalas of their other immoveable properties. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the allegations in the petition had been proved and made the order of adjudication. It is said there is a large number of persons other than these four men who are partners of the firm. The learned Judge disbelieved it. I see no reason to differ from him.

The other point is this: There are assets of the firm of the partners and there are separate estates of the various insolvents named who are members of that firm, and it is said that the learned Judge has made no order as to the course of administration in insolvency that ought to be made with reference to the joint estate of the firm and to the separate estates of the partners. That point need not be considered now, because that is a matter that must be considered and determined during the course of the insolvency proceedings. It may be found that the assets of the partners of the firm are sufficient to pay in full the whole of the creditors on a careful realization by the Receiver in insolvency. In that case, no question will arise as to this. On the other hand, there may be a deficiency in the assets of the firm. In that case, the creditors will have to resort to the assets of the separate estates of the partners, and then it will have to be determined what are the separate assets of the partners and how far the creditors are to be paid from the assets of the separate estates. These are matters which are to be determined hereafter and the insolvents will thus be entitled to urge any points they wish to urge.

The other point is that there is no available act of insolvency. The available act of insolvency is a transfer with interest to delay or defeat the creditors. Another act of insolvency was proved during the hearing before the learned Judge, namely, that Behari Lal Sikdar, a senior partner of the firm, had given notice that the firm had suspended or was about to suspend payment. That was not set out in the petition as an act of insolvency. It clearly could not be used for the purpose of getting the order, but it could be used for showing whether or not these transfers made so shortly before the petition for insolvency were made for the purpose of defeating or delaying the creditors or whether properties of the nature stated were not dealt with to delay the creditors. I think there can be little doubt as to what are the true facts. Those transactions were entered into with intent to defeat or delay the creditors; and, although the notice to suspend payment was not available, it is a material fact that, at or about the same time that the notice was given, the debtors were unable to pay and were selling certain of their immoveable properties and mortgaging the rest for a considerable sum to the brother-in-law of one of them. The insolvents gave evidence before the learned Judge, but they gave no explanation why these monies were taken and what they did with them. The only conclusion is that these transactions were made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the insolvent.

Then it is said that the firm is not insolvent—because some persons put an estimate of three lacs on the assets, and the debts, so far as at present known, are of a smaller amount. There are two answers to this. First of all, the assets of three lacs will not most likely, as it is proved in many other cases, be realized; and, secondly, it is not shown that there would not be other creditors coming in in the event of the debtors being declared insolvents to claim a proportionate share. I do not think there is anything in this point.

As regards the order of administration as between the joint and several estates, it is a matter that may be raised and determined in the course of the insolvency.

In the result, I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned District Judge. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs, hearing fee five gold mohurs.

DUVAL, J.—I agree.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 20th June 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st class, Gujrat, dated the 22nd April 19.9, decreeing the plaintiff's claim.

Mr. M. L. Puri and Sheikh Muhammad Arif, for the Appellants.

Dr. Shuja-ud-din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT—The following pedigree table will assist in understanding the case :—

The plaintiffs in this suit sued for possession of 81 kanals 10 marlas of land, claiming to be entitled thereto on the ground that it had belonged to Blanda, their uncle, whose son Said had died childless and whose widow, Musammat Jannat Bibi, had re married. The defendants, who are descended from one Khuda Bakhsh, alleged that they themselves were in possession of the land and contended that it had originally been gifted by Khuda Bakhsh to Blanda and that as Blanda's line had died out entirely, the land reverted to them as the descendants of the original donor. The Courts below having held that the gift by Khuda Bakhsh (having been made to a total stranger) was an obsolute one, and that the descendants of the original donor were, therefore, excluded by the collaterals of the original donee, the plaintiffs were granted a decree as prayed. The defendants have, therefore, preferred this second appeal to this Court through Mr. Mukand Lal Puri and I have heard Mr. Shuja-ud-din for the plaintiffs-respondents.

Mr. Puri contended that as a matter of fact Khuda Bakhsh in 1867 had adopted Blanda or had appointed him as his heir and that, therefore, Blanda's original family had no title to the land. An attempt was also made to show that, as a matter of fact, Khuda Bakhsh was the real father of Blanda, although he had married Blanda's mother after his birth. It has been found as a fact by the Courts below that Blanda was Khuda Bakhsh's pichhlag son and, as contended by Mr. Shuja ud-din, this is a decision on a question of fact and cannot be examined on appeal. A reference to the mutation in April 1867, which evidenced the gift by Khuda Bakhsh to Blanda, does not show that Blanda was adopted or appointed as heir. Khuda Bakhsh recited the fact that he had brought up Blanda as his son and that he had gifted the land in question to him, reserving to himself one maund of wheat and Rs. 10 per annum for his maintenance which Blanda undertook to pay. Blanda also undertook to perform Khuda Bakhsh's funeral obsequies and to defray all the expenses in connection therewith. On this evidence the Courts below have held that the gift by Khuda Bakhsh to Blanda was a gift to a stranger and for consideration and that, therefore, the dicta to be found in Nihala v. Rahmatullah (1) and Dasa v. Hiran (2) had force and the land did not revert to the donor's family. Mr. Puri has contended that Sita Ram v. Raja Ram (3) has not been correctly interpreted in the rulings cited above. In this view I am unable to concur. In Nihala v. Rahmatullah (1) Lal Chand, J., carefully and critically examined Sita Ram v. Roja Ram (3) and came to the view that the rule of reversion enunciated therein was strictly applicable only where the gift is made to a daughter or other female relation for the benefit of their male issue. Rattigan, J., also inclined to the same view. Again, in the case reported as Ahmad Hussain v. Rup Indar Singh (4) Rattigan, J., referred to Nihala v. Rahmatullah (1) with approval. In Dasa v. Hiran (2) Shah Din, J., took the same view after referring to Nihala v. Rahmatullah (1) and held that where the gift was made to a perfect stranger, there should be no reversion of the land gifted to the donor's family. Mr. Shuja-ud-din also referred to Shahanchi Khan v. Musammat Begam Jan (5) and Jot Ram v. Hardawari(6), but these decisions do not afford any assistance while Badhawa v. Dewa Singh (7) referred to by Mr. Puri does not, in my opinion, take a contrary view.

Turning once more to the present case, it has been held that Blanda was a stranger, that he was in no way related to Khuda Bakhsh; and that the gift to him was for consideration. In these circumstances it seems to me that the principles enunciated in Nihala v. Rahmatullah (1) are applicable and that Khuda Bakhsh's family have no claim in the presence of the plaintiffs. Mr. Puri referred me to a case brought by Said against the present defendants-appellants in 1903 in which Said's guardian alleged that Blanda had been adopted by Khuda Bakhsh. Having regard to the fact that adoption in the strict sense of the word is not recognised amongst Muhammadans, I am unable to hold this to be sufficient to justify my going behind the findings arrived at by the Courts below.

One of the defendants named Budha claimed to be in possession of the land as mortgagee, and the learned District Judge in dealing with this matter held that as the suit was for possession of proprietary rights, Budha could take such legal steps as were necessary for the recovery of his mortgage money if there was a valid mortgage. This is scarcely the way to deal with the matter as was admitted by Mr. Shuja-ud din. While, therefore, I dismiss this appeal with costs and maintain the decree for possession, I modify the decree by making the decree for possession subject to any rights that Budha may possess as mortgagee.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 62, 66—Execution of decree—Decision of question in execution proceedings, when binding—Decree-holder, whether can set up encumbrance in his own favour after sale—Mortgage decree—Sale—Mortgagee purchaser, whether bound by estoppel binding on mortgagor—Sale subject to mortgage and sale with notice of mortgage, distinction between—Auction-purchaser, whether can question validity of mortgage.

A decision, in the course of execution proceedings, of a question which properly arises for consideration is final and binding between the parties. The binding character of the order is not affected by the circumstance that as to some of the parties it was based on agreement and as to the others on an adjudication by the Court. [p 191, cols. 1 & 2.]

A mortgagee who purchases the property at a sale in execution of his decree on the mortgage is bound by an estoppel that would have bound his mortgagor. [p. 192, col. 1.]

A decree-holder who is bound to notify before the execution sale all encumbrances on the property about to be sold cannot subsequently set up an encumbrance in his own favour not set up in the execution proceedings. [p. 192, col. 1.]

If a person purchases an estate subject to a mortgage, whether under a voluntary conveyance or under a sale in invitum, or undertakes to discharge it, he cannot be heard to deny the validity of the mortgage subject to which he made his purchase. Where, however, the purchaser merely buys an estate which is under mortgage but does not take it subject to the encumbrance or undertake to discharge it, he is not precluded from impeaching the validity of the mortgage. The distinction between the two classes of cases depends upon the question, whether the property has been sold subject to the mortgage or whether mere notice of the mortgage has been given in the proclamation of sale. The former contingency is provided for by Order XXI, rule 62, the latter is contemplated by Order XXI, rule 66, of the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 192, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the mortgagee defendants in a suit to enforce a mortgage security. On the 9th September 1902, the mortgagor defendant executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs to secure a loan of Rs. 1,900, which was to carry interest at 33 per cent. per annum and was to be repaid on the 14th January 1903. On the 4th March 1904, a sum of Rs. 500 was paid by the mortgagor on account of interest. No further payment was made and on the 6th January 1915, the mortgagees instituted the present suit for recovery of their dues. The mortgagor was made the 1st defendant. Four other persons were also joined as defendants, on the allegation that they were puisne encumbrancers who had taken a mortgage on the 12th February 1904. The mortgagor defendant did not enter appearance. The mortgagee defendants contested the claim substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs was fictitious, and secondly, that they were entitled to priority in respect of a portion of the money secured by their mortgage. The Subordinate Judge has overruled both the contentions and decreed the suit. On the present appeal, the two grounds just mentioned have been reiterated. The first ground is, in our opinion, unsubstantial, because the evidence proves conclusively that the mortgage which is the foundation of the claim of the plaintiffs was a genuine transaction, as held by the Subordinate Judge. The second ground, however, requires careful consideration.

On the 10th June 1894, the mortgagor executed a mortgage in favour of Jaladhar Saha and Makhan Lal Saha to secure a loan of Rs. 7,500, which was to carry interest at 12 per cent. per annum and was repayable on the 16th August 1895. The mortgagees instituted a suit on the 15th August 1901 to enforce their security and obtained a decree on the 16th September 1901. They took out execution on the 9th November 1903, and the 16th February 1904 was fixed for the sale of the mortgaged properties. During the pendency of the execution proceedings, on the 12th February 1904, the mortgagor borrowed from the present defendants a sum of Rs. 16,000 which was to carry interest at 9 per cent. per annum and was to be repaid on the 12th February 1906. This mortgage is the root of the title of the defendants. It recites the execution proceedings on the decree of the first mortgage then pending and states that the money had been borrowed to satisfy the dues of the prior encumbrancer. The records of the execution case show that a sum of Rs. 13,548-2 was paid to the decree-holders in satisfaction of their decree. The defendants contend that to the extent that their money was applied to satisfy the dues of the first encumbrancer, they are entitled to be subrogated to his rights and to claim priority over the mortgage of the plaintiffs. They have in support of their contention invoked the aid of the decisions in Gokaldas v. Puranmal (1), Dinobandhu Shaw Chowahary v. Jogmaya Dasi (2), Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (3), Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (4); Dhakeswar Prosad Singh v. Harihar Prosad Narain Singh (5), Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (6). The plaintiffs have relied on the other hand upon the decision in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (7), which was considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Chhaggan Lal v. Muhammad Hussain Khan (8). The decision of the Judicial Committee last mentioned may have the effect, as the appellants have contended, to unsettle what has hitherto been understood as settled law and may have affected judicial decisions which were not brought to the notice of the Judicial Committee, such as Bibijan Bibi v. Sachi Bewah (9), Shyam Lal v. Bashiruddin (10), Yellapaddi Mahalakshammal v. Sriman Madhva Siddhantha Oonahini Nidhi, Ltd. (11), Chinnu Pillai v. Venkatasamy Chettiar (12), Rahimunnissa Bibi v. Badri Das (13). But the question of the effect of the decision in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (7), upon the accepted view of law applicable to this class of cases, does not require consideration in view of events which we shall presently mention.

The defendants instituted a suit on the 17th January 1910 to enforce their mortgage of the 12th February 1904. In this suit, they joined the mortgagor alone as the defendant and did not implead the plaintiffs whose mortgage, as we have seen, was dated the 9th September 1902. The suit was decreed on the 30th January 1911. Execution was taken out on the 16th March 1911. The sale was held, the properties were purchased by the decree-holders, an application was made by the judgment-debtors for cancellation of the sale, and the sale was ultimately reversed on the 30th March 1914. On the 25th May 1914 the decree holders commenced the second execution proceedings. The sale was proclaimed in due course. But on the 17th August 1914, the mortgagor judgment-debtor preferred various objections. One of these objections was that the property described as the fifth lot in the sale proclamation (which is the substantial property covered by the mortgage in suit) was under mortgage, but it had not been mentioned. On the 19th August 1914, two of the decree-holders, through their Pleader, presented a petition and prayed that the property in question might be put up to auction upon declaration that it was subject to a mortgage for Rs. 1,900 held by Prasanna Kumar Das and others (the plaintiffs in this suit). The Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 22nd August and directed that the property mentioned be sold on declaration that it was subject to the mortgage mentioned. These facts we have gathered from an examination of the execution records, which we have called up at the request of both the parties. The sale was held on the same day. The bid offered by the decree-holders proved to be the highest and the property was purchased by them for Rs. 3,500. In the circumstances, the question arises whether it is now open to the decree-holders auction-purchasers (the mortgagees defendants in this suit) to contend that they have taken the property free of the mortgage of the plaintiffs either entirely or partially. We are of opinion that they are bound by the doctrine of estoppel and cannot take up a position inconsistent with what they adopted in the execution Court.

It was decided by the Judicial Committee in Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuar (14) and Beni Ram v. Nanhu Mal (15) that a decision, in the course of execution proceedings, of a question which properly arises for consideration is final and binding between the parties. The position is not different when the order is made by the consent of the parties, for, as was observed in Laksmishankar v. Vishnuram (16) and Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dassee (17), the consent order is just as binding on the parties to the proceeding as a decree after a contentious trial. In the case before us, two of the decree-holders agreed that the property should be sold subject to the mortgage of the 9th September 1902; the other decree-holder did not appear. The binding character of the order is not affected by the circumstances that as to some of the parties it was based on agreement, as to the others on adjudication by the Court. Reference may be made to the decisions in Kasturi v. Venkatachalapathi (18), Jaganatha v. Gangi Reddi (19), Krishnan v. Chadayan Kutti Haji (20) and Giribala Debia v. Rani Mina Kumari (21), to show that, in circumstances such as those of the present case, the decree-holders purchasers would be bound by the doctrine of estoppel. It was their duty as execution creditors to specify the judgment debtor's interest in the property so far as they had been able to ascertain the same (Order XXI, rule 13). The sale proclamation was to specify, as fairly and accurately as possible, any encumbrance to which the property was liable (Order XXI, rule 66). The judgment-debtor took exception that the prior encumbrance had not been mentioned. The Court thereupon directed that the property be sold subject to the mortgage now in suit. The decree holders, if they claimed priority, should have set forth their objection at the time. But they did not claim priority for any portion of their dues. On the other hand, two of them expressly agreed to have the sale held subject to the mortgage of the plaintiffs which was prior in point of time, while the other acquiesced in order. On no conceivable principle of justice, equity and good conscience can they be now permitted to take up a position inconsistent with what they deliberately adopted at the time. They themselves and their mortgagor were all bound by the order made by the execution Court, and the fact that they purchased the nterest of the mortgagor in execution proceedings undoubtedly does not operate to weaken its binding character; for it is well settled that the mortgagee who has purchased at the sale in execution of his decree on the mortgage is bound by an estoppel that would have bound his mortgagor. Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Muzoffar Hossein (22), Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (23). In this view the mortgage defendants are not entitled to set up a question of priority as against the plaintiffs; for the circumstances disclosed attract the operation of the well-established doctrine, recognised in a long series of decisions, that the decree-holder himself who is bound to notify before the sale all encumbrances on the property about to be sold cannot subsequently set up an encumbrance in his own favour not set up in the execution proceedings [Prosonna Kumar Mukherjee v. Srikant Raut (24)].

We may add that if we had not affirmed the finding of the Subordinate Judge as to the reality of the mortgage which the plaintiffs seek to enforce, the question would have arisen whether the defendants were not bound by the doctrine of estoppel upon that question also. If a person purchases an estate subject to a mortgage, whether under a voluntary conveyance or under a sale in invitum, or undertakes to discharge it, he cannot be heard to deny the validity of the mortgage subject to which he made his purchase. Where, however, the purchaser merely buys an estate which is under mortgage but does not take it subject to the encumbrance or undertake to discharge it, he is not precluded from impeaching the validity of the mortgage. The distinction between the two classes of cases depends upon the question, whether the property has been sold subject to the mortgage or whether mere notice of the alleged mortgage has been given in the proclamation of sale. The former contingency is provided for by Order XXI, rule 62, the latter is contemplated by Order XXI, rule 66. The distinction is well-illustrated by the cases of Inayat Singh v. Izzat-un-Nissa Begam (25), Ramachandra v Haji Kassim (26), Shantappa v. Ohedambaraya v. Subrao Ramchandra (27), Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (28), Ganesh v. Purshottam (29) and Jairaj Mal v. Radha Kishan (30). The language used in the petition of the decree-holders and the order of the execution Court may well lend support to the contention that the decree-holders agreed to have the property sold as subject to a genuine mortgage. They do not suggest that the purchaser should buy the property, merely with notice of a mortgage claim, subject to such risks as the notice might involve, with liberty to contest the mortgage and to redeem it only if it was established to be a really subsisting mortgage. This point of view, however, does not require further elaboration, as in concurrence with the Subordinate Judge we have overruled the contention that the mortgage of the plaintiffs was ficititous.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION No 37 OF 1920.
February 5, 1920.
Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.
TARAPADA BHATTACHARJI—PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 145—Dispute concerning land—Appropriate method of settling dispute—Applicability of s. 144.

In order to effectively settle disputes between parties concerning land in respect of which there is an apprehension of a breach of the peace, the most appropriate method, so far as the Criminal Courts are concerned, is by the institution of proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In such cases section 144 of the Code should not be resorted to.

Application against the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate, Dhanbad, dated the 23rd December 1919.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The Rule must be made absolute. In the proceeding of the 9th of August 1919, the Magistrate states that the parties "are likely to disturb public tranquillity by disputing the possession of a plot of land at Kantapahari", as a reason for his starting a proceeding under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the order absolute dated 23rd December 1919 under revision, also the Magistrate sets out practically the words quoted above as justification for his taking action under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The words quoted exactly correspond with those stated in section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as a ground for instituting proceedings under this section.

The dispute in this case was one that clearly concerned land and as such should have been enquired into and disposed of under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the only effective way in which the disputes between the parties could be settled once for all so far as the Criminal Court is concerned. The order under section 144 lasts only for 2 months. The order in question passed on the 23rd of December 1919 will, therefore, expire on the 22nd of this month. The parties are seriously in dispute with regard to the plot in question and after the 22nd February the danger of the breach of the peace will again revert. Instead of saving time the Magistrate has, by adopting the course he has taken, perhaps led to future institution of proceedings under the Code of Criminal Procedure, whereas upon the same inquiry and upon the same evidence that was recorded in this case, the Magistrate could have passed a final order under section 145 of the Code, thus saving the time and trouble of himself and of this Court and of the parties concerned, and obviating any future danger of the breach of the peace. The view of the High Court upon this point has been more than once stated. See Gouri Dutt v. Gobind Singh (1). In the case of Parkar Mahton v. Ram Khelwan (2) the learned Judges in clear terms denounced the practice of instituting proceedings under section 144 when there is a dispute concerning land. Still more emphatically was it pointed out by this Court in the case of Kaniz Amina v. Emperor (3) that to institute proceedings under section 144 in a case of this nature is shirking the responsibility of deciding once for all the dispute under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In that case, in setting aside the order under section 144 of the Code, and in directing the proceeding to be instituted under section 145, the Court observed:—"It would have been but little less ridiculous to issue a notice in the form required by section 488 of the Code, and deal with it under section 144 on the ground that prompt payment of maintenance would tend to prevent danger of starvation to human life. In the exercise of our power of superintendence we are required to prohibit this innovation and by quickening the negligence of the inferior Court to obviate a denial of justice." I have quoted this passage with a view to bring home to the mind of the lower Court the absurdity of persisting in resorting to section 144, when it would have been to the interest of the parties and the Court itself to proceed under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, is set aside. If there be still any danger of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate can institute proceedings under section 145 of the Code.

Rule made absolute.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION No. 457 OF 1919.
November 25, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and
Mr. Justice Walsh.
Musammat MAHDEI—APPLICANT
versus
BENI PRASAD AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 435 (3 , 439 (1)—Proceedings under s. 145, nature of—Moveable property, order dealing with—Jurisdiction—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code relates only to immoveable property and a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order in a proceeding under that section affecting moveable property, even though such property is contained in the immoveable property and over it there is also a dispute [p. 197, col. 1.]

Section 435 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code does not preclude a High Court from calling for the entire record of a case in which an irregular proceeding is embodied, for the purpose of examining the said irregular proceeding and satisfying itself as to the correctness and legality of any sentence or order therein recorded, and under section 439 (1) read with section 423 (c) of the Code, a High Court has jurisdiction to set aside an irregular order. [p. 198, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Allahabad, dated the 10th June 1919.

FACTS appear from the following Referring Order of RYVES, J.—This is an application in criminal revision in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was admitted by a very senior Judge of this Court, who sent for the record and issued notice to the parties concerned. The record is now on my table. On the case being called on, I was told that I must not look at the record, by way of a preliminary objection. I have, however, allowed my curiosity to prevail and I have examined the record. I find the facts to be as follows:—

One Makhdum Bakkal was the sole owner of a house. He had separated from the other members of his family. He died recently leaving him surviving a widow Musammat Mehdia. Disputes at once arose between the widow and the collaterals of Makhdum about the house. They asserted that Musammat Mehdia had not been legally married to Makhdum and that in any case they were entitled to the house and were in actual possession of it. The Magistrate ordered a Police enquiry. The Police found that there was a dispute about the house between the parties which was likely to cause a breach of the peace, and indeed that it was so acute that the Sub-Inspector directed that some of the rooms in which moveable property belonging to the deceased Makhdum had been stored should be locked up with the locks both of the widow and of the collaterals. Thereupon the Magistrate instituted proceedings under section 145, and it is conceded that he was perfectly justified in what he did. He made Musammat Mehdia the first party and the collaterals the second party. He heard all the evidence tendered by the parties and came to the finding that Musammat Mehdia had been lawfully married to the deceased Makhdum, that Makhdum had separated from his family long before his death, and that the house belonged exclusively to him, and that on his death his widow Musammat Mehdia was in possession of it. That being so, he passed a perfectly proper order to the effect that she was entitled to retain possession of the house in dispute unless and until duly ejected by the order of a competent Court. Up to this point there is no doubt that the proceedings of the Magistrate were properly begun, continued and concluded, and if he had stopped there, undoubtedly this Court could not have interfered in revision. But the Magistrate did not stop there. He went on to consider what orders he should pass regarding the moveable property which had been locked up by the Police in some of the rooms of the house. He begins by stating:—

"I am of opinion that the moveable property can have nothing to do with this case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code because section 145 relates only to immoveables." So far it seems to me the learned District Magistrate was quite right, but he went on to say:—

"It is further ordered that the kothris locked up by the Police with the locks of each party remain locked up as heretofore, unless the rights of the parties are determined by the Civil Court."

It is this part of the order which is impugned by this application in revision, on the ground that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass it. On the other side, it is not argued that the order was one which the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass under section 145, but it is contended that under the provisions of section 435, clause 3, this Court cannot even call for the record of this case, much less examine it and interfere with any of the orders passed, because it is a proceeding under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code and is, therefore, exempted from the provisions of section 435. The case has been argued out before me at length on both sides and a very large number of authorities have been cited, but I do not propose to refer to more than a few of the reported cases and I also do not refer to any cases decided by any of the High Courts except our own. I find that the cases in this Court may be divided into three classes:—

(1) Where this Court has interfered on the ground that the proceedings were not in fact and law proceedings under Chapter XII, although they purported to be, and are, therefore, not within the scope of section 435, clause 3 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In this connection I cannot do better than quote the words of Banerji, J., in Mahadeo Kunwer v. Bisu (1): "In my judgment the order to which finality is given under those sections must be an order which not only purports to be, but is in reality, an order under section 145, and has been passed with jurisdiction. Where the Court has exceeded its jurisdiction in making the order, it is null and void and this Court in the exercise of its revisional powers is competent to interfere with it."

The last ruling on this point is a decision of Knox, J., in Brahma Nath v. Sundar Nath (2) in which almost all the authorities are noted.

(2) Where this Court has declined to interfere holding that section 435, clause 3, ousted its jurisdiction. The leading case is Maharaj Tewari v. Har Charan Rai (3). See also Matukdhari Singh v. Jaisari (4).

(3) Cases in which attempts have been made to invoke the interference of this Court under the Charter or the Government of India Act. The last reported decision on this point is Sakhawat Ali v. Emperor (5). I am not concerned, however, with this last class.

This case seems to me to fall somewhere between the first and second class mentioned above. In the case of Matukdhari Singh v. Jaisari (4) it is reported at the bottom of page 614*:—

"The Court refused, in the two cases quoted immediately before, to go into the question where, after being properly seised of the case, the learned Magistrate went out of his way and passed an order which he had no jurisdiction to pass."

Nevertheless in all the cases under class 2 in which this Court declined to interfere, I find that it was not found in any one of them that the Magistrate had exceeded his jurisdiction. In some of them, as in Syeda Khatun v. Lal Singh (6), the complaint was that if the Magistrate had examined and paid due regard to a recent judgment of a Civil Court between the parties he would not have, and should not have proceeded under section 145. On the other hand I find that wherever this Court has found that the Magistrate has exceeded his jurisdiction, after examining the record it has interfered and set aside so much of the order as was passed without jurisdiction. The only exception to this, so far as I know, is the case of Jhengar v. Baij Nath (7), in which Mr. Justice Rafique held that although the order complained of before him was illegal, nevertheless he declined to exercise his discretion to interfere with it for the reasons which he gave. But that judgment really supports the view that this Court could interfere.

I would refer specially to the case of Sheorani v. Baij Nath (8). That case seems to me to be practically on all fours with this one. Up to a certain point in both cases the proceedings of the Magistrate were proper and in both cases the Magistrate went on to pass an ancillary or supplementary order that was without jurisdiction (that is, assuming that I am right in thinking the order as to the locks not being removed in this case is such an order). In that case this Court interfered and I would be prepared to interfere myself in this case. There are, however, some passages in some of the judgments of this Court which suggest some difficulties which I think, if possible, should be removed. For instance in this very case of Sheorani v. Baij Nath (8) (to which I have referred) in which a Sessions Judge sent up the record of the proceedings under section 145 with the recommendation that a particular order should be set aside Knox, J, after holding that the order was a bad order (which shows that he examined the record), goes on to say: 'I am reduced to this difficulty that I have to exercise a jurisdiction which is not vested in this Court, in order to find out whether the Magistrate has exercised jurisdiction which, it is said, is not vested in him."

Eventually as stated above he set aside the order. Similarly in the very recent case of Brahma Nath v. Sundar Nath (2), the same learned Judge set aside proceedings which would seem on the face of them to be covered by the ruling in Maharaj Tewari v. Har Charan Rai (3).

I should like to put by way of illustration of my point of difficulty an extreme case. Suppose in the present case the Magistrate had found on evidence not only that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace but that in fact one Ram Bakhsh, let us say, had actually committed an assault on some one of the other party, and convicted him of an offence under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to a month's rigorous imprisonment, could not this Court interfere? I think there can be no answer but that it could. It might be said that the want of legality in the order would be obvious on the face of the judgment, but the judgment in the section 145 proceedings might be quite silent on the point and the decision given on a separate piece of paper, or even on one of the same pieces of papers that formed the file of the proceedings under section 145 which were bound up together, could not this Court call for that file? It seems to me that it is difficult to reconcile the decisions of this Court satisfactorily and I, therefore, think it desirable to refer the case to a Bench of two Judges.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is an application in revision which has been referred to a Bench of two Judges for orders. As I am particularly anxious that I should not be quoted as having decided anything beyond what I think it necessary to decide in order to dispose of this matter, I would state what seems to me to be the essential facts now before us. A Magistrate received information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed concerning certain immoveable property, namely, a house within his jurisdiction. He took proceedings in due form under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and came to the decision that possession over the entire house was with the present applicant Musammat Mahadei and that she was entitled to be maintained in that position unless and until a competent Court otherwise decided. In so far as he passed an order to the above effect, the case is altogether outside the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. It appears, however, that when he was preparing to pass final orders in the case, the attention of the Magistrate was drawn to the fact that, over and above the dispute about the house, there was a dispute between the parties with regard to certain moveables contained in the house itself. During the enquiries which had preceded the Magistrate's decision, some Police officer, presumably acting under section 149 of the Criminal Procedure Code, had ordered that the two rooms which contained this moveable property should be fastened on the outside with two locks, the keys of which were to be in the possession, one of one party and one of the other. The Magistrate was asked to pass some order or issue some direction about this matter. It is, I think, worthwhile to quote in detail from the record before us the order which he did pass: "Now remains the question of the moveable property locked up in kothris with two locks, one of each party by the Police, i. e., to whom they should be given. As regards this I am of opinion that the moveable property can have nothing to do with this case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, because section 145 relates only to immoveables. In this case the question for determination was only possession of the house in question. As regards moveable properties the parties are at liberty to have their rights adjudicated by the Civil Court and until the decision of the Civil Court the kothris should as heretofore remain locked up." Following upon these words comes the formal order of the Court embodying its decision in the proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate adds:—"It is further ordered that the kothris locked up by the Police with the locks of both parties do remain locked up as heretofore unless the rights of the parties are determined by the Civil Court. The parties are at liberty to have their rights regarding the moveables locked up in the kothris adjudicated by the Civil Court, as to which person is entitled to get and how much." Musammat Mahdei applies to this Court on the ground, firstly, that the orders above quoted are without jurisdiction and, secondly, that they were inconsistent with the decision in the proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, according to which she was entitled to receive, and was ordered to receive, possession over the entire house and not over the entire house less two rooms in it. If it were merely a matter of inconsistency in the Magistrate's order, or if it were possible to regard the Magistrate as having, however irregularly, kept these two rooms under attachment by an order under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code, while awarding the rest of the house to the applicant, I should have thought that it was outside the jurisdiction of this Court to interfere. As the case stands, the Magistrate himself has expressly said that the orders which he proceeds to pass about the moveables are not part of his proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code and have nothing to do with the case under that section. Nor has it been sought before us to defend the order upon the merits. If the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass this order at all, it could only be under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It has not been supported before us as a good order under that section. It is either a bad order under that section or it is an order which the Magistrate in his judicial capacity had no jurisdiction to pass. The difficulty raised before us on behalf of the party opposing the application is based upon section 435, clause 3 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The contention is that the order in question is part of a proceeding under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code, and, therefore, is embodied in a record which this Court has no jurisdiction to call for. If it were necessary to determine the case upon this ground alone, I should be content to say that the record has, whether rightly or wrongly, been called for by the order of a learned Judge of this Court, who was competent to decide the question of his jurisdiction to do so; and that under section 439 of the same Code the jurisdiction of this Court is not limited to proceedings the record of which has been called for by its order, or which have been reported for orders, but extends also to cases which otherwise come to its knowledge. I should have been prepared to deal with this matter as a case which had "otherwise come to the knowledge" of this Bench. In the present case, however, I think there is no serious difficulty and I do not believe it to be covered by any of the rulings which have been cited to us. The Magistrate himself expressly says that the order with which we are concerned has nothing to do with the case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is, therefore, as much apart from it as if the Magistrate, in the course of his enquiry under section 145 aforesaid, had found reason to believe from the evidence that one of the parties before him had committed an offence, such for instance as the offence of causing hurt, or of criminal intimidation, of which it behoved him at once to take cognizance, and had there and then recorded a proceeding convicting certain parties before him of such offence and sentenced them to a term of imprisonment. If he had, in this irregular manner, in corporated, in the middle of his proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a proceeding which he himself quite understood to be of a wholly different nature, I am clearly of opinion that nothing in section 435, clause 3, of the Criminal Procedure Code would stand in the way of this Court's calling for the entire record in which the irregular proceeding was embodied, merely for the purpose of examining the said irregular proceeding and satisfying itself as to the correctness and legality of any sentence or order therein recorded or passed. I am quite satisfied that we have jurisdiction to deal with this matter under section 439 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, and, under that section read with section 423 (c) of the same Code, I would set aside so much of the order of the Magistrate as is embodied in the passages above quoted.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. I do not think that there is the inconsistency between the authorities of this Court on this question as is so frequently suggested. The principle in all cases, I think, has always been kept clearly in view. The trouble has arisen over the different methods of applying the practice to the varying circumstances in which the question has from time to time cropped up, and also to the unnecessary frequency with which particular cases of no general importance are reported as if they laid down some general principle. A little care at the Bar in studying the actual facts of the authorities would, I think, remove a great deal of superfluous difficulty which has been raised about this question. I have said all I have to say upon the point of practice in Sundar Nath v. Emperor (9). I would merely add to what I stated there my concurrence in what has been pointed out by my brother, that proceedings in revision in this case, quite apart from the authorities of this Court, are clearly authorised by the expression in section 439, sub section (1); "proceeding which otherwise comes to its knowledge."

BY THE COURT.—We set aside the Magistrate's order directing that the rooms or kothris locked up by the Police with the locks of each party do remain locked up as heretofore.

Order set aside.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 596 OF 1919.

THE DISTRICT MAGISTRATE OF SALEM—RESPONDENT.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 12, 13, 14—"Any other reasonable cause" in s. 13 (f), meaning of—Statements criticising administration of justice in the press, whether amount to professional misconduct—Disciplinary jurisdiction of Court, exercise of, limits of.

The expression "any other reasonable cause" in section 13 (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act should not be understood in an ejusdem generis sense: it covers cases other than those of professional misconduct in the ordinary sense but which render a Pleader unfit for the practice of his profession. [p. 200, col. 2.]

Comments made by a Pleader in the columns of a newspaper as its correspondent on the administration of justice generally in a particular district or in a particular Court do not amount to misconduct within the meaning of section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, as the Pleader cannot be said to have acted professionally even though the comments may exceed the limits of fair criticism or may not be wholly justified. [p. 202, col. 1; p. 204, col. 1.]

Per Krishnan, J.—Although misconduct other than professional may fall under clause (f) of section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, its impropriety has to be considered with reference to the Pleader's professional capacity and it is only if the misconduct can be reasonably held to affect it that it would fall within clause (f) as, the Act deals with a Pleader only in his professional capacity and not in his private capacity. [p. 203, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 105 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Magistrate, Salem, dated the 6th September 1919, framing certain charges against the petitioner under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

SUBRAMANIA IYER v. DISTRICT MAGISTRATE, SALEM.

FACTS.—Petitions for transfer of case from and quashing of proceedings before the District Magistrate of Salem. The petitioner is a First Grade Pleader who has been charged under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act of bringing to contempt the Magistracy in that District, by an article written by him in the "New India."

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Petitioner.—Proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act are competent only when there is professional misconduct of one kind or other. The article in question merely advocates the separation of judicial and executive functions in the administration of Government. It is not written in the capacity of a Pleader nor in the discharge of professional duties. If a Judge or Magistrate is attacked by the article, an action for libel may lie. But a professional punishment under the Act can be admissible only when the act shows moral turpitude or other cause in the practitioner that would unfit him to be a member of the profession. See Wallace, In re (1). This case has been followed in India in First Gradle Pleader, In the matter of (2) and Pleader, In re (3).

[ABDUL RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Will not section 13, clause (f), apply?]

The Act itself applies only when there is something wrong in the conduct of the Pleader as such. Section 14 is confined to acts punishable under the Act committed before the trying Court. Hence clause (f) cannot apply.

Next, the question is whether there is any contempt of Court. The test in such cases is to see whether the act in question is calculated to obstruct or interfere with the administration of justice. See Special Reference from The Bahama Islands, In the matter of (4). I submit that the article does not comply with the test. No order has been questioned and nothing has been done in any pending case. The complaint is that the orders are not worked according to their real tenor and that a separation of functions would remove the evil. If there was any personal attack, the only remedy was by an action for libel. See Mcleod v. St. Aubyn (5). That was the case in Barrow v. Hem Chunder Lahiri (6). At most, this comment upon the work of this District Magistrate may have exceeded the limits of fair criticism.

Thirdly, the "person aggrieved" himself cannot be the Judge, as he has to take evidence and adjudicate on the charge.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The report on which the High Court acts is not binding on it.]

But it is quite natural that he would be biassed. In the present case copies of certain records were refused to the petitioner. Further the prosecutor may have to be examined in the trial.

Lastly, section 14 does not apply to cases coming under clause (f) of section 13, but only to clauses (a) and (b). Clause (f) is not to be read as ejusdem generis with clause (b). Two Second Grade Pleaders, In the matter of (7), District Judge of Kistna v. Hanumanulu (8).

In any case, the proceedings ought not to continue in the Court of a Magistrate who has formed a bias against a party thereto. See Lolit Mohan Moitra v. Surja Kanta (9).

[The Advocate-General cited Pleader, In re (3)].

Pleader, In re (3) merely says that a District Magistrate has no power to transfer.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate-General), for the Respondent.—Conduct towards Court comes under clause (f), section 13 of the Legal Practitioners' Act. The contempt may be without any moral turpitude. The conduct need not even be dishonourable or dishonest, nor need it be in discharge of professional duties. See Pleader, In the matter of (10), District Judge of Kistna v. Hanumanulu

(10) 26 M. 448; 13 M. L. J. 65.

(8). The true and only test is whether such conduct unfits the petitioner to practise as a Pleader.

"Contempt" by a Pleader is necessarily connected with his professional honour and I submit that when a Pleader deliberately misinterprets judicial acts and orders, he is thereby doing an act which is totally inconsistent with such honour. The test is laid down in Rasik Lal Nag, In the matter of (11) and by the Privy Council in Sashi Bhushan Sarbadhicary, In the matter of (12). If the criticism in question is an attack on the administration of justice, then the Pleader has committed 'contempt of Court'.

The High Court cannot transfer the case because (a) the presiding officer of the Court is the person named in the Act who is to try the contempt, (b) the Legal Practitioners Act is a self-contained Act and the provisions of any other enactment relating to procedure cannot be brought in. See Pleader, In re (3).

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Mr. K. V. Subramania Iyer, a First Grade Pleader practising in the Salem District, has been called upon by the District Magistrate of Salem to show cause why he should not be proceeded against under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act with reference to certain statements which occurred in an article contributed by the Pleader to the newspaper "New India" on the 5th August 1919. The gist of the article is to show that the present administration of criminal justice by the subordinate magistracy in the Salem District was not satisfactory. The general complaint was that the present District Magistrate had issued a number of circulars to the Subordinate Magistrates with reference to the granting of adjournments which fettered the discretion of the Subordinate Magistrates in dealing with the cases before them properly. The statements subject-matter of the charge are: (a) "The Magistrates were allowed great latitude to exercise their discretion and judgment unfettered by Police orders or quick despatch circulars. The cases were allowed to take their own course in appeal or revision (that was before the time of the present District Magistrate). The present holder of the office (i.e., the District Magistrate) has issued various mandates for the guidance of the magistracy in the matter of adjournments, grant of copies and disposals."

The statement (b) is: "The Police ask for transfers from the files of Magistrates who grant bail to the accused and the letter of the District Superintendent carried great weight" Then the next extract is to this effect: (c) "where the question of adjournment comes, the Court solemnly consults the circulars and ukases issued from the District Magistrate's Office fixing the number of days and hours for summons, warrant and sessions cases and the convenience of the prosecuting staff."

It is charged that these statements are false and scandalous, made with the intention of bringing the office of District Magistrate and subordinate magistracy into contempt.

It is argued by Mr. T. Rangachariar who appeared for Mr. Subramania Iyer that the statements charged against his client are nothing but fair comment on the administration of criminal justice in the District of Salem, that they do not come within the purview of section 13, Legal Practitioners Act. It is conceded by the learned Advocate-General, who appeared for the District Magistrate, that the statements in question do not fall within clauses (a) to (e) of the section. But he urges that they come within the purview of the residuary clause (f), i.e., "any other reasonable cause." It has been ruled that the phrase "any other reasonable cause" is not to be understood in an ejusdem generis sense, but that it covers cases other than those of professional misconduct in the ordinary sense but which unfit a Pleader for the practice of his profession; for instance, conviction for a crime involving dishonesty or moral turpitude or gross habitual contempt of Court would be covered by the general clause. The learned Advocate-General has especially relied upon the case of Pleader, In the matter of

(11) 38 Ind. Cas. 980: 44 C 639; 24 C. L. J. 190; 20 C. W. N. 1284: 18 Cr. L. J. 420

(12) 29 A. 95 (P. C): 17 M. L. J 74; 4 A. L J 84; 9 Bom. L R. 9; 1 C. W. N. 273; 5 C. L. J. 130; 2 M. L. T. 1; 5 Cr. L. J. 152; 34 I. A. 41.

(10). There the Pleader had written a letter to an officer who was conducting an enquiry into a charge of bribery against a Revenue Inspector, the letter containing allegations which were intended to prejudice the mind of the officer in connection with the matter which he was investigating. That was held to come within the words "any reasonable cause." That, it seems to me, was a fairly clear case, for a lawyer to attempt to cause miscarriage of justice by a letter of that character would, if not strictly professional misconduct, undoubtedly be such as to make him unfit to continue to practise the profession. The next case relied on is Rasik Lal Nag, In the matter of (11). There a Pleader had a quarrel with an officer of the Court in the Court premises and seriously threatened and abused him. That was held to be contempt of Court, although the act was not committed in the actual presence of the Judge, and that it came within clause (f) of section 13. What the learned Judges held was that the conduct of the Pleader amounted to obstructing the course of administration of justice in the particular case in connection with which he threatened the officer of the Court. Sashi Bhushan Sarbadhicary, In the matter of (12) is another case on which the learned Advocate-General laid emphasis. An Advocate of the Court quarrelled with a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court before whom he was conducting a case and then published an article in a newspaper which amounted to a serious contempt of Court. That was not the first time, as pointed out in the Privy Council when the matter went on appeal, that the Advocate had behaved in such an unseemly manner. Their Lordships held that the High Court was justified in taking disciplinary action against the Advocate and said "On the other hand, it is essential to the proper administration of justice that unwarrantable attacks should not be made with impunity upon Judges in their public capacity, and, having regard to the fact that in this case a contempt of Court was undoubtedly committed (and as the evidence shows not for the first time) by an Advocate in a matter concerning himself personally in his professional character, their Lordships agree with the conclusion at which the Judges of the High Court arrived, and that there was 'reasonable cause' for the order which they made." There they cite with approval the following dictum of Lord Westbury in Wallace, In re (1): "It was an offence.....committed by an individual in his capacity of a suitor in respect of his supposed rights as a suitor, and of an imaginary injury done to him as a suitor and it had no connection whatever with his professional character, or anything done by him professionally either as an Advocate or an Attorney."

In the case of District Judge of Kistna v. Hanumanulu (8) the conduct of the Pleader which was held to bring him within section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act was with reference to statements contained in an affidavit filed in a particular case. The learned Advocate-General has not been able to cite before us any case in which comments made on the administration of justice generally in a particular district or in a particular Court have been held to amount to misconduct within the meaning of section 13. On the other hand, there are authorities to the effect that where a Pleader makes imputations against a particular Judge in the capacity of a suitor that would not bring him within the disciplinary sections of the Act. That was the case in Wallace, In re (1) to which reference has already been made, and I might have referred to another passage in the judgment of Lord Westbury where he says: "When an offence was committed which might have been adequately corrected by that punishment and the offence was not one which subjected the individual committing it to anything like general infamy or an imputation of bad character, so as to render his remaining in the Court as a practitioner improper, we think it was not competent to the Court to inflict upon him a professional punishment for an act which was not done professionally and which act, per se, did not render him improper to remain as a practitioner of the Court." That seems to me to be the proper principle to be applied in cases of this character.

The question, then, is whether these statements are such as to render it improper that Mr. Subramania should remain in the profession. We have read the entire article from which these passages have been extracted. There are certain statements in that article which contain certain specific charges against the subordinate magistracy in the District of Salem so far as their methods and conduct in trying criminal cases are concerned. But they are statements not included in the charges framed by the District Magistrate. In writing that article the Pleader cannot be said to have acted professionally. He acted as a member of the public and he thought that he was bringing to the notice of the public an important matter concerning the administration of justice in the District. It is quite possible that some of the statements contained in the article exceeded the limits of fair comment and that the statements cited in the charges contained reflections on the way in which cases are tried in the District of Salem by the Subordinate Magistrates, suggesting that certain circulars issued by the District Magistrate have the effect of influencing the Subordinate Magistrates and that miscarriages of justice sometimes occur in consequence. It is possible that the Pleader has drawn inferences which are not accurate from the fact that those circulars were issued, but we cannot reasonably hold that the statements the subject matter of the charge, or the imputations contained therein, are of such a nature that they would render the Pleader unfit to continue in the profession and bring him within the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Court.

The remedy provided by section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act is not intended to apply to a case in which a Pleader, as an ordinary member of the public, criticises the administration of justice, generally, in a particular district even though such criticisms may, on enquiry, be found not to be wholly justified. Without attempting to define the classes of cases covered by the phrase "any other reasonable cause," I think that clause (f) of section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act cannot be properly utilised in punishing a Pleader for making comments on matters of public interest in the newspapers, merely because such comments exceed the limits of fairness or accuracy. The proceedings, therefore, under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act against Mr. K. V. Subramania Iyer must be quashed.

It thus becomes unnecessary to deal with the other prayer of the petition that the inquiry should be transferred to another Judicial Officer.

SPENCER, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice, for the reasons given by him, that the Pleader was not acting in a professional capacity, or in connection with any particular case, when he wrote the letter which is the subject of the present charges.

Assuming for the purpose of argument that some of the statements in the letter were defamatory of the District Magistrate and the Subordinate Magistrates of the Salem District, that fact will not in itself necessarily imply such moral turpitude in the character of the Pleader as to make him unfitted to carry on his profession of Pleader. Reluctant as we must ordinarily be to stifle an inquiry at a stage before it is known what the evidence that remains to be taken will establish, I can conceive no purpose to be gained by allowing the proceedings to be continued on the charges now framed, and it will not be proper that the inquiry should travel beyond those charges. I, therefore, agree that the proceedings should be annulled.

KRISHNAN, J.—I agree with the judgment just delivered by the learned Chief Justice. The case is one that arose under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. That section deals, first of all, with "taking instructions except as aforesaid", that is, as stated in section 13 (a), and then it speaks of "such misconduct as aforesaid." That has been held to mean any misconduct that would fall under any of the clauses (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f) of section 13 in the Full Bench ruling in District Judge of Kistna v. Hanumanulu (8), which I respectfully follow.

In the present case, the Advocate-General, who appears for the District Magistrate, has conceded that he could not bring this case under any of the clauses of section 13, except the last clause (f) which speaks of "any other reasonable cause." These words are very general; and as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sashi Bhushan Sarbadhicary, In the matter of (12) with reference to similar words in the Legal Practitioners Act, that it is not desirable to try and define what would be reasonable cause. I do not propose to attempt to do it. It has been held by the Full Bench in District Judge of Kistna v Hanumanulu (8) that the clause (f) should not be read in an ejusdem generis sense with the other clauses, following certain rulings of the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts which are cited there. I do not consider that the case in District Judge of Kistna v. Hanumanulu (8) has thrown any real doubt upon the view expressed in the Full Bench case, that clause (f) includes misconduct other than professional, and I am prepared to follow that view. But I think, in considering whether any particular charge against a Pleader falls within the terms "any other reasonable cause" in clause(f), we should bear in mind the scope of the Act, which is one dealing with the legal practitioners as such, and the object of the inquiry that is to be held under section 13 or 14, which is to see whether the Pleader should be suspended or dismissed from practice for misconduct. I think it is necessary to bear this in mind when deciding whether any particular case falls within section 13 or 14 of the Act. The misconduct should, therefore, be, in my opinion, such as would render the continuance of the Pleader in practice as an undesirable thing to be allowed, or so dishonurable or so dishonest as to unfit him from being a member of the profession permanently or temporarily before it should be held to fall within clause (f). Although misconduct other than professional may be held to fall within clause (f), its impropriety has to be considered with reference to the Pleader's professional capacity and it is only if the misconduct can reasonably be held to affect it that it would fall within clause (f), as the Act deals with a Pleader only in his professional capacity and not in his private capacity, as already pointed out above.

As regards the particular case before us, the learned Chief Justice has already set out in his judgment the three passages which form the subject-matter of the charges against the Pleader. They appeared in a letter written by the Pleader to "New India" and published under his own name. I am in agreement with the learned Chief Justice that the publication of these statements by the Pleader which have been referred to is not such an act as would fall under clause (f) as it is not, in my opinion, a misconduct when considered with reference to his position as a Pleader. He cannot properly be suspended or dismissed for unfitness or otherwise punished professionally for it.

The cases cited by the learned Advocate-General on the one side and by Mr. Rangachariar on the other side have been considered by the Chief Justice in his judgment and I do not propose to deal with them at length. Each case, it seems to me, has to be decided on its own facts. No case similar to the present one, where a Pleader has been dealt with under the Legal Practitioners Act because he wrote in a paper commenting upon the supposed undesirable state of criminal administration in any particular District or Presidency, has been brought to our notice. In all the cases cited by the Advocate-General it would be noticed, as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, that the case arose with reference to some particular suit or proceeding before the Court in which a Pleader appeared in his professional capacity, except in the case in Pleader In the matter of (10). That, however, was a case in which the Pleader attempted, by sending an anonymous petition to the Sub-Collector making certain allegations, to interfere with the course of justice in the case before him. Although the Pleader there apparently had no professional relationship with the case before the Sub-Collector, his conduct was certainly so grossly improper when considered with reference to his position as a Pleader as to necessitate his being suspened from practice to bring home to him the impropriety of what he did. That case really has no bearing on the present case, because the facts to be considered in this case are very different. The Full Bench case in District Judge of Kistna v Hanumanulu (8) was a case in which the learned Chief Justice who delivered the judgment thought that it would probably fall under clause (b) of section 13 and though the actual charge was under clause (f), the misconduct there was something closely connected with the discharge of the Pleader's professional duty in the case that was before the Court. The cases relied on by the !Advocate General are thus all distinguishable from the present case: and, on the merits of this case, I have come to the conclusion, as I have said already, that the charges are not such as would properly fall under) section 14, as the Pleader's statements were made in a letter to the public press as a correspondent and are really only comments on the general administration of the District. I agree that comments made in the press, even though they may overstep the bounds of fairness and may not be strictly in accordance with facts, are not matters necessarily to be dealt with under the disciplinary jurisdiction given by the Legal Practitioners Act, I, therefore, agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice that the proceedings before the District Magistrate should be annulled.

As regards the second point taken as to whether the High Court has got the right of transferring proceedings under section 14 from the presiding officer to any other officer, there is a ruling of this Court in Pleader, In re (3) against it and also a ruling in of Janak Kishore In the matter (13) to the same effect. It is, however, a question of some difficulty to decide whether the High Court has the power of transfer under the Letters Patent or the Government of India Act [Lolit Mohan Moitra v. Suria Kanta (9)] with reference to cases under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and whether, if it has such power, it has been taken away by implication by the language of section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act with reference to proceedings under it. But as under section 13 the High Court is entitled to order an inquiry itself, the question of transfer is not of importance as it would be open to us, if we thought that the District Magistrate was not the right person to conduct the present inquiry, to stay proceedings before him and to order an inquiry under section 13 to be held by an officer chosen by us. But on the view we have taken on the merits this question does not require a decision and I do not express a definite opinion on it. I agree to the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 244, 247—Summons case—Non-examination of complainant, whether vitiates trial—Examination of witnesses in absence of complainant, effect of.

The non-examination of a complainant under section 244 of the Criminal Procedure Code in a summons case does not vitiate the whole of the proceedings, as that section merely enjoins that he shall be heard and does not say that he is to be examined, and section 247 of the Code would not apply because it does not deal with the examination of the complainant but with his appearance [p. 205, col 1.]

Section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives power to a Magistrate to adjourn a summons case for sufficient reason when the complainant does not appear and the fact that some witnesses are examined in the absence of the complainant would not vitiate the trial, unless it is shown that the accused was in some way prejudiced. The fact that he cross-examined the prosecution witnesses and examined witnesses in his defence would show that he was not prejudiced in any way. [p. 205, col. 1.]

Reference by the Additional Sessions Judge, Sylhet, dated the 8th November 1919.

Babu Benoyendra Nath Palit, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This reference is based upon a misreading of sections 224 and 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 244 lays down that "if the accused does not make an admission, the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution and also to hear the accused and take all such evidence as he produces in his defence." The section does not say that the complainant himself has got to be examined. The words "the Magistrate shall proceed to hear" are also used in reference to the accused in the same section, which supports the view which we have expressed. Then, section 247 provides that "If the summons has been issued on complaint and upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, or any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned the complainant does not appear, the Magistrate shall, notwithstanding anything here-inbefore contained, acquit the accused, unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day."

On the date fixed for the hearing of this case, namely, the 21st June 1917, the complainant was reported to be ill. The case was adjourned to the 3rd July. It was again adjourned on that day. On the 16th July, the complainant was reported to be ill. On the 31st July the man was still ill, but the Magistrate said that no further adjournment would be granted. On the 6th of August two prosecution witnesses and six defence witnesses were examined and cross-examined. On the 7th, the prosecution filed a petition asking for processes against some more witnesses. On the 28th August the complainant was produced in Court in a very weak state of health and was tendered for cross-examination. But the defence refused to cross examine him. Witnesses were examined and cross-examined and then discharged. The accused was convicted on that day and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 60.

It is contended that the non-examination of the complainant vitiated the whole of the proceedings. Section 247, however, does not deal with the examination of the complainant, but his appearance, and section 244 does not say that he is to be examined but it only says that he shall be heard.

It is further contended that the accused ought to have been acquitted on the 6th August as the complainant had not appeared on that day. But section 247 clearly gives power to the Magistrate to adjourn the case for sufficient reason. The Magistrate adjourned the case. We do not think that the proceedings were vitiated because he examined some witnesses on that day. We do not see that the accused was in any way prejudiced. He cross-examined the prosecution witnesses and examined witnesses in his defence. We think the requirements of the section have been complied with and inasmuch as no prejudice has been shown so far as the accused is concerned, we do not think that we ought to entertain this reference.

We also notice that no notice has been served upon the complainant. He is interested in this matter as he has been allowed compensation out of the fine imposed, he is entitled to be heard.

We have had no opportunity of hearing him and that is an additional ground for not setting aside the original order.

Order accordingly.

Musammat GITABAI—ACCUSED—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 317—Abandonment of child—Facts necessary for conviction—Prosecution, duty of—Section, whether applicable to mere neglect or temporary abandonment.

In order to secure a conviction under section 317, Penal Code, it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove, beyond all reasonable doubt, that the accused had exposed or left a child under the age of twelve years in some place with the intention of wholly abandoning it. That section will not apply to a case of mere neglect or temporary abandonment. If in any particular case there is reasonable doubt as to the intention with which the child was left, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. [p. 206, col. 2.]

Criminal revision of the order passed by the Sessions Judge, West Berar, dated the 13th August 1917, in Criminal Appeal No. 137 of 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—It is necessary to make a somewhat detailed statement of the facts which have been proved in this case, in order to make it clear that all those facts are accepted for the purpose of this revision, and that the dissent from the view taken by the lower Courts, to which I am about to give utterance, is a difference only in the inferences to which those facts appear to give rise. The applicant Gitabai, who was the accused in the trial Court, is a Mahratta Brahmin widow 20 or 25 years old. She was married in infancy and became a widow when she was a child nine years of age. She is a resident of Nariabad in the East Kandesh District of the Bombay Presidency. One Rambhau, P. W. No. 5, who lives at Khamgaon in the Buldana District, is related to her. As the result of illicit intercourse with some man, whose name does not appear, Gitabai became pregnant. In May or June last she accepted an invitation to go and stay at Khamgaon to assist Rambhau's wife who was also expecting a child. According to this arrangement, Rambhau sent a servant (whose name does not appear and who has not been called as a witness in this case for some reason which I cannot understand) to fetch her. She came with him, and they reached the Junction Station at Jalamb about 11 o'clock on the forenoon of the 18th of June 1917. Here they had to change into the branch train for Khamgaon. In order to reach that train the applicant and her companion had to cross an overbridge. While doing so Gitabai was seized with labour pains. The servant went on with the luggage to the train, leaving the unfortunate woman to shift for herself. She went into the latrine on the platform, that being the only place where she could be screened from the observation of the people on the platform, and was there delivered of a child. This latrine is 128 feet or nearly 43 yards away from the overbridge. Immediately after delivery, Gitabai staggered out to the overbridge and sat down. She had been there only five minutes when certain schoolboys who had seen her coming out of the latrine went near her. She asked them for water to drink but their only response was to report the circumstance to a railway porter, who forthwith brought a railway Police constable and others on the scene. When first questioned, Gitabai made some attempt to deny what had happened, but her blood-stained condition and prostration made it patent to everybody, with the result that the child, who had dropped into the bucket in the latrine, was taken out, washed and made over to her. Upon these facts Gitabai was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Khamgaon of an offence punishable under section 317 of the Indian Penal Code on the 9th July 1917, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 12 months. She appealed to the Court of Session, West Berar, but the learned Judge upheld the conviction on the 13th August 1917, though he reduced the sentence to one of rigorous imprisonment for four months. Gitabai, therefore, applied to this Court for revision of the case, and on the 17th September 1917, that is when she had suffered rigorous imprisonment for two months and eight days, I directed that she should be enlarged on her own recognisance in Rs. 100. A Rule was issued to the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction should not be set aside, on the ground that the evidence does not necessarily prove that the applicant wished to abandon her child. The learned District Magistrate sent the Rule on to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who has nothing to add to what he stated in his judgment except the following sentence:—

"I gave a severe sentence as the innocent child would be considered a burden by the convict if left to herself too early."

I do not profess to be able to interpret the true meaning of this sentence. The Magistrate adds that he heard the child is now dead.

Before any person can be convicted of an offence punishable under section 317 of the Indian Penal Code, it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove, beyond all reasonable doubt, that such person has exposed or left a child under the age of 12 years in some place with the intention of wholly abandoning it. The section will not apply to a case of mere neglect or temporary abandonment. The proper interpretation of the word "left" has been discussed in Queen-Empress v. Mirchia (1) and Crown v. Musammat Bhuran (2). With that interpretation I concur. Where there is any reasonable doubt as to the intention with which the child has been left in any particular case, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. In the present case the accused gave birth to a child of shame; as far as the record shows it was her first child. It is clear that her time of delivery came on suddenly and unexpectedly in a place absolutely public. In such a place even a married woman giving birth to a legitimate child would look for some corner where she could be screened from observation. No such place was available to the accused except the latrine on the station platform. The appellant's conduct in going to that latrine was entirely consistent with complete innocence. She was quite alone, her only companion having disgracefully deserted her, and she had no assistance whatever in giving delivery to her child. It cannot be said that in seating herself in the latrine in the usual place she was actuated by any criminal intention. After delivery of the child, though she had a motive, owing to its being a child of shame, to abandon it, she also had a non-criminal motive for trying to hide, her shame from public observation. In her state she could not be expected, at all events in the first few minutes after her delivery, to carry out that child even if she could have lifted it out of the bucket into which it had fallen; for to have done so, supposing that she was physically capable of it, would have been to proclaim her shame to the public on the platform. She did that which was natural and probable in the circumstance by which she was overwhelmed. Weak, giddy and probably hardly responsible for what she did, she crawled back to the place where she had parted from the servant who was her only companion, and there sat down. Almost immediately boys, who had seen her coming out of the latrine and probably knew what had happened, proclaimed the event to the station authorities. Her first denial of having had a child was entirely consistent with the desire to hide her shame from the men,—it is not shown that any woman was then present questioning her. From this single denial the Courts below have inferred an intention on her part of wholly abandoning her child. I am of opinion that such an inference cannot be justified in law. The wretched woman had no chance of showing her real intention. She was pounced upon almost immediately by the Station Police and a case taken up against her. In my opinion the evidence falls far short of what is legally necessary to establish an offence under section 317 of the Indian Penal Code, and I think the conviction of this woman amounted to a failure of justice. The sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment, even if the inference drawn by the Magistrate had been correct, was preposterous. If I had concurred with the Courts below in holding the conviction to be right, I should have considered a sentence of imprisonment for the two months already undergone sufficient in the peculiar circumstances of the case. But taking the view I do, I set aside the conviction and sentence of Gitabai and I acquit her. She will accordingly be discharged from the recognisance on which she was set at liberty.

Conviction set aside.

THE PUBLIC PROSECUTOR OF BHAGALPORE—OPPOSITE-PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Order granting sanction, contents of—Grounds for upholding sanction.

An order under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, granting sanction to prosecute should contain materials to justify the sanction; an order giving no reasons whatsoever for granting sanction cannot be upheld. [p. 208, col. 2.]

The mere fact that sanction is granted to the Public Prosecutor because the Magistrate disbelieved the prosecution story, is not a sufficient ground to justify an order upholding sanction. [p. 208, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Bhagalpore, dated the 22nd December 1919, rejecting the application of the petitioner against the order of the Deputy Magistrate, Bhagalpore, dated the 21st November 1919.

RAMANI MOHAN v. PUBLIC PROSECUTOR, BHAGALPORE.

FACTS appear from the order of the Sessions Judge, which was as follows:—

"The Police found the charge of dacoity to be false, but the enquiring Magistrate has found it to be true though he holds the offence was not committed by the persons accused. He has not given any reasons for granting sanction, but presumably he holds that the latter were falsely charged and with the knowledge there was no just or lawful ground for such. The case is one triable by this Court and hence it is not desirable I should express any opinion on the merits. As sanction has been granted to the Public Prosecutor, I do not think I should interfere, but I trust the enquiring Magistrate will make a careful enquiry before commitment, and remember that the confessions referred to are not admissible in evidence. These persons should be examined. The Magistrate having disbelieved the evidence of identification, a prima facie case may be said to have been established, if his reasons are sound but on these I express no opinion. The application is dismissed."

Mr. Hasan Imam, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—There was a dacoity committed on the night of the 10th November in the house of the petitioner Ramani Mohan Ghose. He charged certain persons with having committed the dacoity, and they were thereupon tried by the Deputy Magistrate who on the 21st of June declared the case to be true but discharged the accused under section 209, Criminal Procedure Code, as there was no evidence against any of them. On the 13th of November 1919, the Public Prosecutor of Bhagalpore applied to the Deputy Magistrate who had tried the original case for sanction to prosecute the petitioner under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Magistrate disposed of the application in these words: "Written cause filed. Heard the learned Mukhtear of the accused and the Public Prosecutor. I sanction the prosecution of Ramani Mohan Ghose under section 211, Indian Penal Code, as applied by the Public Prosecutor."

This order, in my opinion, is insufficient. It has been repeatedly held that an order granting sanction must contain materials to justify the sanction.

An application was filed against this order before the Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur and the learned Judge also felt that the learned Magistrate had given no reason whatsoever for granting sanction, but upheld the order because it had been granted to the Public Prosecutor and the Deputy Magistrate had not believed the original prosecution story; but there must be other circumstances to justify an order granting sanction and as I have got nothing before me in the order which the learned Magistrate passed which can justify the order, I have no alternative but to set it aside and I accordingly do so and direct the Deputy Magistrate to judicially consider the application of the Public Prosecutor and write out an order which may be in accordance with law, giving materials which in his opinion would justify an order granting sanction, because in the case of that order being challenged before a higher tribunal the latter may be in a position to see whether the order is proper or not. With these observations I direct that the record be sent back to the Deputy Magistrate for further consideration of the application of the Public Prosecutor.

Record sent back.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amritsar, dated the 18th March 1919, decreeing the claim with costs.

Mr. Sewa Ram Singh, for the Petitioner.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this petition has arisen was instituted by the Firm of Hari Ram-Sobha Ram, plaintiff-respondent, against the Firm of Prabh Dyal-Kishen Chand, petitioners-defendants, for the recovery of Rs. 389-9-3 on account of damages for breach of contract.

The facts briefly are these :—The plaintiff Firm alleged that the defendant Firm had purchased from them five cases of muls at a fixed rate per piece. A sum of Rs. 5,800 was deposited by the petitioners-defendants with one Ghumandi Mal, and it was alleged by the plaintiff Firm that an agreement was entered into whereby the cases were to be opened and an allowance or discount made for any "cut" pieces they might contain. Four cases were opened accordingly and only five "cut" pieces were discovered, for which the defendant was not charged. Ghumandi Mal handed over Rs. 4,400 to the plaintiffs as the price of four cases, but as the hour was late the defendants went away promising to return on the following day to take over the contents of the fifth case, but failed to do so. The plaintiff Firm thereupon gave notice to the defendants and, in due course, sold the contents of the fifth case for Rs. 931-3-6, bringing the present suit for the difference by way of damages.

The defendant Firm admitted having taken the four cases, but alleged that the real arrangement was that if the goods did not agree with the bills produced by the plaintiff Firm, delivery was not to be taken. It was alleged that the goods did not agree with the bills and that delivery was, therefore, refused and the plaintiff Firm was called upon to take back the four cases, but on their failure to do so, their contents were sold at a loss of Rs. 1,700. The payment of Rs. 4,400 by Ghumandi Mal was alleged to have been collusively obtained.

The Judge, Small Cause Court, has held that the plaintiffs' allegation was correct and has decreed the suit. Hence this petition. For the petitioners Mr. Sewa Ram Singh contended that inasmuch as 93 out of 146 pieces in the fifth case were found to be "cut" pieces, the petitioners were not bound to take delivery and could not be compelled to do so. Reference was made to sections 113 and 118 of the Indian Contract Act and to Secretary of State v. Mr. Johnson (1), Boisogomoff v. Nahapiet Jute Company (2), Mitchell Reid & Co. v. Buldeo Dos Khettry (3) and Peer Mahamad Rowther v. Dalooram Jayanarayan (4). On the other hand Mr. Tek Chand for the respondents urges that this Court should not interfere on the revision side, even if the Court below had committed an error in law, inasmuch as substantial justice had been done. He cited Ghasita v. Sultan (5), Hardial v. Kanshi Ram (6) and Dholan Das v. Ralya Shah (7). With the principles enunciated in these decisions I am in complete accord. It is purely discretionary with this Court to exercise its revisional powers, and each case has to be decided on its own peculiar set of circumstances. It is, therefore, not necessary to discuss the said decisions. The broad rule is that this Court should not interfere to perpetuate injustice but only to promote the ends of justice [Sayad Mir Shah v. Atar Singh (8)]. Mr. Tek Chand further contended that inasmuch as the petitioners had taken delivery of four out of five cases, they were compelled to take the fifth as held by the Court below. The case being of the nature of a small cause, it was not necessary to settle any issues. At a late stage of the case the plaintiffs-respondents applied to the Court for the issue of a Commission to enquire into the existence of a "mercantile usage," which it was alleged existed and by which a buyer was bound to take delivery of goods, being allowed a discount for cut pieces. Counsel for the petitioners-defendants objected on the ground that no "usage" had been set up, and the Court, accepting this contention, rejected the application. In the judgment the learned Judge stated the first point for determination in the following words:—

"Can a buyer be compelled to take delivery of goods containing cut pieces," and decided this point as a matter of "usage" established on the record. Mr. Tek Chand contended that this was justified, as the words used by the Court were wide enough to include the question of "usage" and there was evidence on the record on which such a finding could be based. On the other hand, Mr. Sewa Ram Singh contended that no "usage" having been alleged and no mention of such "usage" having been made in the pleas, the Court below had erred materially in deciding this point in the manner it has done. Further, he contended that the evidence on which the finding had been based related only to retail transactions, and not to wholesale ones as in the present case. To my mind, there is some force in this. It seems to me that what was contracted for was the purchase and sale of whole pieces and that the defendants-petitioners were not bound to accept "cut" pieces. Having found five "cut" pieces in the four cases for which they were not charged (according to the plaint) they were not bound to take over the fifth case, merely accepting the discount or allowance for the 93 cut pieces. The allegation that the defendants petitioners repudiated their arrangement because the price had gone down may be correct. The question really is whether in law they acted within their rights. Admittedly the fifth case contained more than half of "cut" pieces, which was a very considerable variation in the description of the goods contracted for and, it seems to me, therefore, that the present is not one of those cases in which substantial justice has been done and which does not call for interference by this Court. A suggestion was made by Mr. Tek Chand that an enquiry might now be ordered under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code, as to this "mercantile usage." Whether or not this mercantile usage is in existence, it has clearly not been established in the present case and having regard to the fact that it was not pleaded specifically, I do not think I should be justified in allowing the plaintiff-respondents a further opportunity of proving it at this stage.

I accordingly accept this petition and setting aside the decree passed by the Court below, dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Petition accepted.

Plaintiffs, the followers and disciples of a shrine, sued for a declaration that certain property was waqf and that the sale thereof by the defendants was void. The suit having been decreed, the defendants appealed. During the pendency of the appeal one of the plaintiffs-respondents died and no application was made to implead his legal representatives:

Held, that the right to appeal against the deceased plaintiff did not survive against his legal representatives, as he was suing only in his capacity as a follower of the shrine and the appeal did not abate. [p. 211, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Lahore, dated the 2nd July 1915, decreeing plaintiffs' claim with costs.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for Plaintiff-Respondent No. 1 and Mr. Budr-ud-Din Qureshi, for Defendant-Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Mauza Mozang is a piece of land, 4 kanals 17 marlas in area, in which there are a shrine known as that of Hazrat Shah Shamas Kari, a mosque and a garden. Shadu Shah, the former manager of the shrine, died in February 1913. After his death defendants Nos. 1 and 2 became the managers and on the 20th September 1918 they sold to defendant No. 3 28 kanals of land which the plaintiffs allege to be attached to the shrine, and also gave him the right of managing the shrine, mosque, etc. The plaintiffs, who claim to be the disciples and followers of the shrine, sue for a declaration that the whole area of 32 kanals 17 marlas is waqf and that the sale of the 28 kanals is void. They have been given a decree, from which defendant No. 3 appeals. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that the appeal has abated as one of the respondents, Muhammad Din, died more than six months ago and no application has been made to implead his representatives. But Muhammad Din was suing in this case only in his capacity as a follower of the shrine. The right to appeal against him does not survive against his legal representatives, and we hold, therefore, that the appeal has not abated and we overrule the objection.

Nothing has been said in support of the 1st 2nd and 10th grounds of appeal, and the only question argued before us is whether the land in suit is waqf, it being admitted that if the land is waqf, plaintiffs are entitled to the decree passed by the lower Court.

The appellants' contention is that Shadu Shah and his successors, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, were owners of the land in suit. Shadu Shah no doubt described himself as owner in the Wills P 4 and D-10 which he executed in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in 1910 and 1912, but in the Revenue Records he was shown as a tenant, the land being recorded as shamilat deh. The land alienated by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was attached to the shrine as is admitted by some of the appellants' own witnesses, and as is stated in a lease (P-3) executed by Garju in favour of Shadu Shah in 1909. This fact alone is doubtless not sufficient to prove that the land is waqf, and we agree with the contention of Mr. Fazl-i-Husain, who has referred us to Mahmud v. Muhammad Hamid (1) in this connection, that the plaintiffs have to prove that the land has been dedicated as waqf. Evidence has, however, been given as to such a dedication having been made, and the simple question before us is whether that evidence should be believed.

The plaintiffs have produced a large number of witnesses, of whom many have deposed that some 40 or 45 years ago the village proprietors, in their presence and in the presence of a large number of people of the village, dedicated the land in suit, i.e., the whole of the 32 kanals 17 marlas, as waqf, while the evidence of others, who are not old enough to remember that event, shows that they have always regarded the land as waqf. As to this it may be noted that an oral dedication may be inferred from repute, Fakhr-ud-din Shah v Kifayat Ullah (2). The discrepancies in the evidence do not appear to be of much importance. The witnesses are themselves proprietors, and their statements, made against their own interests, as to the land having been made waqf are entitled to considerable weight.

(2) 8 Ind. Cas. 578; 7 A. L. J. 1095.

MONI MOHAN BANERJEE v. ANORADDI CHOWKIDAR.

Of the witnesses produced on the other side we find only one, Maula Bakhsh, who gives his age as 50, stating that the land was not dedicated to the shrine. The fact chiefly relied on by Counsel for the appellant is that no mutation was effected when the waqf is said to have been made, the land being throughout recorded as shamilat deh and occupied by Shadu Shah as a tenant-at-will. It must, however, be borne in mind that there is not the same strong reason for a mutation being effected when land is made waqf as exists in the case of a transfer of land to an individual, who is interested in protecting his title. Moreover, the waqf being created in a public manner by the proprietary body of the village was a sufficient guarantee to Shadu Shah that his possession would not be disturbed. It is not likely that either Shadu Shah or the proprietors by whom the waqf was created would have considered it necessary to have the land entered as waqf in the Revenue Records, so that the fact of no mutation having been effected does not appear to us to be one of great importance.

The decree is distinctly in accordance with the weight of the oral evidence, and the appellant has failed to show that it is wrong. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B.C. of 1885), s. 153—Suit for rent valued at less than Rs. 50—Appeal, whether lies.

Where in a suit for rent valued at less than Rs. 50 the Munsif found not merely that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties but also found that one of the defendants was also a landlord of the tenant defendants and on that basis dismissed the plaintiff's suit:

Held, that an appeal lay from the decision of the Munsif to the District Judge. [p. 213, col. 1]

Sita Nath Pal v. Kartick Gharmi, 8 C. W. N. 434, followed

Rule against the order of the Court of the District Judge, Backerganj.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 25-5-0, being the price of their one third share of rent in kind of a certain jama of which the remaining share was owned by defendants Nos. 7 to 9. The plaintiffs based their claim in the superior howla right on the strength of a potta granted by defendants Nos. 6 and 8. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4, who were the tenant defendants, contested the suit and denied the relationship of landord and tenant. They also set up title in defendants Nos. 6 and 8 and pleaded payment to them. The Court of first instance found that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 4, that the document upon which the plaintiffs relied was a collusive document and that defendant No. 6 was one of the landlords of the tenant defendants and held that the plaintiffs could not recover rent from the tenant defendants unless they established their title in a regular suit. The plaintiffs, thereupon, preferred an appeal to the Disrtrict Judge, which was summarily dismissed on the ground that no appeal lay. Hence this application for revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter, for the Petitioners.—The plaintiffs are the petitioners. The District Judge refused to hear the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay. The superior landlords are opposite parties Nos. 6—9. In 1903 defendants Nos. 6 and 8 granted a tenure to plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 by a potta. Defendents Nos. 7 and 9 continued to be direct landlords of defendants Nos. 1 and 4. On the basis of that potta the suit for rent for 1321—24 was instituted being valued at less than Rs. 50. The superior Maliks were added as parties defendants. They answred that the potta was Benami. The learned Munsif went into the question of the status of defendants Nos. 1—4, who were found to be direct tenants of defendants Nos. 6 and 8. I submit that the question is allowed to be appealed against under section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act. It comes under the proviso to the section. See Sita Nath Pal v. Kartick Gharmi (1), Dena Bandhu Nandi v. Nobin Chundra Kur (2), Ram Kanai Dass v. Fakir Chund Das (3). Defendants Nos. 1—4 dispute my title. First Court upheld their contention. That I submit is undoubtedly a question of title and the decision on it can well be appealed against.

Babu Probodh Chandra Kar, for the Opposite Party.—I appear for defendant No. 6. The question is whether there is a relationship of landlord and tenant. The Munsif did not go into the question of title. The case was not maintainable in appeal. See Hurry Mohun Mozoomdar v. Dwarkanath Sein (4) and Shilabati Debi v. Roderigues (5). The case in Sita Nath Pal v. Kartick Gharmi (1) is distinguishable.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter, in reply.—The case in Shilabati Debi v. Roderigues (5) is not in point. It does not appear whether the tenants set up jus tertii and they were added as parties defendants as in this case, where the Court went into the question and decided in favour of defendants.

JUDGMENT.—I think this Rule must be made absolute. The learned Munsif finds not merely that the relationship of landlord and tenants does not exist between the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 to 4, but he finds further that the document upon which the plaintiff relies is a collusive document and that defendant No. 6 is one of the landlords of the tenant defendants. Those findings make the case very similar to that of Sita Nath Pal v. Kartick Gharmi (1). I, therefore, set aside the order of the learned Judge rejecting the appeal as incompetent and direct the appeal to be restored to its place on the register and disposed of in accordance with law. I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Rule made absolute.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 51—Document entered in wrong book, whether properly registered—Document registered as Will, whether can be used as agreement.

If a document which requires registration is registered but is entered in the wrong book, it cannot be regarded as having been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Registration Act. [p. 214, col. 2.]

Narasamma v. Subbarayudu, 18 M. 364, Indra Bibi v. Jain Sirdar Ahiri, 35 C. 845; 7 C. L. J. 149; 12 C. W. N. 316, followed.

Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that a mortgage of certain land executed by one L. shall not affect their reversionary rights. They relied on a document executed by L., according to which he left all his property to his reversioners and undertook not to alienate the same during his life. This document was registered as a Will and was entered in book No. 3:

Held, that as a Will the document was revocable and had no binding force and as an agreement it was not properly registered within the meaning of the Act and, therefore, could not be given effect to. [p. 214, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 22nd July 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Jullundur, dated the 30th August 1918, dismissing the claim.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, for the Appellant.

Diwan Ram Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 20th of September 1916, one Labhu mortgaged certain property to one Udham Singh for Rs. 1,000. Labhu's collaterals instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, asking for a declaration that the said mortgage would not affect their reversionary rights on Labhu's death. They challenged the mortgage as being without consideration and without necessity. Further they alleged that Labhu had executed a document by which he left all his property to his reversioners and had undertaken not to alienate the same during his life. Various questions were raised as to whether the property was ancestral or self-acquired. The trial Court held that the mortgage was for consideration and necessity and that a part of the property, at any rate, was not ancestral. With reference to the document propounded it was held that it was a Will which Labhu was at liberty to cancel whenever he wished and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed.

Against this order of dismissal the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who agreed with the trial Court as to the nature of the property but held that the document referred to above was one by which Labhu was bound and was not merely a Will. To quote the words of the judgment, "It was not simply a Will revocable at the pleasure of the testator, but an absolute agreement disposing of his property in a certain manner." He did not consider it necessary, therefore, to go into the questions of consideration and necessity but holding that Labhu was precluded from mortgaging the property by this agreement, accepted the appeal and decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

Against this decision Udham Singh the mortgagee has preferred this second appeal through Mr. Dalip Singh, and I have heard Mr. Ram Lal on behalf of the respondents. Mr. Dalip Singh contended that if the document in question was a Will, a Will being always revocable, Labhu was not precluded from executing the mortgage; but that if the document was not a Will but an agreement, then it required registration inasmuch as it created rights in property admittedly over Rs. 100 in value and that, therefore, could not be given effect to. It appears that this document has been registered but was presented for registration as a Will and, as such, was registered and entered in book No. 3. Had it been an instrument relating to dealings with immoveable property, it should have been entered in book No. 1, vide section 51 of the Registration Act. Mr. Ram Lal contended that the document was not a mere Will but an agreement under which certain family disputes were settled; Labhu's rights in the property were limited to a life tenancy and he gave an undertaking that on his death the property should pass free of all encumbrances to the other parties to the agreement. On Mr. Ram Lal's own showing this is a document which required registration and after reading it, it seems to me that if it is not to be regarded as a Will, then it certainly needed registration. Mr. Dalip Singh referred me to Indra Bibi v. Jain Sirdar Ahiri (1), in which it was held that if a document which required registration was registered but entered in the wrong book, it could not be regarded as having been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Act. To the same effect was the decision in Narasamma v. Subbarayudu (2). It is clear that this document was presented as a Will and was registered as such. The object of registration is to publish transactions relating to immoveable property. In my opinion the document in question cannot have the effect given to it by the learned District Judge. As a Will it has no binding force on Labhu. As an agreement it has not been properly registered within the meaning of the Act and, therefore, it cannot be given effect to.

I, therefore, accept this appeal and remand the case to the Court below for disposal on the other points in the case. Stamp on this appeal will be refunded and other costs will abide the event.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

Guardian and ward—Guardian, power of, to bind ward's estate—Agreement with guardian—Intention to bind estate—Form of agreement.

JAGGANNATH PRASAD SINGH v. EKBAL BAHADUR.

A guardian cannot bind his ward's estate in the hands of the ward except by an agreement clearly purporting to do so, and then only in certain cases. Where, therefore, an agreement with the guardian is intended to bind the ward's estate, the agreement should contain a clear expression of such an intention: if it does not do so, the estate cannot be bound in the hands of the ward. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 30th August 1916. The plaintiff, Raj Kumar Jaggannath Prasad Singh, is the proprietor of the Deo Raj. The defendant is an illegitimate son of plaintiff's grandfather, Maharaja Jai Prakash Singh, and a lady called Bibi Najo, by whom he had two daughters and another son, in addition to the defendant. Maharaja Jai Prakash Singh lived an extravagant life, and died leaving debts amounting to 12 lakhs of rupees, and for 10 years, from the year 1883 to the year 1896, his estate was, by special act of Council in the former year, placed under the direction of a manager. At the end of that time, the estate or what was left of it was handed over to the plaintiff's father, Raja Bhikham Narain Singh Bahadur, who died in October 1898, when the plaintiff was six or seven years old. During the plaintiff's minority, the estate was under the management of the Court of Wards. On the 26th October 1913, the plaintiff attained his majority, and took possession of the estate.

In 1904, whilst the estate was under the management of the Court of Wards, the defendant applied to the manager, Mr. A. C. Wright, for maintenance out of the estate, but his application was refused, and in 1905 he brought a suit, numbered 155 of 1905, against the plaintiff, then a minor, through his guardian and manager, Mr. Wright, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Gaya claiming Rs. 3,600 as maintenance at the rate of Rs. 100 per month for the three years immediately preceding the suit. Liability was denied in the written statement, but eventually a compromise was agreed to by Mr. Wright in March 1906, whereby he agreed to pay the defendant, the plaintiff in that suit, a sum of Rs. 2,200 for maintenance up to that date, and from March 1906 to pay him a further sum of 50 per mensem, during the plaintiff's minority, and covenanted that he should be paid this monthly allowance by the plaintiff when he came of age. In addition the defendant was to be paid a sum of Rs. 370 for costs. A petition was then filed in that suit, praying for a decree in accordance with the terms of the compromise therein set out, and on the 19th March 1906 a decree was entered, the operative part of which was as follows:—"It is ordered and decreed that this suit be decreed according to the petition." The petition was then set out in full, shewing the terms already stated, after which the decree continues:—

"And that the sum of Rs. 2,200 and Rs. 970 half of the stamp fee be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, on account of the costs of this suit with interest thereon at the rate of...per cent. per annum, from this date to the date of realization."

It will be seen from what I have just said, that the suit brought to recover maintenance by the defendant was a suit which claimed merely past maintenance, and it has been drawn to our attention that the maintenance was in fact claimed from the estate of the appellant, but under the compromise petition not only was an agreemment made as to past maintenance, but a further agreement was made between Mr. Wright, the manager, and the plaintiff in that suit, relating to the payment of future maintenance from the date of the compromise agreed upon.

When the estate was returned to the plaintiff on attaining his majority in October 1913, he refused to continue payment of the monthly allowance agreed to by the manager under the compromise. The defendant then filed an execution petition, claiming to execute his decree against the plaintiff and threatened to sell a portion of his property in execution of that decree. The plaintiff accordingly instituted the present suit, contending that the defendant was never legally entitled to any maintenance from him or his estate, and further that the compromise decree was entered into without proper authority or due care or diligence on the part of the manager, and was against the interest of the minor, and that it was, therefore, illegal, invalid and ought to be set aside, and claimed a declaration to that effect. He also claimed a refund of the amount already paid during his minority, under the compromise, but this part of the claim is not now persisted in.

At the trial, the learned Judge held that the sums already paid could not be recovered back as, in his view, the decree made the estate liable, and not the plaintiff personally for the maintenance already paid. As this part of the claim is not now persisted in, it is unnecessary to consider it further. With regard to future maintenance, he came to the conclusion that the agreement in the compromise made the plaintiff personally liable for the same and not the estate, and as the decree merely awarded future maintenance in the terms of the compromise, it was a personal decree against the plaintiff for maintenance payable after he should come of age. Having arrived at this conclusion, he decided that the decree, as regards future maintenance against the plaintiff personally, was on the face of it illegal and invalid, and neither the Court of Wards nor the manager had any right to make the plaintiff personally liable or to allow such a decree to be passed against him. He further thought that such conduct was negligence on the part of the manager, and that the decree could not stand, and must be set aside as against the plaintiff. In so far as the learned Judge relied upon the broad proposition that the guardian could not bind his ward by a personal covenant to pay future maintenance, he was undoubtedly right, although the broad proposition was subject to some modification. I apprehend that if it can be shown that the estate of the minor was subject to a future liability, and it was for his benefit to enter into the agreement, an agreement binding the estate would be within the power of the guardian. It is, however, in my opinion, not necessary to discuss this question, because the compromise agreement recorded in the decree did not purport to create a charge upon or in any way bind the estate, but only covenanted for a personal liability of the minor. Had the learned Judge stopped there, his decision could not have been questioned. He, however, proceeded to consider whether the guardian could bind the estate of the minor, and came to the conclusion on the evidence that he could. In the result, although he set aside the decree in so far as it bound the plaintiff personally to pay future maintenance, he held that it should be considered as a decree against the estate of the plaintiff, and ordered that the defendant should get maintenance at the rate of Rs. 50 per mensem from the estate. He said: "I hold that the portion of the decree allowing the defendant future maintenance against the plaintiff personally cannot be maintained and should be set aside. The defendant, however, would get maintenance at Rs. 50 per month from the estate of the plaintiff," and then further on he says: "The plaintiff shall have only this much relief in this case, that the decree in Suit No. 155 of 1905 should not be considered a personal decree against him, but would be considered as a decree against the estate of the plaintiff, viz., Deo Raj Estate. So far as the decree for future maintenance is personal against the plaintiff, it would stand set aside, with the modification that the defendant would get Rs. 50 per month from the estate of the plaintiff as future maintenance and not from him personally." The decree in pursuance of that judgment read as follows:—

"It is ordered and decreed that the suit be and the same is hereby decreed that the decree in Suit No 155 of 1905 would not be considered a personal decree against the plaintiff but as a decree against the estate of the plaintiff, viz., Deo Raj Estate, and the personal decree regarding future maintenance would stand set aside with the modification that the defendant would get Rs. 50 per month from the estate and not from the person of the plaintiff. The plaintiff shall not have any refund from the defendant of any amount, and both parties shall have their own costs of the suit."

It will be observed that the judgment and decree in terms set aside the personal decree for future maintenance against the plaintiff, and substituted what is called a modification of it, but what is in reality the substitution of an entirely differnt decree. Although the Judge had power to set aside the decree in Suit No. 155 of 1905 in so far as it purported to bind the plaintiff personally, he had no jurisdiction to substitute in lieu thereof an entirely different liability, which had not in fact been decreed.

From that decision, the plaintiff now appeals and contends that so far as it purports to substitute for the original decree, which was a personal one, a decree which is binding on the estate, and orders payment out of the estate, the decree is wrong and should be reversed. The defendant has not appealed and, therefore, should not be heard to say that the finding, in so far as it set aside the original decree, is wrong. He contends, however, that he can support that part of the judgment and decree appealed from, which orders payment from the estate, if not upon the learned Judge's reasons, at all events upon other reasons, viz., that the decree in Suit No. 155 of 1905 was in fact a decree against the estate, and that if he can do this, it should be taken that the decree appealed from did not set aside the whole decree as to maintenance payable by the plaintiff, but only that part of it which made the plaintiff personally liable. In my opinion, the learned Judge clearly meant to set aside the decree altogether, in so far as it awarded maintenance payable by the plaintiff after he came of age, as he expresses the view that the decree was a personal one and not a decree against the estate for future maintenance, and as the defendant has not appealed from this part of the decision, he must be bound by it, in so far as it is against him. I agree, however, that if the learned Judge was wrong in considering the original decree as only a personal decree against the appellant, it might still be open to the respondent to contend that that part of the decree which gave him a liability against the estate should remain, because what was set aside by the learned Judge was merely the decree in so far as it was a personal one. But the defendant, in my opinion, must necessarily fail to establish the hypothesis upon which his argument was based, viz., that the original decree was binding on the estate. I have already drawn attention to the fact that the plaint in the original suit only claimed past maintenance, and so far as any agreement was come to and authorised by the decree as to future maintenance, it was merely something which was done by reason of the agreement between Mr. Wright, the manager, and the present respondent. It is clearly established law that a guardian cannot bind his ward's estate in the hands of the ward, except by an agreement clearly purporting to do so, and then only in certain cases. If persons enter into agreements with the guardians of minors, they must, if they wish to bind the estate, take care to see that the agreement expresses such an intention. Unless this is done, the estate cannot be bound in the hands of the minor. See Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath Pertap Narain Singh (1). Having considered what the effect of the agreement was, I have arrived at a very clear conclusion that the only effect of it was, so far as future maintenance was concerned, to impose a convenant upon the appellant personally to pay the sums there agreed to.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the lower Court, in so far as it directs that the decree in Suit No. 155 of 1905 would be considered a decree against the Deo Raj Estate for future maintenance and that the defendant would get Rs. 50 per month from the estate, must be set aside, and let it be decreed that the compromise and the decree based thereon, dated the 14th March 1905, in Suit No. 155 of 1905, in so far as they purport to render the appellant liable for future maintenance, are hereby set aside. Each party will bear his own costs of this appeal.

COUTTS, J.—I agree.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1163 OF 1919.

February 19, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.

GHULAM RASUL, MINOR, THROUGH HIS MOTHER Musammat GHULAM FATIMA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Musammat BEGAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7—Arbitration, reference to—Compromise by guardian ad litem subsequent to reference—Benefit of minor—Court, duty of—Report of arbitrators embodying compromise, whether award—Decree based on compromise, whether binding on minor.

The parties to a suit referred their dispute to arbitration. In the course of arbitration proceedings they presented a written compromise amicably settling their dispute. The arbitrators thereupon made a report to the Court to that effect requesting it to pass a decree in accordance with the compromise, which was done. Plaintiff, who was represented by a guardian ad litem in the previous proceedings, then sued for a declaration that the decree thus obtained was ineffectual against him, and for possession of certain properties alleging that the guardian had in disregard of his duties allowed the properties in dispute to be allotted to the defendant:

Held, (1) that the report of the arbitrators embodying the compromise entered into between the parties was not an award; [p. 220, col. 2.]

(2) that it was the duty of the Court to have examined the compromise and to have decided whether it was for the benefit of the minor and whether leave should or should not be given to the guardian of the plaintiff to enter into the proposed compromise; [p. 220, col. 2.]

(3) that the decree passed in accordance with the compromise was not binding on the plaintiff, inasmuch as the compromise was not sanctioned by the Court under Order XXXII, rule 7, of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 221, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 24th March 1919, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 23rd December 918, decreeing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Husain and Malik Muhammad Husain, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Babu M. N. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by a minor for a declaration that a compromise entered into by his guardian ad litem, Maula Bakhsh, in the course of arbitration proceedings and the award and the decree based thereon are not binding upon him. The suit further included a claim for possession of certain property and for declaration of right to certain other property. The facts giving rise to this suit are as follows :—

One Mehr Bassa, an Arain, died leaving a widow, Musammat Begam, three daughters, Musammat Zainab, Musammat Mehran and Musammat Bhagan, and a grandson Ghulam Rasul, the son of his deceased son Fazal Din. The land to which the present suit relates was mutated in the name of Ghulam Rasul on the 10th of May 1916. An appeal against the mutation order proved unsuccessful. A suit was instituted by the widow Musammat Begam and the three daughters against Ghulam Rasul who was a minor for the recovery of 19/24ths share of the property left by the deceased Bassa. Maula Bakhsh was appointed the guardian ad litem of the minor defendant. The parties then presented a petition to the Court agreeing to refer their dispute to arbitrators for decision. The guardian ad litem applied to the Court for permission to refer on behalf of the minor. It appears that the Court expressly recorded in the proceedings the agreement to refer on behalf of the minor and gave the necessary sanction. The suit was accordingly referred to arbitrators for decision. When the matter came before the arbitrators, they proceeded to take evidence and the depositions of certain witnesses were recorded. On the 21st of August 1917, the parties presented a written compromise by which they settled their dispute amicably. Under the compromise the three daughters withdrew from their claim. The property was then divided between the widow Musammat Begam and Ghulam Rasul, the grandson of Bassa. Musammat Begam received under the compromise:—

(a) Well Modan Kadanwala together with land appurtenant to the well situate in Mauza Khui Miran including common lands,

(b) Well Masjidwala together with appurtenant land approximately 10 bighas,

(c) four bullocks and one gadda together with the bullock of the gaddi.

The rest of the property left by Bassa was allotted to Ghulam Rasul, the grandson of Bassa. A portion of the residential house in which Musammat Begam was residing was also allotted to her for life. Full proprietary rights with powers of alienation, etc., were conferred on Musammat Begam over the properties allotted to her. It is stated that in relation to the compromise before the arbitrators the three daughters of Bassa made oral statements in which they said that they had withdrawn their claim, because they had no right as heirs in the property of their father Bassa under the customary law to which the parties were subject. On this the arbitrators made a report to the Court, informing it that the parties to the suit which had been referred to them for arbitration had settled their dispute by a compromise. In that report it was stated that as the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4, under the customary law applicable to the Arains of District Lahore, had no right in the property and could not receive any share in the inheritance, they had withdrawn their claim and had made oral statements to the effect that they had no claim then, nor would they have any claim in future. At the end of the report the arbitrators made this significant request to the Court: "Lihaza guzarash hai keh mutabiq razinama ke degree sadar farmai jawe" (it is prayed that a decree may be passed in accordance with the compromise). This report is dated the 21st of August 1917 and is to be found at page 165 of the record of the Suit No. 32/1 of 1917, decided on the 21st of August 1917. On receipt of this report the Court passed a decree in accordance with its terms, and it is this decree with respect to which a declaration is sought that it may be declared to be ineffectual against the plaintiff. The grounds on which this decree is attacked are as follows:—

(1) that the parties being governed by the customary law, the whole of the property left by Bassa ought to have gone to the plaintiff and that the guardian, in disregard of his duties as a guardian, entered into a compromise and allowed the property in dispute to be allotted to the defendant Musammat Begam;

(2) that necessary sanction to compromise the suit on behalf of the plaintiff was neither obtained from Court nor from the arbitrators as provided by Order XXXII, rule 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The suit was contested on behalf of the defendant mainly on the following grounds:—

(1) that the decree passed in the previous suit operated as res judicata and that the plaintiff was estopped from instituting the present suit;

(2) that the parties were governed by the Muhammadan Law and not by custom; and

(3) that inasmuch as the compromise had been entered into after reference to arbitration, permission by Court to compromise was not necessary and that the decree, being based on the award, was binding upon the plaintiff.

The real question, however, which ought to have been decided was whether the interest of the minor had in any way suffered by reason of the compromise. The solution of this question depends upon the answer to be given to the following question, namely, whether the parties were governed by customary law or the Muhammadan Law. Under the customary law the plaintiff would be the sole owner of the property left by Mehr Bassa. On the other hand under the Muhammadan Law he would be treated as a mahjub and would get no share. From the proceedings before the arbitrators it appears that it was admitted on all hands that the parties were governed by customary law. In fact that was the ground on which the daughters of Mehr Bassa had withdrawn their claim. The arbitrators themselves in this report stated that the parties being governed by the customary law the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 had withdrawn from the suit. The guardian ad litem, inspite of this circumstance, consented to an appreciable property being given away to Musammat Begam absolutely with powers of alienation. On the face of the arbitration proceedings, therefore, it is clear that he paid no regard to the interest of the minor. The Court of first instance, therefore, held that for want of sanction by the arbitrators to enter into compromise, the award was bad and the decree passed on it was not binding on the plaintiff. It was of opinion that the procedure provided by Order XXXIII, rule 7, also applied to a compromise presented before an arbitrator and that inasmuch as in this case neither the Court nor the arbitrators had given the necessary sanction in the manner provided by law, no valid decree could have been passed on the basis of the compromise. The first Court accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit. The lower Appellate Court on appeal took a different view and held that the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 7, did not apply to a compromise entered into before the arbitrators and that the decree being based upon an award, the plaintiff had no right to question it. In appeal, therefore, the suit was dismissed. Against this appellate decree the present second appeal has been preferred and it has been argued that the parties being governed by the customary law, the interest of the minor has suffered by reason of the compromise. It has been further contended that there was no award given by the arbitrators in this case and that the decree passed by the Court cannot be said to be based upon an award.

I have given most anxious consideration to both these contentions. The decision of the point is not free from difficulty, and this difficulty is very much enhanced on account of the fact that no decided case dealing directly with the precise question argued before me has been cited by either side. Having regard to the nature of the proceedings before the arbitrators, I am inclined to hold that no award was given by the arbitrators in this case. The report by the arbitrators which is claimed to be an award, on the face of it, does not profess to be an award. The arbitrators merely stated the terms of the compromise and asked the Court to pass a decree on the compromise. The policy of the law being that the interests of minors should be protected, there appears to be force in the reasoning of the Court of first instance that the compromise produced before the arbitrators also required sanction. It is not, however, necessary for me to decide this question, as I am of opinion that no award was given by the arbitrators at all in this case as they merely professed to forward the compromise to the Court with a request that a decree might be passed by the Court itself. This view receives support from the decision in the case of Kishen Narain v. Puran Chand (1). In that case also a very much similar question arose for decision. I take the following passage from the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Scott-Smith who decided the case: "The arbitrators did not themselves make any enquiry into the merits of the dispute and there was no necessity for them to do so, as the parties had settled it themselves. The first question is whether the document dated the 14th of July 1912 is an award or not. In coming to the decision that it is an award the learned Divisional Judge has relied chiefly on Gobardhan Das v Jai Kishen Das (2). In that case an award, which purported to be a considered award of the arbitrators framed after consideration of the statements of the parties and the evidence of the witnesses, was found in reality to be merely an adoption by the arbitrators of an agreement arrived at and signed by the parties to the reference. It was held that this does not prevent an award being a valid and binding award between the parties. * * * In the present case the agreement between the parties though signed by the arbitrators, has not been adopted by them as their own award at all and it does not purport to be their award. Whether the agreement is or is not binding upon the parties, I am clear that it is not an award to which the provisions of rule 20 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code apply."

This reasoning fully applies to the facts of the present case. I am clearly of opinion that the decree impugned in this case was not a decree passed upon an award, but it was based on the compromise entered into between the parties. It was the duty of the Court to have examined the terms of the compromise and to have decided whether it was for the benefit of the minor. Under Order XXXII, rule 7 the Court ought to have considered whether leave should or should not have been given to the guardian of the plaintiff to enter into the proposed compromise, and this ought to have been expressly recorded in the proceeding. As this was not done, in my opinion the whole of the proceeding was vitiated and the decree passed on the compromise cannot be said to be binding upon the plaintiff.

I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree and judgment of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance though on somewhat different grounds. The successful plaintiff is entitled to his costs throughout.

I may note that a good deal of argument was addressed to the Court by both the parties on the question whether Mehr Bassa was subject to customary law or was governed by the Muhammadan Law and a number of authorities were cited pro and con by the Counsel representing the respective parties, but in the view which I have taken of the case, I have not thought it necessary to give any decision on this particular question. The question remains open and will be tried on the merits in the light of such evidence as the parties have already given or may give hereafter.

Appeal allowed.

Jones v. H. Ledgard, 8 A 340 at p. 348, A. W. N. (1888) 107, followed.

The matter in dispute was sent to the arbitrator on the 6th January 1919 and he was directed to make his award by the 12th January. No award was made by that date and the Court fixed 15th January for the delivery of the award without extending the time in so many words. No award was made even then and the Court ordered that it should be sent for. The award was finally made on the 18th:

Held, that the time for the delivery of the award not having been extended either explicitly or implicitly by the order of the 15th January, the award was a nullity.

Mr. S. A. Razaq, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The objection that the Court below did not give sufficient time for objections is withdrawn, but it is urged that the award was a nullity inasmuch as it was not delivered within the period fixed by the lower Court and Jones v. H. Ledgard (1) is cited.

The latter objection has force. On 6th January 1919 the case was sent to the arbitrator, who was directed to make his award by 12th January. On the 12th January no award had been made and the Court bade the arbitrator come to a decision without delay and fixed 15th January for the delivery of the award, though without extending the time in so many words On 15th January similarly there was no award and the Court ordered that it should be sent for (mangwai jave).

The award is dated 18th January and was delivered to the Court that day.

The time for the delivery of the award was not extended either explicitly or implicitly by the order of January 15th and the award is a nullity.

I accept the petition, set aside the lower Court's decree and remand for a fresh decision on evidence, costs to abide the result of the case.

Petition accepted.

S. A. No. 2423 OF 1917.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghosh (with him Babu Baranisibas Mukerji), for the Appellants —

The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain shares of the members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law and for partition. The joint family consisted of six members, viz., the Karta Mohar Singh, his wife Rani Kumari and five sons, one of whom being dead his share reverted to Rani Kumari the mother. I will give a chronological history of the transactions that were carried on in regard to the property in dispute. Mohar mortgaged the property to one Madhu Sudan who, in execution of a mortgage decree purchased the property in 1890 but did not take possession of it. In 1892 in execution of a rent decree obtained by the co sharer landlords against Mohar, the property was purchased by the latter's Benamdar Umesh. In 1897 the latter conveyed the property to Rani Kumari in favour of one of her minor sons. In 1901 Rani Kumari conveyed the property to defendant No. 5, who again in 1906 conveyed plot No. 1 of the property to Kristo Lal, the father of the appellant in Second Appeal No. 2407 before your Lordships. In 1907 on the death of the mortgagee of Mohar the property was sold to a Benamdar of the former. In 1910 defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the co-sharer landlords, obtained a rent decree against the persons in possession of the land and in execution of that decree defendent No. 1 purchased $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the property. The plaintiffs' case was that their interest did not pass by that sale and that, therefore, they were entitled to their share of the property.

The first Court gave a partial decree but the Court of appeal below dismissed the suit. I would submit that Mohar was the Karta of the joint family and all these series of transactions which were Banami did not bind the plaintiffs, who were minors, and their interest was not in any way affected by defendant No. 1's purchase. The rent decree in execution of which defendant No. 1 purchased was against the persons in possession. The plaintiffs were in possession and that was a sufficient notice to defendant No. 1, who all along knew that the transactions were Benami. The learned Judge did not consider this at all. The case ought to be remanded.

Babu Mohendranath Ray (with him Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal), for the Respondents.—The learned Judge has considered all the facts carefully and his findings conclude the case. The defendant No. 1 was a bona fide purchaser and did not know that the transactions were sham and Benami. The mere fact that the plaintiffs were in possession would not constitute constructive notice. The findings on the point are clear. Then as regards the other question raised by the appellants that they are not bound by the transactions of the Karta of the joint family as they were minors, they did not at all challenge those transactions but from their conduct it would appear that they accepted them. They cannot now turn round and say that they are not bound by those transactions and thereby defeat the rights of defendant No. 1.

S. A. No. 2407 of 1917.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellant.—This appeal relates to plot No. 1 conveyed by Rani Kumari to Kristo Lal in 1906. As the facts have already been stated by my learned friend for the appellants in the other appeal, I would only submit that Kristo Lal was a bona fide transferee and had acquired a valid title to the property, as the transfer was made to him with the clear intent of defeating and defrauding the creditors. That Kristo Lal was not a Benamdar but a bona fide transferee for value would also appear from the copy of the decree if your Lordships would allow that to be put in. The finding of the Court of Appeal below is not based on a proper apprehension of the facts. The plaintiffs, cannot, therefore, in law recover the property sold to Kristo Lal who was a bona fide transferee for value.

Babu Baranasibasi Mukerjee, for the Respondents.—The finding of the lower Court is conclusive. It distinctly states that Kristo Lal was a Benamdar. The transfer was not made with any intent to defeat the creditors' claims. Further the point now raised is not maintainable, as it was not raised in the Courts below where we could have fully met the point. In the Courts below he rested his title on the ground of bona fide transfer and the Courts found that he was a Benamdar only. Neither can be put in the decree in support of his contention in second appeal, as he had ample opportunities to do so in the Courts below.

S. A. No. 2426 of 1917.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray (with him Babu Surendranath Das Gupta), for the Appellants.—The landlords-defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the appellants in this appeal. They obtained a rent decree for their share of rent against the heirs of Mohar in 1910 and in execution thereof the property was purchased by defendant No. 1. No partition ought to be granted as that would mean the splitting up of the tenure and would bind all the co sharer landlords, who jointly own the land.

Babu Mohendra Nath Ray (with him Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal), for the Respondents, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

S. A. No. 2423 of 1917.

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain shares in a property belonging to a joint Mitakshara family and for partition.

The family consisted of one Mohar Singh, his wife Rani Kumari and five sons Jagannath, Nanda, Sankar, Gouri and Durga Prosad, the last being dead.

It appears that the property was mortgaged by Mohar Singh to one Madhu Sudan, who sued on his mortgage and in execution of his decree purchased the property on the 19th November 1890. Madhu Sudan, however, did not enter into possession of the property and the property remained as before in the possession of Mohar's family. On the death of Madhu Sudan, his executor Syama Charan sold the property to Raghu Nath, defendent No. 5, on the 8th January 1907. This Raghu Nath was a Benamdar of Mohar's family.

In March 1892, the property was sold in execution of a decree for rent obtained by certain co sharer landlords against Mohar, his mother, his wife Rani Kumari and two of his sons Jagan Nath and Nanda who were then minors represented by their guardian. The property was sold for Rs. 55 only and purchased by one Umesh, who has been found to be a Benamdar for Mohar. Umesh executed a conveyance in favour of Rani Kumari as guardian of her minor son Jagan Nath in June 1897. The latter again executed a conveyance of the property in favour of one Raghu Nath defendant No. 5, on the 24th August 1901. Raghu Nath transferred plot No. 1 only to Kristo Lal on the 21st September 1906.

Now, all these transactions from the date of the purchase by Umesh at the sale held in execution of the decree in 1892 up to the date of transfer to Kristo Lal on the 21st September 1906 have been found to be Benami transactions entered into by Mohar for saving the property from the hands of the purchaser Madhu Sudan, who had purchased it in execution of the mortgage decree in November 1890.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who are some of the landlords then sued Jagan Nath, Shama Charan, Raghu Nath and Kristo Lal for their share of the rent and obtained a decree in execution of which the defendant No. 1 purchased a 2/3rd share of the property in 1910. The defendant No. 1 purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in that case.

The plaintiffs, who are the three sons of Mohar, namely, Nanda, Sankar, Gouri, and Rani Kumari as the heiress of her deceased son Durga Prosad alleged that their interest did not pass by the sale and that they were entitled to their share of the property and demanded a partition of the same.

The Court of first instance was of opinion that the rule of estoppel could not bind the minors and it accordingly decreed the claim of two of the plaintiffs, namely, Sankar and Gouri, and disallowed the rest of the claim. The share of Sankar and Gouri is $\frac{1}{3}$rd of $\frac{2}{3}$rds=2/9ths. The Court of first instance gave a decree for the said 2/9ths share plus $\frac{1}{3}$rd share which had not been sold, the total being 5/9ths.

On appeal, the learned Additional District Judge held that the minors were also estopped and accordingly dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs except as to $\frac{1}{3}$rd which had not been sold at all.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

Two questions have been raised before us, first, whether the rule of estoppel by conduct applies to minors and, secondly, whether there was any representation which misled the purchaser defendant No. 1 so as to constitute an estoppel.

Now, the position of things appears to be this. Mohar was the manager of the joint family properties. He entered into these Benami transactions for the purpose of saving a portion of the estate from the hands of Madhu Sudan, who had purchased the family property at the sale held in 1890. The plaintiffs have expressly stated in their plaint that Raghu Nath as well as Jagannath and Kristo Lal were Benamdars of their family. The Benami transactions entered into by the father, therefore, were not only not challenged by the plaintiffs but were accepted by them and if any rights have sprung up, based on those transactions, such rights cannot be defeated by the plaintiffs. If they accepted the transactions entered into by the head of the family, they must be bound by the effect of such transactions. In this view of the matter it is unnecessary to consider the question whether the rule of estoppel by representation would apply to minors.

The next question is whether there was representation by which the defendant No. 1 was misled.

It appears that what was sold in execution of the rent decree obtained by the co-sharer landlords defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was the right, title and interest of certain persons "in possession of the land and Jama standing in the name of late Ram Singh, the father of Mohar." Four persons were named as the persons whose interest was sold, namely, Jagannath son of Mohar, Syama Charan executor of Madhu Sudan, Raghu Nath and Kristo Lal. The plaintiffs' case was that the defendant No. 1 knew the truth, namely, that the the property had remained joint family property inspite of the ostensible transfers in the names of Jagannath, Raghu Nath and Kristo Lal. The learned Additional District Judge says in his judgment: "I see no adequate ground for finding that the defendant No. 1 did know that the property had remained with the whole family. Had he known that, I do not see why he should have made this purchase in a sale in execution of a decree in which the persons sued were Jagannath, Raghu Nath and Kristo Lal. I cannot see that is anything positively to indicate that he knew this." In the next paragraph he says: "Though in the nature of the case there would have been no express representation, nevertheless it is argued on behalf of the defendants the whole conduct of Mohar or the family was such as to make people suppose that they were the owners. Raghu Nath was the ostensible owner. All open action to be taken with regard to the property had been taken by him. The family gave all the world to understand that he was the owner. I, therefore, do not see my way to accept this argument on behalf of the plaintiffs. I decide that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in giving effect to the estoppel as against the major plaintiffs." The learned Judge accordingly came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were estopped.

In arriving at this conclusion, however, the learned Judge does not appear to have taken into consideration the fact referred to above, viz., that when the property was put up to sale and purchased by defendant No. 1, certain persons were described as being in "possession of the Jama." One of them, no doubt, was Raghu Nath a Benamdar, another Kristo Lal a Benamdar for one of the plots. But there was Jagannath also and though at one time the property stood in his name, he was the eldest son of Mohar and a member of the joint family and was described as one of the persons in possession. Syama Charan, executor of Madhu Sudan, was also named as one of the judgment-debtors. It was never suggested that he was a Benamdar for the family. It is true that the learned Judge has referred to the fact that defendants purchased at a sale in execution of a decree passed against Raghu Nath, Jagannath and Kristo Lal, but the fact that they were described as persons in possession does not appear to have been considered by the learned Judge.

It is pointed out on behalf of the appellants that possession is notice and that at any rate the description should have led the purchaser to inquire as to who was the real owner and in whose possession the property was. The question as to how far the matters pointed out above could operate as constructive notice in the circumstances of the case, is one which ought to be considered by the Court dealing with facts in connection with the question of representation by conduct in determining the question of estoppel; in other words, whether the defendant No. 1 was misled when he purchased the property.

The plaintiff Rani Kumari's share in the property as heiress of her deceased son Durga Prosad should also be considered by the Court below.

We think, therefore, that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the Court may come to findings upon these questions and then dispose of the appeal according to law.

Costs to abide the result.

S. A. No. 2407 of 1917.

The appeal is by Kristo Lal's representative (Kristo Lal having died pending this litigation) and relates only to plot No. 1.

The contention of the appellant in this appeal is that the Benami transaction was entered into for defeating the creditors, that the creditors were defrauded and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to get back the property.

Now, Kristo Lal was the ostensible transferee of plot No. 1 from Raghu Nath. It has been found by both the Courts below that the conveyance in his favour was merely a Benami affair and that there was no real transfer to him. The contention now raised before us was not raised in either of the Courts below. Even if the question is allowed to be raised, we do not think that the contention has any force. In the first place, the purchase by Madhu Sudan was in 1890 and the transfer to Kristo Lal was in 1906.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that nobody had in fact been defrauded and Madhu Sudan actually sold the property to the joint family in the name of Raghu Nath for Rs. 1,000 on the 8th January 1907. Had the question been raised in the Courts below, they might have shewn that in fact no one had been defrauded. But assuming that this Benami transaction was entered into for getting an advantage over Madhu Sudan or to compel him to sell the property to the family at a low price, it appears that the fraud had been completed before the transfer to Kristo Lal. As stated above, Madhu Sudan purchased in 1890. More than 12 years had expired in 1902 and the transfer to Raghu Nath did not take place until four years later. The transfer to him, therefore, cannot be set up as having been made in order to defraud the creditors. In the next place, in order to enable Kristo Lal to retain the property, he must expressly set up the illegality of the object and admit that he had been holding for a different purpose from that for which he took the property. He did not set up any such plea. His case was that he was a bona fide transferee. That case has been found against him by both the Courts below.

We may mention that the legal representative of Kristo Lal who was substituted in this case wanted to put in a copy of the decree in which it was held that he was not the Benamdar of the property. It appears, however, that all the evidence in the case had been taken before Kristo Lal's death, and he never asked the Court for permission to produce any such evidence. In these circumstances, we do not think that we ought to allow his legal representative to produce that evidence at this stage of the case and we accordingly disallow that application.

The appeal is dismissed. Each party to bear his own costs in this appeal.

S. A. No. 2426 of 1917.

In this case the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, co-sharer landlords at whose instance the property was sold, are the appellants. Their contention is that there should be no decree for partition in the present case and that they being the landlords, a partition of the lands would have the effect of splitting up the tenure and would bind them.

It appears, however, that they claimed a tenancy right in the lands. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that they failed to prove that they had any permanent tenancy right. This is a matter which they themselves invited the Court to decide and it has been decided against them. This will not, however, in any way affect their interest as landlords or have the effect of splitting up the tenure merely because they were parties to the suit.

With these observations we dismiss the appeal. Each party to bear his own costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), O. XLI, r. 27, O. XLVII, r. 1—Appeal—Additional evidence, admission of—Procedure—Objection in second appeal—Waiver, what amounts to.

An Appellate Court would not be justified in allowing a plaintiff an opportunity of adducing evidence which he has discovered since the institution of the suit in the Court of first instance. The proper procedure in such a case is for the plaintiff to apply for review of the judgment of the first Court [p. 227, col. 2.]

The legitimate occasion for the use of the provision contained in Order XLI, rule 27, of the Civil Procedure Code is when on examining the evidence as it stands some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, and not where a discovery is made outside the Court of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it. [p. 227, col. 1.]

Where upon an application to allow additional evidence to be tendered, the opposite party takes objection to the grant of the application but the objection is disallowed, whereupon he, too, requests permission to produce additional evidence, this does not amount to a waiver of his right to object in second appeal to the procedure of the Appellate Court. [p. 227, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah.

Mr. Sambhu Saran, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. N. Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Arrah. The only question argued before me is whether the learned Judge had the power to take further evidence in the case in the appellate stage.

The suit was a suit for recovery of possession of certain lands, and the important question involved in that suit was whether Gobardhan father of plaintiff was or was not the son of Tahal Ahir. The Court of first instance, having considered all the evidence, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to prove that his father Gobardhan was the son of Tahal Ahir and in that view that Court dismissed the plaintiff's action.

In the Appellate Court the plaintiffs filed two certified copies of Zarpeshgi deeds, one dated 18th January 1888 and the other dated 28th June 1884: they also filed an affidavit to the effect that they had no knowledge of those deeds during the pendency of the proceedings in the Court below. The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that those two documents were important pieces of evidence in the plaintiffs' favour. In that view he remanded the case to the Court of first instance to try the whole case.

It is argued before me by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant that the Appellate Court had no power to admit fresh evidence in appeal, and reliance is placed on the Privy Council case of Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1). In that case it was pointed out by the Judicial Committee that "The legitimate occasion for section 568 of the Civil Procedure Code", (section 568 corresponds to the present Order XLI, rule 27), "is when on examining the evidence as it stands some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, and not where a discovery is made outside the Court of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it; that is the subject of the separate enactment in section 623."

The learned Subordinate Judge has done exactly that which the Privy Council in Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1) say that he was not entitled to do. The Privy Council pointed out that an Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to admit additional evidence.

The learned Vakil for the respondents says that the Appellate Court may not have worded its judgment properly, but that there was a defect or lacuna in the proceedings. I am unable to hold that the learned Subordinate Judge did not mean what he said he meant. It is clear from the judgment that he did not consider the evidence in the case at all. Therefore, he had not arrived at the stage when he could pronounce that there was an inherent defect or lacuna apparent in the proceedings. He took the view that it was just and proper that the plaintiff should have an opportunity of adducing evidence which he had discovered since the suit came to an end before the Court of first instance. That view, in my opinion, is wrong and cannot be sustained. The proper procedure was for the plaintiff to apply for review of the judgment to the Court of first instance; that he did not do, and in my view the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction at all to admit fresh evidence in the appellate stage.

It was argued that as the defendants consented to the order of remand that order must stand, and that there is no appeal from a judgment by consent. The case of Jagarnath Pershad v. Hanuman Pershad (2) is relied upon. I do not decide whether the case cited by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the respondents is an authority for the proposition, namely, that there can be a waiver of a question like this by consent. It appears that in the case reported in Jagarnath Pershad v. Hanuman Pershad (2) evidence was in fact tendered in the Court of first instance, and if that is so, clearly the section allows such evidence being tendered in the appellate stage, but it is unnecessary to decide that question, because there are ample materials in the record for holding that the defendants did not consent to the course proposed by the learned Subordinate Judge. They resisted the plaintiffs' application to enable the Court to take fresh evidence. That application failed, and thereupon they asked that if the case had to go back to the Court of first instance, they might be permitted to adduce evidence also. This will appear from a perusal of the order sheet in the case. That in my opinion does not amount to a waiver of the objection which they now urge before me. The judgment cannot be said to be a judgment by consent. The judgment does not say that it is a judgment by consent. So far as I can see, the decree is not drawn up as a consent decree at all. This appeal must succeed. The case must go back to the lower Appellate Court and that Court must proceed according to law. The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal. The costs of the Courts below are reserved and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

It is unnecessary to deal with the application under section 115.

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 215 OF 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Teunon and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

RAJENDRA KISHORE CHOUDHURY—APPELLANT

versus

MOTHURA MOHAN CHOUDHURY AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decree—Order staying or refusing to stay execution, nature of—Appeal, whether lies.

Orders staying or refusing to stay execution of a decree are not orders determining questions relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and are, therefore, not appealable. [p. 229, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Chittagong, dated the 5th July 1919

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghose (with him Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen), for the Appellant.—The appellant and respondents before your Lordships were partners in a very prosperous business. The respondents obtained a decree against the appellant for a sum of Rs. 9,000 borrowed on a Hatchitta. On the 10th of September 1918 the respondents in execution of their decree attached my valuable properties including my dwelling house. On the 26th of May 1919 I brought a suit for accounts in connection with the partnership business. I then made an application for the stay of execution of the decree under Order XXI, rule 29, of the Code of Civil Procedure which was, however, refused. The present appeal is directed against the order refusing to stay the execution of the decree.

[TEUNON, J.—Is such an order appealable?]

I submit that the appeal is quite competent. (Reads section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure.) There has been no change in the law as laid down in section 244 of the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and the present section 47. In the old Code we had "the following questions, etc.," but under the new Code we have "all questions, etc.," which I submit is comprehensive enough to cover a case like the present. Refers to Amir Ali and Woodroffe's Commentaries on section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned authors expound an opinion that an appeal lies. Refers to Srinivas Prosad Singh v. Kesho Prosad Singh (1). Uless the right of appeal is expressly taken away, I submit that even in cases of doubt it ought to be held that an appeal lies. Undoubtedly there was an appeal under the old Code of 1882 even before it was amended by Act VII of 1888.

Then came the new Code where we have not "the following questions, etc." but "all questions, etc." Refers to Rudra Narayan Jana v. Naba Kumar Das (2). The right of appeal which was previously existing cannot be taken away by implication. Even if it be held that no appeal lies, your Lordships may be pleased to treat my memorandum of appeal as an application for revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and I submit that this is eminently a case in which your Lordships should interfere.

Sir Rash Behary Ghose (with him Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Bhagirath Chandra Das), for the Respondents.—This appeal is clearly incompetent. One has only to compare the language of section 47 of the new Code with that of section 244 of the old Code. The words "relating to stay of execution" were added to the section not by way of explanation.

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 745; 14 C. L. J. 489 at p. 495.
(2) 44 Ind. Cas. 156; 22 C. W. N. 657.

These words have been purposely omitted from the new section. There are enough of hindrances in the way of the decree-holder and the Legislature did not want to add one more. Refers to Rama Prasad Roy v. Anukul Chandra Roy (3), Saraswati Barmonya v. Moti Barmonya (4).

Coming to the merits of the case, I submit that your Lordships ought not to interfere unless there is a miscarriage of justice beyond all reasonable doubt. The appellant is only making a desperate attempt to avoid the evil day. There has also been considerable delay on the part of the appellants in invoking your Lordships' discretion.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghose briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—In this case it is said that the appellant and respondent were partners in a certain business, and the latter obtained a decree against the former for a sum of some Rs. 9,000 borrowed on a Hatchitta. This was on the 28th February 1918.

In execution of this decree, the respondent on the 10th September 1918 attached and seeks to put to sale his judgment-debtor's properties.

On the 26th May 1919 the appellant before us brought a suit for accounts and for the sum that might thus be found due to him from the partnership business. Having instituted his suit on the 11th of June, the appellant next applied that pending the disposal of the said suit the execution of the decree against him should be stayed. On the 5th July the learned Subordinate Judge refused to stay execution, and it is against that order that the present appeal has been preferred.

On behalf of the respondent it is contended, inter alia, that against this order no appeal lies. The question then is, whether the order is one determining the question within the scope of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and, therefore, appealable as a decree. In the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, the corresponding section 244 as originally enacted provided that any question "relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction" of a decree should be determined by the Court executing the decree. By reason of some conflict of decisions, by the Amending Act of 1888 to the words above cited were added the words "or relating to the stay of execution thereof." These words have disappeared from section 47 of the present Code.

On behalf of the appellant it is contended that the words have been omitted as being unnecessary and that the omission has made no alteration in the law. In support of this contention, reference has been made to certain observations to be found in a decision of this Court reported as Srinivas Prosad Singh v. Kesho Prosad Singh (1) and to the omission from section 141 of the explanation added to section 647 of the Code of 1882 of the Amending Act VI of 1892.

But the omission now under consideration is not the omission of an explanation but the omission of words deliberately inserted in the body of the law by an Amending Act. We are, therefore, constrained to the conclusion that a change in the law was intended, and that orders staying or refusing to stay execution are no longer to be considered as orders determining questions relating to the execution of the decree. In this view we are supported by the decision of this Court reported as Rama Prasad Roy v. Anukul Chandra Roy (3).

We must, therefore, hold that in the present case no appeal lies.

It is then urged that we should deal with the matter under section 115 of the Code, but the learned Subordinate Judge has duly considered all the matters placed before him and in the exercise of his judicial discretion if he has committed any error, which we do not say he has done, the error is not such as brings the case within the scope of section 115.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee is two gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down without delay.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree that no appeal lies in this case; though I do so with some hesitation. For, prima facie, the words in section 47 "all questions relating to the execution of the decree" seem wide enough to cover a refusal to stay execution, which, after all, is tantamount to a decision that execution may proceed. But as the Legislature has deliberately omitted from section 47 the words which it considered necessary in 1888 to insert by an amendment of the Act, to indicate that questions relating to the stay of execution were included in section 244 of the Code, I infer that the intention was to exclude those questions from the purview of section 47.

Appeal dismissed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59, compliance with provisions of, what constitutes—Attestation—Lessor and lessee—Lease by several persons—Execution of lease on different dates, effect of—Time clause in lease for furnishing security, whether enures for benefit of lessor—Waiver—Liability of surety.

The fact that the attesting witnesses were present when a document was executed is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act [p. 231, col. 1.]

A lease, dated the 7th December 1907, was executed by three out of four lessees on the 9th December 1907. The fourth lessee executed the lease on the 18th December 1907. Among other things, the lease contained a clause for the furnishing of security by the lessees within fifteen days. A security bond was given on the 23rd December 1907. The surety sought to escape from his liability under the bond on the ground that the time limit fixed by the lease for furnishing security had run out before the 23rd December 1907:

Held, (1) that as between the lessor and lessees the lease was made a complete and valid document on the 9th December 1907, and that, consequently, time had not run out on the date of the security bond, and the surety was liable under it. [p. 231, col. 1.]

(2) that, in any case, the clause in the lease fixing the time for giving security was a clause solely for the benefit of the lessor, and was capable of being waived and was in fact waived. [p. 231, col. 1.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru and Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant No. 5. He and the defendant No. 6 in the Court below were alleged by the plaintiff to have signed a security bond for the due performance by the defendants Nos. 1—4 of certain covenants in a lease. The defendant No. 5 is the only appellant before this Court and he seeks to escape liability on two grounds:—First, whilst not denying that the signature on the document is in fact his signature, he takes, as he is entitled to do, the legal objection that that document is not in law binding on him inasmuch as the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act were not complied with; the second ground that he takes is this, that there was in the lease a time limit of 15 days and that time limit had run off before the 23rd of December 1907, the day on which the security bond was executed. Now this is a matter that can be disposed of very shortly. The first point that the mortgage was not duly executed and attested is sought to be proved by the appellant, who must have known very well when the case came on before the lower Court that the three attesting witnesses had a surprise in store for the plaintiff who called them. Each of them said that he had been a party to a transaction of an unusual character—each of them had signed his name on the document, there being on the right hand of that document a vacant space for the subsequent signatures of defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The learned Subordinte Judge did not accept that story and we do not accept it, and we are influenced by the inherent improbability of the story, and by the admission of one of the witnesses (the fourth witness) that though he did not remember very much about the whole matter, he could not recollect that there was anything extraordinary about the execution of this document. We need hardly say we do not place entire reliance on Subadar Singh in every detail, but substantially we believe that the attesting witnesses were present when this defendant executed the document. That being so, section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act was complied with and we decide that point against the appellant.

There now remains the other contention based upon the 15 days' time limit. The counterpart of the lease, dated the 7th of December 1907, was executed by three lessees and registered on the 9th of December, but it was not until the 18th of December that the fourth lessee (who was quite as essential a party as any of the other three) executed the lease and thereby, as we hold, made it on that day (the 18th of December) a complete and perfect document as between lessor and lessee. Now the security bond was dated the 23rd of December, and though the lease did contain a provision "that if we fail to furnish security within the time fixed, then this lease shall be deemed to be null and void," nevertheless on the 23rd of December, the security bond was given and the possession, which had been withheld by the lessor, was by virtue of the security (which he obtained from the defendant-appellant and defendant No. 6) was delivered to the lessees. No point was raised at all by any party that the lease was not a valid document and we think that the clause as regards the 15 days was a clause capable of waiver and was in fact waived. Indeed, it might very well have been construed to have been a clause solely for the benefit of the lessor. In those circumstances we are of opinion that there was no running out of time by the 23rd of December, and that the security bond became as of full force against the defendant appellant and that he is liable to perform the obligations that he entered into under it. Under these circumstances we dismiss the appeal with costs including fees on the higher sale. We extend the time for payment of the mortgage money for six months from this date.

An application for execution of a decree, with a prayer for the substitution of legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, was dismissed for non-compliance with the Court's order to pay process-fees for service of notice upon the legal representatives within three days:

Held, that the application was in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182, clause (5), of the Limitation Act and operated to save limitation. [p. 233, col. 1.]

A valid application in accordance with law cannot be invalidated by any subsequent act or default of the decree-holder, such as the non-payment of process fees. [p. 233, col. 1.]

Appeals against the orders of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 6th September 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 28th June 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Maulvi Fuzlul Haq (with him Babu Probodh Chandra Kar for Babu Atindra Nath Mukerjee), for the Appellants.—Previous to the present application for execution the decree-holders made no less than four applications for execution of their decree. I need only refer your Lordships to the last two of these applications, which were made on the 26th of March 1912 and the 26th of March 1915. Before the application of the 26th of March 1915, the judgment-debtor having died, the decree-holders prayed in that application that the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor might be substituted in his place, after issue of notice to them. The Court, thereupon, made an order that process fee be paid within three days for service of notice on the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor. The fee, however, was not paid and the execution case was dismissed on the 30th of March 1915. The present application for execution was made on the 16th of February 1917 and the question before your Lordships is whether the application of the 26th of March 1915 was an application in accordance with law which would save the present application for execution from being barred by limitation. The application of the 26th of March 1915 was clearly within 3 years of the last application and the only question is, therefore, whether it was in accordance with law. I invite your Lordships' attention to Order XXI, rule 22, of the Civil Procedure Code and to Article 182, sub-clauses 5 and (6) of the Limitation Act. I submit that the application of the 26th of March 1915 was clearly in accordance with law. [Refers to Madho Prasad v. Kesho Prasad (1).] It is not necessary to issue a notice on the heirs to show cause why they should not be substituted. All that is required is to make an application to have the heirs substituted. I rely on sub-clause (6) of Article 182 referred to above and Eipin Behari Mitter v. Bibi Zohra (2) and Hari Ganesh v. Yamunabai (3).

Babu Upendra Narain Bagchi, for the Respondent.—The application was not in accordance with law, because a party is not substituted simply by an application for the purpose but an order of the Court is necessary to the effect that the party is substituted. As in the present case there was no such order, I submit that the application for execution was not in accordance with law. Here the appellants simply applied for substitution of the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor but took no further steps to get the heirs substituted. Refers to Stevens v. Kamta Pershad (4).

Maulvi Fazlul Haq was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

APP. No. 319 OF 1918.

The only question involved in this appeal is whether the application for execution of the decree is barred by limitation.

It is unnecessary to refer to the first two applications for execution. The third application was made on the 26th March 1912, and the 4th on the 26th March 1915.

It appears that the judgment-debtor died before the fourth application for execution. The decree-holder prayed in that application that the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor might be substituted in his place, after issue of notice to them, and that the decretal amount be realised by attachment of moveables. The Court thereupon made an order that process-fee be paid within three days for service of notice on the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor. The fee, however, was not paid and the execution case was dismissed on the 30th March 1915.

The present application for execution was made on the 16th February 1917, and the question is whether the application of the 26th March 1915 was an application which saved limitation. That application was made within three years of the last previous application. It was also made to the proper Court. The only question, therefore, is whether it was in accordance with law.

The Court below has held that it was not in accordance with law, because the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor were not substituted, as the process fee had not been paid as directed by the Court.

Order XXI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, lays down that where an application for execution is made (b) against the legal representation of a party to the decree, the Court executing the decree shall issue a notice to the person against whom execution is applied for requiring him to show cause on a date to be fixed why the decree should not be executed against him. That is what is required by law to be done. Now if the contention of the respondent is correct, namely, that in order that the application might be held to be in accordance with law the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor must be already on the record, then there cannot be any application for execution in accordance with law, against the representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor on the last day of the three years, if the judgment-debtor happens to die on the last day, although the decree holder may be within his rights to make the application on such last day.

Then again, we do not see how the fact that process-fee was not paid subsequently, as directed by the Court, could affect the validity of the application made on the 26th March 1915. If it was a valid application and one in accordance with law on the 26th March 1915, it could not be invalidated by any subsequent act on the part of the decree-holder, namely, the non-payment of the process-fee. In the absence of any authority to the contrary, we think the application was in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182, clause (5), of the Limitation Act and, therefore, the present application is not barrrd.

There are, however, other objections raised by the judgment-debtor, which have not been gone into by the lower Appellate Court.

The order of the lower Court must, therefore, be set aside and the case sent back to that Court in order that it may deal with the other questions raised in the case, and dispose of the case according to law.

Costs, one gold mohur, to abide the result.

This judgment will govern the other Appeal (No. 40 of 1919).

Case sent back.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by father—Liability of sons Necessity, question of—Appeal—Appellate Court, duty of—Appeal by some of several members—Court-fee payable.

Where in a suit to enforce a mortgage effected by a Hindu father the trial Court finds in favour of the plaintiff on the question of necessity to justify the loan and there is an appeal, the appellant is entitled to have the opinion of the Appellate Court on the point, and if such Court fails to determine the point, the High Court will remand the case for re-decision of the appeal. [p. 234, col. 1.]

Inasmuch as the members of a joint Mitakshara family have no specific share, an appeal by some of such members against a decree to enforce an alienation of the family property must be against the entire decree and Court-fees must be paid on the amount decreed, and not on the appellants' share of that amount. [p. 234, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Muzafferpore.

Mr. Raghu Nath Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bimla Charan Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal comes before me from the judgment of the District Judge of Muzaffarpore and arises out of a suit brought by the respondents against the appellants and Bhagwan Dutt Raut to inforce a mortgage-bond executed by Bhagwan Dutt Raut who was the defendant No. 1 in the suit.

The defence of the defendants other than the 1st defendant was that they did not execute the mortgage-bond and that they were not liable for it, inasmuch as the debt was not incurred for the benefit of the joint family. The suit was, however, decreed against the 1st defendant. There was an appeal by the plaintiff, and the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that it was immaterial whether it was necessary to incur the debt or whether the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were benefited by it. The learned Judge thought that the liability of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 arose from a moral and religious obligation and they could only exempt themselves by showing that the defendant No. 1 used the money for an immoral purpose; and the learned Judge relied upon the case of Bhagat Mal Sahu v. Abdul Karim (1).

It has, however, been now definitely established that the question of the pious duty of a son to pay the debts of a father does not arise during the lifetime of the father, see Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2). The Judicial Committee pointed out in that case that "Under the law of the Mitakshara, the family property owned by all the members of the family as co-parceners cannot be the subject of a gift, sale or mortgage by one co-parcener except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-parceners. Any deed of gift, sale or mortgage granted by one co-parcener on his own account of or over the joint family property is invalid, the estate is wholly unaffected by it, and its entirety stands free of it. The power of the father in the capacity of manager and head of the family to alienate joint property for family necessity is no exception to this rule, since it is proper to imply a consent of all co-parceners to that act of the one which such necessity has demanded."

In my opinion, therefore, the family property could only be bound by the mortgage executed by the defendant No. 1 in favour of the plaintiff if only it could be shown that there was a justifying necessity for the debt, or that there was an antecedent liability binding on the joint family property. The plaintiff did raise the question that there was a justifying necessity for the loan. It is true that the Court of first instance has decided that issue against the plaintiff, but the plaintiff was entitled to have the opinion of the lower Appellate Court on that point. The lower Appellate Court, however, relying upon the case reported as Bhagat Mal Sahu v. Abdul Karim (1) thought that it was unnecessary to determine that point.

I am of opinion, therefore, that this appeal must succeed and the case must go back to the lower Appellate Court for a determination of such issues as it did not determine. The appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal. The costs of the Courts below will abide the result and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

It appears that the appellants have valued their appeal at Rs. 404-8, although the suit was valued at Rs. 809. The appellants say that they have valued their appeal as regards their share of the decretal amount. It is obvious that being members of a joint Mitakshara family they have no specific share. Therefore, they can only appeal as against the entire decree. This decree will only be drawn up upon payment by the appellants of the proper Court-fees payable on Rs. 809. The appellants will have three weeks' time for the payment of the additional Court-fees.

Appeal allowed.

Under the Muhammadan Law a person who has the charge of the person or property of a minor without being his legal guardian, and who may, therefore, be conveniently called a de facto guardian, has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant, nor can such transferee, let into possession of the property under an unauthorised transfer, resist an action in ejectment on behalf of the infant as a trespasser. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Backerganj, dated the 27th of July 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 4th Court at Barisal, dated the 28th of February 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Maulvi A. K. Fazl ul Haq, for the Appellant.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession after declaration of title. It is a case of dispossession by a fractional landlord and the question of special limitation arises. The lower Appellate Court has disposed of the suit without recording a finding whether Madan Gazi had himself a transferable interest and whether the mirash karsha is transferable or not, secondly, whether the plaintiff has power to act on behalf of the minor.

So far as the first issue is concerned, it does raise a question of transferability. So the case cannot be disposed of without recording a finding to that effect. The finding is that Madan Gazi was in possession. The issue is whether he was in possession under the Kobala. The Kobala is to be proved. Mere certified copy won't do. It is admitted without objection.

With regard to the question of special limitation, I submit, on their own showing I am a fractional landlord. In the case of dispossession by a fractional landlord the period of limitation is two years. So it comes under the rule of two years' limitation. As regards the disposal of the minor's interest, I refer to Imambandi v Haji Mutsaddi (1). The case is exactly in point. So I submit that the mother had no power to dispose of the minor's interest.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar, for the Respondent.—There is no substance in the point of transferability raised by my learned friend. Mirash karsha is transferable. Besides the plea is not taken in the grounds of appeal. The question of special limitation does not arise here, as the suit was instituted within two years of the alleged dispossession. The argument that the certified copy of the Kobala is not admissible in evidence without calling for the original, has no force as no objection was taken in the primary Court as to its admissibility. Provided the document is relevant, it is now settled law that objections as to the mode of proof must be taken at the time.

As regards the last point that a Muhammadan mother has no right to alienate the minor's right without certificate, the Privy Council case has, of course, set the matter at rest. The appellant, however, does not gain anything thereby.

Maulvi Fazl-ul-Huq, in reply.—I give up the first point as it was not taken in the lower Court. But I submit that the minor's interest did not pass.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of the land in dispute on declaration of the plaintiff's mirash karsha rights to the same by purchase from the heirs of one Madan Gazi.

Various defences were raised by the defendant, one of them being that the plaintiff's purchase in respect of the shares of the minor daughters of Madan Gazi from their mother was void as she was not properly appointed guardian of the minors. That question was decided against the defendant in the Court below, and the plaintiff was given a decree in respect of the shares of the widow and the three daughters of Madan including the two minor daughters.

Several contentions have been raised in this second appeal on behalf of the defendant-appellant. We do not think that there is anything in those contentions except that relating to the question of the validity of the sale of the minors' shares by their mother.

Madan Gazi left a widow, one son and three daughters, two of whom were minors. The plaintiff purchased from the widow of Madan her share, the shares of the two minor daughters and also the share of the other daughter who was of age.

The question whether the sale of the minors' shares by their mother is void appears to be settled by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Imambandi v. Haji Mutsaddi (1) and we need only refer to a passage at page 427* where their Lordships observed as follows:—"For the foregoing considerations their Lordships are of opinion that under the Muhammadan Law a person who has charge of the person or property of a minor without being his legal guardian, and who may, therefore, be conveniently called a 'de facto guardian' has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant, nor can such transferee, let into possession of the property under such unauthorised transfer, resist an action in ejectment on behalf of the infant as a trespasser. It follows that, being himself without title, he cannot seek to recover property in the possession of another equally without title".

That disposes of the question, and the appeal will be allowed to the extent of the shares of the minor daughters of Madan Gazi, the result being that the plaintiff's suit in respect of the said shares of the minors amounting to 5 annas 12 gandas will be dismissed.

Each party will bear his own costs in all Courts.

Appeal partly allowed.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Multan, dated the 31st August 1915, dismissing plaintiffs' claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Husain and Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by two widows, Musammat Umrao Bibi and Musammat Jindwaddi, of one Hamid Shah, a Gardezi Sayad, against Muhammad Bakhsh and Ali Muhammad, the minor nephews of Musammat Mughlani, deceased, a third wife of the said Hamid Shah. There was a fourth wife Musammat Allah Wasai also deceased. The plaintiffs are themselves Sayads, whilst the other two wives were of the prostitute class. In the plaint the minor defendants are described as "Darkhan Kanjars". It is admitted that "Darkhan" is the same as "Tarkhan." Hamid Shah, who came of an ancient and good family, at one time possessed considerable landed estates, but by 1896 he was heavily in debt owing to extravagance and debauchery and by 1897 he had to seek the assistance of the Insolvency Court.

On the 1st October 1896 Hamid Shah executed four deeds, one in favour of each of his three wives and the fourth in favour of his daughter by Musammat Allah Wasai. It should be noted that he did not marry Musammat Umrao Bibi till 1898. All four deeds were transfers of land and other property, but whereas the deeds in favour of Musammat Jindwaddi and Musammat Allah Wasai gave them only a life-interest, those in favour of Musammat Mughlani and his daughter purported to give them absolute ownership. The transfers in favour of his wives were in lieu of dowers and maintenance and that in favour of his daughter was a gift because he had no male issue. We are concerned in this appeal with the transfer to Musammat Mughlani, which was followed by mutation of names in the revenue records in her favour.

Hamid Shah died in 1900 and on the 4th April 1911 Musammat Mughlani gifted a part of the property, so transferred to her, to her brother's sons, the present defendants, and it is the part so gifted which is the subject of the present suit and appeal. After Musammat Mughlani's death such portions of the property as had not been disposed of by her were mutated in the names of the plaintiffs, the surviving widows of Hamid Shah.

The lower Court, holding that the transfer to Musammat Mughlani was a genuine transaction, that she became absolute owner of the property conveyed to her by Hamid Shah and that, her nephews being members of an agricultural tribe, the gift to them was valid, dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs, therefore, appeal.

It is admitted by both parties that Hamid Shah was governed by custom. For the appellants it is contended that the conveyance to Musammat Mughlani was merely a colourable transaction to defeat creditors and to save the property from their hands, that it was not intended to take effect as a transfer of the property conveying absolute rights to her, and that this was apparent from the facts that Hamid Shah was heavily indebted, that he shortly after applied to be declared an insolvent, that the property was considerable and substantial, that there was no ostensible reason for the transfers to his wives other than insolvency, that all the deeds were executed on the same day, that there was no evidence of any dower having been fixed in the case of Musammat Mughlani or showing the amount of it and that possession as contemplated in the deed was not given. The further contention that the words in the deed "and I have been left no concern or connection whatever, nor shall have I any with it" qualify the preceding words granting absolute ownership and mean that Musammat Mughlani was granted absolute ownership so far as he, Hamid Shah, alone was concerned, may conveniently be dealt with first. We see no force whatever in this last contention. The preceding words "From to-day my wedded wife aforesaid shall be the absolute owner of the property settled" are clear and have a definite meaning and the subsequent words are merely an amplification. They in no way qualify the absolute ownership granted. In the cases in which Hamid Shah intended to convey a life-interest he expressed himself differently. It is true that in the deed the following words occur "and have put her in its (property transferred) actual possession through the management (wrongly translated as guardianship) of Syad Shah Nawaz Khan," and we do not know whether the property was so managed or not, but it is proved and admitted that Hamid Shah caused mutation to take place in Musammat Mughlani's name. That dower was fixed must be presumed, and its amount is immaterial because a Muhammadan husband can increase it. The creditors never objected to the transfer and never challenged it. The mere fact that Hamid Shah was heavily indebted does not necessarily imply that he was not desirous of making ample provision for his wives. It by no means follows that he intended to retain his rights in the property. The fact that he granted Musammat Mughlani and his daughter absolute ownership is probably because the one was his latest and most loved wife and the other was his daughter. For the above reasons we agree with the lower Court that the deed conveyed absolute ownership to Musammat Mughlani.

The next contention is that the gift, not having been followed by possession, is invalid. The possession subsequent to 1900, it is urged, was based merely on the rights of a widow. It is clear, however, that Musammat Mughlani held the property transferred to her from 1900 by virtue of the deed. A transfer in lieu of dower is not a gift. Under the circumstances of the case we see no force in the contention. Hamid Shah did all he could to give effect to the transfer.

The contentions most strongly pressed before us, however, are that Musammat Mughlani was a Kanjari, that on her marriage with Hamid Shah she became a member of his tribe, in other words, a Gardezi Sayyadani and continued as such after his death, that by a notification under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act the Gardezi

UMRAO BIBI v. MUHAMMAD BAKHSH.

Sayyads were declared members of an agricultural tribe and that as such Musammat Mughlani was not legally competent to alienate land to her nephews, who were Kanjars and not members of an agricultural tribe and that, therefore, her gift to them was void. The contention that a woman, who is not a member of an agricultural tribe, becomes a member of or belongs to such a tribe by her marriage to a man who is such a member, is, so far as we are aware, a novel point, and Counsel have been unable to cite any authorities. If by her marriage to a Muhammadan (and it is to be noted that the question is limited to Muhammadans because the case of Hindus and others may be different) who is a member of an agricultural tribe, a woman, not a member of an agricultural tribe, does not become a member of the agricultural tribe, as created by Statute, to which her husband belongs, it follows that the husband cannot transfer to her though his own wife, whether by dower or gift, any agricultural land except by the sanction of the Collector. This, however, may be the policy of the law and the result in no way affects the law if it is clear.

In the present case Hamid Shah transferred the property to Musammat Mughlani before the Punjab Alienation of Land Act was enacted and, therefore, the validity of the transfer to her on the ground that she was not a member of an agricultural tribe cannot be attacked. The transfer to Musammat Mughlani was in any case valid and it follows that if she was not originally a member of an agricultural tribe and did not acquire that status by her marriage, the gift to her nephews was valid. On the other hand, if she was not originally such a member and became such by her marriage and the nephews are not members of an agricultural tribe, it follows that the gift to them is invalid.

For the appellants it is contended that the defendants have not proved that they are Langah Jats, an agaicultural tribe, as claimed by them and it is urged that, even if the ancestors of the defendants were originally Langahs by caste or tribe, because the family has for four generations adopted the profession of prostitution, it has now merged into the tribe of Kanjars of the Multan Tahsil, a tribe recognised as such in the extract from the riwaj-i-am wherein the special customs relating to inheritance in the case of the members of the Kanjar tribe who pay land revenue are set forth. It is urged that the Kanjars of Multan, whatever their original tribe may have been, have been recognized as a tribe called Kanjars with customs special to themselves and that in the course of evolution the members of the family of the defendants, including Musammat Mughlani, even if they were originally Langahs, ceased to belong to that tribe and became members of the tribe of Kanjars, which is not an agricultural tribe. The answer to this argument is that the extract is expressly limited to Kanjars paying land revenue and relates only to inheritance, and no authority is quoted for the assertion that, for the purposes of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, members of an agricultural tribe cease to hold that status if they adopt, or if their ancestors adopted, prostitution as a profession, or vary their custom in respect of inheritance. It is true that the defendants have failed to prove that they are related to the Langahs of Leiah, several of whom have also adopted prostitution as a profession. We cannot attach any importance to a mere assertion of a witness to that affect. But it is proved by a deed of 1875, long before any question arose on the subject, that the caste of the father of Musammat Mughlani was then described as Langah Darkhan Kanjar. The same description is given in many deeds subsequent to 1900, a fact which is attacked on the ground of the passing of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. There may be some force in this attack but it cannot apply to the deed of 1878. The appellants also rely on a number of deeds in which the father of Musammat Mughlani is described merely as Darkhan Kanjar. The explanation of this appears to be that the ancestors of the defendants took to the occupation of carpenters before that of prostitution and the fact cannot detract from the importance of the description in the deed of 1878.

Prior to making the gift to her nephews Musammat Mughlani desired to remove any doubt as to its validity, and whilst claiming that her own family were members of the Langah tribe, she referred the matter to the Collector and asked for sanction to the alienation in case it was considered that she was not competent to make the gift without such sanction. The Collector referred the matter to a Revenue Officer for enquiry and, on the latter's report that the family belonged to the agricultural tribe of Langahs, refused the sanction on the ground that sanction was unnecessary.

After a consideration of all the facts we are of opinion that the defendants have proved that their ancestors belonged to the agricultural tribe of Langahs and that they themselves have not lost that statutory status by virtue of the family having adopted the profession of prostitution for some generations. With regard to our finding that no loss of status has occurred, no authority has been cited to the contrary. On the other hand, we have an instance on page 255 of the printed record of a landowner described in the revenue records as "Caste Jat Langah known as Kanjar." It is obvious that the adoption of a profession cannot change a man's tribe for the purposes of the Punjab Alienations of Land Act. To hold so would be to defeat the provisions of the Act. No authority has been shown that, because a man's mother or grandmother adopted a profession, the members of which, as a community, have adopted certain special customs of inheritance suggested, or brought about, by that profession itself, he ceases to belong to a tribe created by Statute. We are inclined to hold that in the case of a Muhammadan belonging to an agricultural tribe marrying a woman not a member of such a tribe, his wife does not attain the status of belonging to his agricultural tribe, but it is not necessary for the purpoces of this appeal to decide the point.

For the above reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 108, excep. 1—Mate's receipt, whether document showing title to goods—Paddy entrusted to miller for milling and sale—Possession, nature of.

A mate's receipt is not a document showing title to goods within the meaning of exception 1 to section 108 of the Contract Act. [p. 243, cols. 1 & 2; p. 246, col. 2.]

Where paddy is entrusted to a miller for milling and he is authorised to sell the rice, his possession of the paddy is not such as would entitle him to pass a good title to it within the meaning of exception 1 to section 108 of the Contract Act. [p. 243, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MAUNG KIN, J.—Plaintiff-respondent, Maung Pe Gyi, and his wife Ma Saw Khin sued Maung Aung Ba and defendants-appellants for the value of 5,080 baskets of paddy belonging to them, which they alleged had been wrongfully sold by Aung Ba to defendants-appellants, and obtained a decree for Rs. 8,255-5 0 with costs. The suit was defended by defendants appellants but not by Aung Ba, who gave evidence in favour of plaintiffs.

Pe Gyi's case is as follows:—On 17th July 1915, Aung Ba asked Pe Gyi at Wakema, where Pe Gyi was residing, to help him by giving him paddy to mill at his mill called the Tara Rice Mill at Kemmendine. Pe Gyi put him off as he was too busy with arranging for the reception of certain Pongyis who were expected shortly at Wakema. On the 20th July 1915 the Pongyis arrived at about 10-30 in the morning and were taken to Pe Gyi's Kyaung. In the afternoon about four Pe Gyi arranged with Aung Ba to give him 7,500 baskets of paddy to be milled at his mill. Next day (21st July) Pe Gyi asked the agents of the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company for flats, with the result that flat No. 5 with the carrying capacity of 5,000 baskets of paddy was obtained. Pe Gyi's paddy was at Kyigyaung, a village some miles distant from Wakema. He sent Maung Po Te, his son-in law, and Maung Po Thet to Kyigyaung to attend to the loading of the paddy in the flat. Po Kyun and Maung Nyun, who were Aung Ba's men, were present at the loading. Under instructions from Pe Gyi, Maung Po Te, asked Maung Kyun for a note showing that the paddy was taken to be milled and got Exhibit A (filed in the record of this suit) signed by Maung Kyun. This was on the 26th July 1915, when the flat went away to Rangoon in charge of Maung Kyun and Maung Nyun and on 27th July 1915, Pe Gyi received Maung Kyun's note and the mate's receipt (Exhibit A of the criminal record). Pe Gyi paid the cooly hire for loading the paddy. On 28th July 1915, Pe Gyi sent Maung Pan to Aung Ba at Rangoon with instructions to hand over the mate's receipt to Aung Ba after receiving from Aung Ba a note showing that the paddy was given for milling only. About the 4th or 5th August, Pe Gyi came to Rangoon and found Maung Pan was ill with dysentery and that Aung Ba had obtained the mate's receipt from Maung Pan without giving the receipt he wanted for it. Attempts were then made to get into communication with Aung Ba, but the latter was not found until five or six days afterwards when he gave Pe Gyi Exhibit C, which runs thus: "I beg to inform you, U Pe Gyi. As regards your 5,000 baskets or more of paddy Mr. Achard said, I want paddy, you must give me this paddy; if he comes afterwards I shall settle price and take it; even if I am sued I shall defend. So saying he took away the receipt (or bill of lading), and he had the paddy measured at his mill. If you do not believe that Achard took (the paddy) in this manner please ask Maung Kyun and Po Nyun, Sir." Pe Gyi then went to the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company's Office and learnt that the flat had been sent to defendants-appellants' mill at Dawbong. Next, Pe Gyi went to see Achard who was in charge of the mill at Dawbong. The result was a scene between Pe Gyi and Achard. After this Pe Gyi decided to prosecute Aung Ba and Achard, and on 30th August filed a complaint before the District Magistrate, Rangoon, against both.

Defendants-appellants' case is as follows.

Aung Ba was their broker, but on the 9th June they had ceased to give him advances as he owed them money. On the 31st July he brought them the mate's receipt, and they made a special advance of Rs. 1,500 against the paddy covered by it. They endorsed the receipt and had the flat brought to their mill. They took the paddy and set off its value against the advance on it and the debt which Aung Ba had previously owed; they did not trouble about the name given in the mate's receipt, as the custom of the trade was to treat the person in possession of the receipt as owner of the goods; they brought the paddy from that person and had paid him; they are, therefore, not liable for the paddy to the person who afterwards turns out to be the real owner.

Previous to the institution of this suit, Pe Gyi had unsuccessfully prosecuted Aung Ba for criminal breach of trust in respect of the paddy. Pe Gyi had also endeavoured to add Achard of Ellerman's as a co-accused with Aung Ba, but the Magistrate declined to issue any process against him. In that case Aung Ba was held to have established that he had bought the paddy on credit. In this suit after some evidence was recorded by the trial Court, the evidence in the criminal case was treated by consent of parties as evidence in the suit.

The following facts may be taken to have been admitted or proved:—Pe Gyi asked for the flat; the paddy was loaded under the superintendence of his men; he paid the cooly hire for the loading of the paddy; the mate's receipt was in his name; he sent it to Aung Ba in Rangoon. These are facts which would constitute prima facie evidence of the ownership of the paddy in Pe Gyi, but in view of the defence they are not in themselves sufficient. It may well be that Pe Gyi did all these acts at the request and on behalf of Aung Ba. But as these are usually the acts of an owner, it is more likely than not that they indicate Pe Gyi as the owner. Then we have the fact that Aung Ba had paid nothing for the paddy, not even earnest money. This is an unusual feature in a sale of paddy, it being usual for the buyer to give earnest money or make some part payment. In my opinion this goes to strengthen the prima facie evidence. It has been pointed out by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the flat left Kyigyaung in charge of Aung Ba's men and that the fact indicates that Aung Ba was the owner of the paddy. I do not think that that necessarily follows, for, assuming the paddy was entrusted to Aung Ba, there was nothing peculiar in his men taking charge of it. Pe Gyi produced three witnesses to prove the arrangement he alleges to have been made in the afternoon of the 20th July. They are Hein Tuck, Po U, and Po Shein. It is not contended that any of them is not respectable or that for some special reason affecting their position in life they should be discredited. The only argument advanced against their testimony is that they were witnesses who dropped in casually and happened to be present to hear a most important conversation concerning a transaction in which they themselves had no interest. Hein Tuck arrived with the Pongyis; Po U and Po Shein were residents of Wakema; these facts are not disputed. Hein Tuck's presence at Pe Gyi's house after the comforts of the Pongyis had been seen to at the Kyaung was not unnatural, nor was the presence of Po U and Po Shein, for the visit of the Pongyis was an important event and friends and acquaintances of Pe Gyi would go to see him—some to get news of the Pongyis, some to tell him that they wished to join him in his work of merit and so forth. And so far as Pe Gyi was concerned he was at leisure, as the Pongyis had been duly accommodated at his Kyaung, and there was no reason why he should have delayed the transaction of the business which had been postponed. Under these circumstances I do not think it would be right to say that these three witnesses were casual witnesses and that their testimony should be treated in the way such witnesses are usually treated. We have also the evidence of Maung Kyaw Ya, who was at Wakema on the 20th July. He is a broker of Rangoon and had gone there to buy paddy. He says he met Aung Ba there and that Aung Ba told him that he had come to take paddy from Pe Gyi for milling. There is also the evidence of Maung Pan, who was sent to Rangoon with instructions to get a receipt from Aung Ba showing that the paddy was for milling and that Aung Ba confessed he had done wrong in selling the paddy. The defence seeks to discredit these two witnesses on the ground that they were not produced before the District Magistrate. They proved what is known as admission evidence, which is generally considered to be of very little value and there is nothing unusual in Counsel discarding such evidence at a trial, especially as in this case he had produced documentary evidence of the admission admitted to be correct by the opposite party (see Exhibit C). In my opinion the mere fact that a witness was not called in another case is not sufficient to lead to the conclusion that his evidence has been manufactured afterwards. Maung Pan's evidence is important, as showing that he was sent by Pe Gyi with the mate's receipt instructed as alleged. It is proved by Kyaw Ya's evidence that Maung Pan did not want to part with the mate's receipt unless he got a receipt showing it was for the purpose of being milled and that Maung Pan handed the mate's receipt to Aung Ba, because Maung Kyaw Ya himself innocently assured him that the custom was to give a receipt after the paddy had been measured.

I now come to a consideration of Exhibit A filed in the record of the suit. The fact that it was given by Maung Kyun is sworn to by Po Te and Po Thet. In the criminal case Maung Kyun denied having signed it. Aung Ba says Po Kyun was his man. Po Kyun denied that he was Aung Ba's man. But I do not think it is seriously contended that he is right. It is difficult to see why he attended to the loading of the paddy, and why he sent the telegram Exhibit 7 (criminal record) informing Aung Ba of the coming of the flat by the Wednesday steamer, if he was not Aung Ba's man. I do not, therefore, consider that Po Kyun's evidence is reliable. It has been argued that if this Exhibit A had been given by a servant of Aung Ba, there would be no necessity for Pe Gyi to get another receipt of the kind from Aung Ba. In my opinion Pe Gyi's idea was that it would be better to get a receipt from Aung Ba himself and that he had done only what was possible in taking Exhibit A from Maung Kyun. In my judgment the evidence does not justify the finding that Exhibit A is a forged document. Against Pe Gyi a letter dated the 12th July, Exhibit 2 (criminal record), was produced. This was said to have been written by Pe Gyi and sent to Aung Ba by the hand of Maung Po Oh. Pe Gyi denies having written it. There is only the evidence of Po Oh, Aung Ba's uncle and employee, to show that Pe Gyi had written it. I do not think under these circumstances the letter can be held to have been proved. If proved, it would show that on the 12th July Pe Gyi expressed a desire to sell 7,500 baskets of paddy.

I now come to the telegrams which are alleged to have passed between Rangoon and Wakema. Exhibit 3 of the criminal record is said to be from Maurg Pe Gyi to Aung Ba. It is dated 15th July and runs thus: "Detained without selling paddy at 170 rupees reply." In the first place it is not easy to ascertain the meaning of this telegram. It may imply that the sender wished to sell the paddy to Aung Ba or that the sender had decided not to sell, but to retain it for some other purpose. But I do not think it is necessary to pay any attention to it as it has not been proved: Pe Gyi denies having sent it. The next telegram is Exhibit 4 of the same record. It purports to be from Po Oh to Maung Ba. There is evidence to show that Aung Ba is sometimes called Maung Ba, so it may be taken as having been addressed to Aung Ba; it is dated 15th July and runs thus: "Ko Pe Gyi's paddy 10,000 at 170 if buy send money 1,500 urgent." Po Oh says he sent this telegram. If this telegram represented the true state of affairs it certainly means that on that date Pe Gyi was likely to sell his paddy at the rate of Rs. 170. But beyond Po Oh's evidence there is nothing to show that the telegram did so. Exhibit 5 of the same record is another telegram dated 19th July. It purports to be from Aung Ba at Wakema to himself at Rangoon. It runs thus: "U Be Gyi paddy settled coming next steamer." This may represent either of the two positions taken up by the parties in this case. Exhibit 6 of the same record is another telegram from Aung Ba at Wakema to himself at Rangoon: "Send Po Nyun to Wakema." This is of no importance. Exhibit 7 is another telegram from Maung Kyun to Aung Ba. I have already discussed what bearing this telegram had on the question of what part Maung Kyun took in the transaction. Even supposing Exhibits 3, 4 and 5 indicate that Pe Gyi wished to sell his paddy to Aung Ba, it does not necessarily follow that he eventually sold it to Aung Ba. We may for the sake of argument assume that Pe Gyi had asked for earnest money to the amount of Rs. 1,500. It is common ground that no money had been paid in respect of the transaction, therefore, it is very likely that the transaction fell through, and after that it may well be that Pe Gyi did the best thing under the circumstances, i.e., he sent the paddy to Rangoon to be milled. Then again we find that Aung Ba had closed his mill from the month of April and the evidence tends to show that it was still closed in July. It is also clear that he owed a large sum of money to Ellerman's who had ceased to do further business with him. If the telegrams, Exhibits 3, 4 and 5, were sent by some one at the instigation of Aung Ba without the knowledge of Pe Gyi, it may well be that Aung Ba had been making evidence in his own favour in order to shield himself against the consequences of his design to cheat Pe Gyi. It is quite possible under the circumstances I have stated for Aung Ba to have the telegrams sent with the intention of making use of them afterwards in his own favour. In my opinion it will not be right to make use of these telegrams against Pe Gyi from any standpoint whatsoever.

The learned Counsel for Pe Gyi states that he does not support the allegation of collusion between Aung Ba and Mr. Achard or any of the allegations made by Aung Ba himself on oath against Mr. Achard. So that the case as against Ellerman's stands thus; Aung Ba brought the mate's receipt to them; as usual they treated him as the owner of the paddy and so bought it from him and paid him. As I have held the paddy was Pe Gyi's, the question for consideration is whether the mate's receipt was a document of title and whether the goods passed upon its transfer. It has been held in Natcheappa Chetty v. Irrawaddy Flotilla Company Ltd. (1) that a mate's receipt of the kind in question is not negotiable and that property in the goods covered by it does not pass upon its transfer. The learned Counsel for the appellants has referred us to the case of Kamdas Vithaldas Durbar v. Amerchand & Co. (2). That is a later case than the one above cited. In that case a railway receipt was in question, and it was held that the document was a document of title within the meaning of sections 108 and 178 of the Indian Contract Act. The Privy Council laid it down that the test is whether the document in question is used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods or authorizing or purporting to authorize, either by endorsement or delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive the goods thereby represented, and their Lordships held that the railway receipt in question satisfied that test. In this case the previous case was not referred to at all and it appears to me that the two cases were entirely different. The mate's receipt in the former case, as indeed the mate's receipt in the case before us, did not contain any conditions or clause showing that the goods covered by the document would pass by its mere transfer. The railway receipt in question in the later Privy Council case does, according to its conditions, pass by delivery. It has been pointed out that it has been established that it is the custom for the millers not to pay any attention to the name given in the mate's receipt, but to look to the person who brings it and to treat him as the person entitled to sell the goods, and that the question whether the mate's receipt is negotiable must be considered not only with reference to the contents of the document, but also in accordance with the established custom of the trade. On reference to Mr. McCraken's evidence, I find that the millers have dealt with goods covered by mate's receipts like the one in question only where their own brokers brought them. Mr. McCraken clearly states that they would not deal with anybody and everybody who brings a mate's receipt. That being the case, it is unnecessary to pay any attention to the so-called custom. The result is that Aung Ba's possession of the paddy was a qualified possession and is not protected by Exception 1 to section 108 of the Contract Act. See Greenwood v. Holquette (3). It has been pointed out that Aung Ba in his evidence stated that he was to mill the paddy and then sell the rice. Nobody else in the case says that those were the terms of the entrustment. Pe Gyi does not say a word to that effect. But it has been contended that Aung Ba is Pe Gyi's witness and that, therefore, Aung Ba's evidence on this point can be used against Pe Gyi. I do not agree. In my opinion Aung Ba's evidence should be put aside and Pe Gyi must stand or fall on the other evidence in the case. In that view of the case it would not be fair to rely on the portions of Aung Ba's evidence which go against Pe Gyi, and discard those portions which may be in his favour. But even supposing that those were the terms upon which the entrustment was made, Aung Ba had no power to sell the paddy. Therefore, it cannot be contended that the sale by him to Ellerman's was authorized by Pe Gyi.

For the above reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

TWOMEY, C. J.—In this case the main question is one of fact, viz., whether Pe Gyi sold his paddy to Aung Ba on credit at Wakema in July 1915, or whether he entrusted it to Aung Ba to mill into rice. That question was considered by the District Magistrate, Rangoon, who tried Aung Ba for criminal breach of trust in respect of this paddy and the District Magistrate decided that Aung Ba bought the paddy. The learned District Judge has now arrived at the opposite conclusion on virtually the same evidence. The only material difference is that Aung Ba, having obtained an acquittal in the criminal case by satisfying the District Magistrate that he had bought the paddy, has now taken the side of his former prosecutor and admitted that he received it only for milling. He explains that he had to put up a false defence in the Magistrate's Court for the simple reason that he had no true defence to the charge. Aung Ba's evidence is clearly tainted and the issue must be decided on the other evidence, oral and documentary, and on the probabilities. The burden rests on the plaintiff of proving the transaction to have been a mere bailment for milling, as he alleges.

The plaintiff produced three witnesses as to the arrangement alleged to have been made on the 20th July with Aung Ba to mill the paddy. The District Magistrate regarded them as casual witnesses, but I concur in my learned colleague's remarks on this point and I think their evidence is entitled to considerable weight. The District Magistrate pointed out that this evidence is inconsistent with the telegrams produced by Aung Ba, for the telegrams would show that whatever the arrangement was between Pe Gyi and Aung Ba, it was completed before midday on the 20th July, while Pe Gyi's witness gives the time of the oral arrangement between Aung Ba and Pe Gyi as 4 or 5 P. M. on the 20th July. The telegrams certainly appear to present an obstacle to the plaintiff's case. I refer especially to the telegram Exhibit 4 in the Magistrate's Court of the 15th July sent by Aung Ba's uncle Po Oh from Wakema to Aung Ba at Rangoon and Aung Ba's two telegrams Exhibits 5 and 6 of 19th and 20th July to himself at Rangoon. Po Oh's telegram says that Pe Gyi has 10,000 baskets for sale at Rs. 1/0 and that if Aung Ba wants it, he should send Rs. 1,500 presumably as earnest money. Aung Ba did not send Rs. 1,500, but he came himself to Wakema, and we find him there on the 19th and 20th sending telegrams to Rangoon, which appear to mean that he has settled with Pe Gyi and that the paddy was to be taken to Rangoon. As regards Po Oh's telegram and Po Oh's evidence, I think it is a reasonable explanation that Po Oh was really trying at first to buy paddy for Aung Ba and that Pe Gyi was not unwilling to sell. Po Oh admittedly tried to buy paddy. (Vide evidence of plaintiff's witness Po Shein in the Magistrate's Court.) The plaintiff denied sending the letter Exhibit 2 by Po Oh to Aung Ba on 12th July intimating that he had paddy for sale. Let it be assumed, however, that he really wrote this letter and is afraid to admit it; it does not follow that he sold the paddy in question to Aung Ba. Aung Ba did not bring the earnest money, and it is highly improbable that he could have bought the paddy without paying earnest money. Po Oh's explanation that Pe Gyi excused payment of earnest money as he is a relation of Aung Ba, appears to be altogether unfounded. The assumption that Pe Gyi has concealed earlier negotiations for selling the paddy would explain Exhibit 2 and the earlier telegrams. As regards Aung Ba's telegrams to himself of the 19th ("U Pe paddy settled coming next steamer") and 20th ("Send Po Nyun to Wakema"). I am unable to attach any material significance to them or to their dates. Aung Ba may well have sent these telegrams anticipating that Pe Gyi would let him take the paddy for milling though he was unwilling to sell it on credit. It seems unnecessary to credit Aung Ba with a design to prepare false documentary evidence in support of a projected fraud.

On the other hand, the oral evidence produced by Aung Ba in the Magistrate's Court to prove the sale to him at Wakema does not inspire confidence. Po Oh is his uncle and Po Kyun is his employee. In the Magistrate's Court they supported Aung Ba's defence, a defence which he now entirely repudiates, and they were not examined in the District Court. Po Kyun in supporting the defence in the criminal case denied that the signature on Exhibit A (District Court record) is his. The evidence that he did sign it is that of Pe Gyi's son-in-law Pe Le who wrote the body of Exhibit A and Po Thet who took exhibit A from the paddy loading place at Kyigyaung to Pe Gyi at Wakema. I think the probabilities are in favour of a receipt of some kind being required by Pe Gyi, for none of his men were going with the paddy flat to Rangoon and in these circumstances, it would be natural to take an acknowledgment from Aung Ba's men, whether the paddy was going to Rangoon to be milled as Pe Gyi's paddy or whether it had been sold to Aung Ba on credit The District Magistrate's suggestion that Po Kyun may have signed Exhibit A without reading it is far-fetched, and I cannot agree with the District Magistrate that the admission in Exhibit A that the paddy wae shipped for milling goes for nothing because Po Kyun had no authority to bind Aung Ba. It is clear that Po Kyun was acting on behalf of Aung Ba at the time, and if he really admitted that the paddy was being taken to Rangoon for milling, it would be a fact of great importance.

I pass over the facts as to the hiring of the flat, the taking of the paddy to Rangoon by Aung Ba's men, and the despatch of Maung Pan to Rangoon with the mate's receipt. These facts are equally consistent with the plaintiff's case and the defendant's case. When Maung Pan got to Rangoon, he was induced by Aung Ba to hand over to him the mate's receipt although Aung Ba did not give him the acknowledgment of receipt of the paddy for milling which, according to plaintiff's case, Maung Pan had been instructed to get. Maung Pan and Kyaw Ya, the broker at whose house Maung Pan put up in Rangoon, explained why Maung Pan gave up the receipt. Aung Ba said that he would give the acknowledgment after measuring the paddy at his mill and Kyaw Ya who was an experienced broker assured Maung Pan that this was the usual custom. Aung Ba then took the mate's receipt to Ellerman's and made over the paddy to them as his own. He had already committed himself to Ellerman's by taking an advance of Rs. 1,500 from them on this paddy.

For the appellant stress has been laid on the failure of Pe Gyi in the criminal case to examine Maung Pan and Kyaw Ya as witnesses. As a matter of fact Kyaw Ya was subpœnaed and he actually appeared in the Magistrate's Court, but the prosecuting Counsel did not examine him. It was apparently considered that his evidence was rendered unnecessary by Aung Ba's admission that he had sent the letter Exhibit C to Pe Gyi about the 5th or 6th August, after Pe Gyi's arrival in Rangoon. Exhibit C appears to me to be Aung Ba's apology to Pe Gyi for having parted with possession of Pe Gyi's paddy and so the District Magistrate at first regarded it. But the District Magistrate thought it could also be read as Aung Ba's apology for being unable to pay for paddy which he had bought on credit. It seems to me that if the fact to be explained by Aung Ba was merely that he was not able to pay for paddy which he had bought on credit, he would have couched his letter very differently. He would only have to say that he could not pay Pe Gyi because Mr. Archard, instead of paying cash down as Aung Ba hoped, had taken the paddy in satisfaction of a balance of previous advances repayable by Aung Ba. It would not have been necessary at all for Aung Ba to say that Archard had taken the mate's receipt and dispossessed him of the paddy. I agree with my learned colleague in thinking that we should not disbelieve Maung Pan and Kyaw Ya merely because they were not examined in the criminal case. Mg. Kyaw Ya, so far as the record shows, is an independent witness of some standing, and his evidence is important not only in regard to Aung Ba's admissions that the paddy was made over to him for milling but also in furnishing an explanation of the delay on the part of Pe Gyi in not taking action against Aung Ba when he discovered Aung Ba's perfidy. Pe Gyi got Exhibit C on the 5th or 6th August. He did not go to enquire at the Flotilla Company's office till the 12th August. He made no complaint to the Police and did not file his complaint to the Magistrate till the 30th August. From Kyaw Ya's evidence it appears that Kyaw Ya used his influence to dissuade Pe Gyi from starting criminal proceedings at once.

There was an attempt to settle the matter amicably, but the attempt fell through and Pe Gyi about the 14th August went back to Wakema to get evidence and funds for the prosecution. I think, therefore, the subsequent delay is sufficiently explained by Kyaw Ya's evidence. Burmese cultivators and paddy traders are not in a hurry to appeal to the authorities about their business disputes so long as there is any prospect of settling their disputes privately. But no explanation is offered of Pe Gyi's inaction during the first four or five days after his arrival in Rangoon, i. e, before he got Exhibit C. When on his arrival he learned that Aung Ba had taken away the mate's receipt the natural course for him was to go or send to Aung Ba's mill (the Tara Mill) and see if his paddy was there. He did not do so, but confined himself to seeking out Aung Ba without success. I cannot see, however, that Pe Gyi's apparent inaction during the first few days after his arrival in Rangoon is really a material circumstance. For even if he had sold the paddy on credit to Aung Ba, one would still expect him to go to the Tara Mill and find out what had become of his paddy, the price of which ex hypothesi was unpaid. His inaction may be explained by supposing that up to the time of receiving Exhibit C he trusted Aung Ba to act squarely.

On reviewing all the evidence in the case, I think the plaintiff has discharged the burden of proof. He had in the previous year 1914 delivered 10,000 baskets of paddy to Aung Ba for the purpose of being milled into rice, etc., and there is nothing prima facie improbable in his delivering his paddy to be milled in 1915. There may have been some talk of selling the paddy which fell through as Aung Ba could not pay earnest-money, and then as the season was far advanced (July) Pe Gyi would probably think that instead of waiting any longer for a buyer it was better to mill the paddy and sell the rice as he had done in the previous year. He has produced witnesses who are apparently trustworthy and credible as to the actual arrangement of the 20th July. It is true that the District Magistrate had the advantage of seeing and hearing these witnesses in Court and that the District Judge had to assess the value of their evidence from their written depositions. But the District Judge, a Burman, was certainly not less qualified than the District Magistrate to weigh the evidence of these witnesses in the light of probabilities. There is no reliable evidence that Pe Gyi agreed to sell the paddy to Aung Ba. Exhibit C and the evidence as to Aung Ba's oral admission support the plaintiff's case. Aung Ba probably hoped that when the paddy was actually received by Ellerman's, they would pay him the price of it in full deducting only the Rs. 1,500 advance, or if they set off the value of this paddy against his previous debts, he no doubt hoped that they would make him further advances out of which he could pay Pe Gyi the price of the paddy. But this hope was disappointed. He received a further sum of only Rs. 200 odd when Ellerman's took over the paddy and, therefore, Pe Gyi's paddy, instead of being the means of restoring Aung Ba's finances, brought him into the dock on a criminal charge.

The case is, therefore, one of sale to a third party by a non owner and the question whether the third party, viz., the appellants Ellerman's, obtained a good title depends on section 108, Exception 1, of the Contract Act. It is argued for the appellants that according to Aung Ba's evidence he was to mill the paddy and sell the rice and, therefore, had unqualified possession of the paddy. Aung Ba's statement on this point is not corroborated and he is not a witness on whom any reliance can be placed. Even if his statement is true, I agree with my learned colleague that he would not in that case be in a position to give a good title to a person buying the paddy from him. He was in possession of the paddy for the specific purpose of milling it; he was in possession as a miller, not as a broker or a warehouseman. Something had to be done to the paddy before the owner's alleged instructions to sell the rice could take effect and Exception 1 to section 108 would not apply. Moreover, the question of good faith would remain. The mate's receipt showed Pe Gyi as the name of the shipper of the paddy and any person buying it from Aung Ba was put on inquiry as to Pe Gyi's interest in the paddy.

The learned Counsel further argued that a mate's receipt of the Irrawaddy Flotilla

Company is a document of title enabling the holder to transfer the ownership of the goods covered by it. The Privy Council have expressly decided to the contrary in Natcheappa Chetty v. Irravaddy Flotilla Company Ltd (1), but we are asked to hold that this decision has been deprived of all weight by the later ruling in Ramdas Vithaldas Durbar v. Amerchand & Co., (2), in which their Lordships laid down a test for determining whether a given document is a document of title or not. It is urged that the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company's mate's receipt fulfils the conditions of this test. The earlier decision is not mentioned in the later one, and I am unable to hold that the express and definite finding on the subject of these mate's receipts is affected by the general remarks in the later decision. But it may further be noted that the evidence on the record in the present suit does not show that the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company's mate's receipt answers the conditions of the test given in the later case. The evidence produced by the appellants goes to show that millers trust their brokers to bring them mate's receipts only for paddy which they have duly bought or which the owners have actually agreed to sell. There is no proof of a regular course of business by which such a document is passed from hand to hand as proof that the possessor thereof has authority to transfer the ownership of the goods covered by it by endorsement or delivery of the document. I concur in dismissing the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 142, 144 —Co-owner, suit by, for declaration of non-interference by other co-owners—Adverse possession—Burden of proof.

A suit by one of several co-owners of a water channel, whose rights have been interfered with, for a declaration that he has the right to irrigate his fields from the channel jointly with the other co-owners, is not a suit for possession or dispossession, and as regards limitation is governed by Article 144 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and not by Article 142. [p. 248, col. 1.]

Where in such a suit the defendant claims to hold the water of the channel on the ground of adverse possession, the onus is upon him to prove that his possession has been adverse for 12 years before the institution of the suit. [p. 248, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya.

Messrs. Purnendu Narayan Sinha, Naresh Chandra Sinha and Nitai Charan Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sivanandan Ray and Nawal Kishore Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs prayed for a declaration that they had the right of irrigation of certain paddy fields in plaintiffs' Takhta from the water of Bocha Ahar and that the Tanduas represented by Nos. 64 and 3 were used to carry water from that Ahar to the lands of the plaintiffs, and that the defendants had no right to fill up water channels Nos. 64, 3 and the southern part of another channel No. 99. Their case was that both parties were in joint possession of these water channels but in 1321 Fasli the defendants filled up these channels, thus interfering with the right of the plaintiffs to irrigate their lands from the water of the same. The defendants, firstly, denied the title of the plaintiffs to get water from these channels and secondly, urged that they had been in possession of these plots for over 20 years. The first Court held that plaintiffs had the right to irrigate their lands from the Ahar by the aforesaid water channels, and also held after careful consideration of the evidence in the case that these water channels were filled up some time in 1911 or 1912. The learned Munsif accordingly gave a decree to the plaintiffs. The Appellate Court held that the plaintiffs had the right to irrigate their lands from the water of the Ahar by these Tanduas, and also held that the defendants had not proved their possession of these Tanduas for 12 years and he held that the defendants dispossessed the plaintiffs much less than 12 years before the suit and without their knowledge. He accordingly dismissed the appeal with costs.

A second appeal has now been filed against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and the only point that has been urged before me is that on the pleadings the lower Courts ought to have held that this was a case that was governed by Article 142 of the Limitation Act, in which case the onus of proving dispossession by the defendants within 12 years would be upon the plaintiffs, and it was contended that the lower Appellate Court has thrown the onus wrongly upon the defendants. In my opinion Article 142 has no application. It is not a case of possession and dispossession at all. The plaintiffs have not in their plaint said that they were in exclusive possession of the water channels and that they were dispossessed, but what they said was that they were in joint possession with the defendants of the water channels but the defendants having interfered with their rights they brought this suit. They never asked for recovery of possession, but all that they wanted was a declaration that the defendants could not interfere with their rights as joint owners. Secondly, it is a case of one owner suing a co owner when the latter infringed the right of the former, but the plaintiffs never asked for separate exclusive possession. And when a co-owner sues under the circumstances found in this case, the Article applicable is not 142 but 144. See Alima v. Kutti (1), Ittappan v. Manavikrama (2), Ujalbi Bibi v. Umakanta Karmokar (3), Raj Kumar Sarkar v. Naya Ohatto Bibi (4) and Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (5). None of the cases referred to by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant has got any application to the facts of the present case. On the pleadings it was clear that the defendants claimed to hold the water of the water channels on the ground of adverse possession, and, therefore, the onus was upon them to show that they had adverse possession for 12 years before the institution of the suit. Both the Courts found that they had not succeeded in establishing this. On the other had both Courts found that the plaintiffs have succeeded in proving their possession for 12 years before the institution of the suit. The only ground urged was that of limitation and as I have found that the proper Article applicable to the case is not Article 142 of the Limitation Act, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

HAJEE BEE BEE—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage by deposit of title-deeds, validity of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59.

In places to which the Transfer of Property Act has not been extended, a valid mortgage can be effected by a deposit of title-deeds with a creditor with intent to secure a debt. [p. 249, col. 1.]

Mr. A. B. Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Xavier, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff claimed a mortgage decree upon a deposit of title-deeds made at Mandalay in 1911. If section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act had been extended to Mandalay at that time, the deposit of title deeds made in Mandalay would not have effected a mortgage. The defendant appealed to this Court, and at the hearing of the appeal it was assumed that section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act had been extended to Mandalay at the time of the deposit. We, therefore, set aside the decree. Subsequently the plaintiff applied for a review of judgment on the ground that section 59 had not been extended to Upper Burma. Mr.

ABDUL GANI v. RADHIKA MOHAN.

Xavier for the appellant—the respondent in this application—contends that there is nothing to show that a deposit of title-deeds ever created a mortgage in Upper Burma, and that because the deposit was made after the Upper Burma Registration Regulation of 1887, which required a mortgage if in writing to be registered, no mortgage could be effected in Upper Burma by the deposit of title-deeds, the property being above Rs. 100 in value. There are clear authorities to show that where parties intend to create a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds, and there is no law under which effect could not be given to such intention, it is in accordance with justice and equity to uphold the intention. This is shown by the case of Himalya Bank Limited in Liquidation v. F. W. Quarry (1). And in the case of Aw Nin v. V. A. R. Raman Chetty (2) it was held that a deposit of title-deeds, in a district in Lower Burma to which section 59 had not been applied, did in fact create a mortgage, although at that time the Registration Act which is similar to the Upper Burma Registration Regulation was in force. Section 59 not having been extended to Upper Burma at the time of the deposit a mortgage was effected by such deposit, and the decision of the lower Court must be upheld.

The application for review is allowed and the order of this Appellate Court is set aside, and the appeal is dismissed. Each party will bear his own costs of this application and this appeal, as it was assumed throughout that section 59 had been extended to Upper Burma at the time of the deposit.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 5—Holding exceeding 100 bighas, whether raiyati holding or tenure—Presumption.

The presumption arising under section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a rebuttable presumption and evidence is admissible to show that a holding, although exceeding 100 bighas in area, is in fact a raiyati holding and not a tenure. [p. 250, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Tipperah, dated the 12th of December 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 5th Court at Commilla, dated the 4th of March 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jatindra Mohon Ghose, for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The suit was for declaration of title and recovery of possession. The defendant executed a kabuliyat to plaintiff's father. No doubt the latter's status was described as that of a ryot. The raiyati consists of 10 drones=320 bighas of land at a rental of Rs. 175, The dispute is about a part of this holding. The question is now whether I can avail myself of the presumption under section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The first Court dismissed the suit. The second Court decreed the suit. The first Court found that the presumption was not rebutted. My point is that inasmuch as there was no legal evidence before the Court, the presumption in my favour ought to have been held to have been unrebutted. The description in the kabuliyat concludes the matter. I admit that I am an under-ryot, but I contend that that would not estop me from pressing my point. See Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (1), Mohesh Jha v. Manbharan Mia (2).

THAKURDEEN v. DUBAY.

Babu Mohendranath Roy (with him Babu Upendra Coomar Roy), for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal preferred by the defendant No. 1 against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 12th December 1918, reversing the decision of the Munsif of Commilla. The suit out of which the present appeal arises was one brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of certain land, and the ground on which the plaintiff sought to recover possession was that he had the interest of a raiyat and that the defendant was an under-raiyat whose term had expired. The only question in the appeal is this: Has the plaintiff established that the defendant was an under-raiyat who held for a term of years and whose term has expired? It is a common fact between the parties that the defendant was the tenant of the plaintiff. The defendant set up the case that the plaintiff was a tenure-holder and that the defendant was a raiyat who had obtained a right of occupancy. Now in the present case, the holding held by the plaintiff exceeded an area of 100 bighas and, under the provisions of section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there is a presumption that the interest held by the plaintiff was that of a tenure-holder. But that presumption is a rebuttable presumption and the learned Judge, having properly directed himself to the question of law and having before him ample evidence, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's interest was that of a raiyat and, therefore, the interest of the defendant must be that of an under-raiyat and that consequently the defendant had no right of occupancy. That finding has been challenged on the ground that the evidence on which the learned Judge acted was illegal. By the term illegal, I presume it is meant inadmissible. Evidence was clearly admissible to show that this holding, although exceeding 100 bighas was, in fact, a raiyati holding and not a tenure.

Another point has been urged by the learned Vakil who has argued the appeal, namely, that in the present case the plaintiff, although his interest may have been originally that of a raiyat, has by his conduct converted himself, so far as regards this under-raiyati, into the position of a mere rent receiver. The facts found in this case show that the plaintiff has not undergone this conversion and, in fact, the facts found by the learned Judge in this case are exactly opposed to those found by the learned Judges in the case of Mohesh Jha v. Manbharan Mia (2).

I think no ground has been shown to me why the judgment of the lower Appellate Court should be disturbed. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

versus

J. DUBAY—RESPONDENT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 17—Order of adjudication, effect of—Application for arrest in execution of decree—Leave of Court, whether necessary.

The words "other legal proceeding" in section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act include an application for arrest in execution of a decree and, therefore, no such application can be made against an insolvent after an order of adjudication has been made except with the leave of the Court. [p. 251, col. 1.]

Mr. N. N. Sen, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant was arrested in execution of a decree against him. But prior to the application of execution he had been adjudicated an insolvent under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. He, therefore, contended that his arrest was illegal by reason of the provisions of section 17 of that Act. The second Additional Judge of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, passed the following order:—"I disagree with the judgment-debtor's contention. He may be released on furnishing security to the satisfaction of the bailiff as contemplated by section 55 (4) of the Code of Civil Procedure. If he cannot do so he may be detained till to-morrow."

The order is wholly wrong. Section 17 of the Act runs as follows:—"On the making of an order of adjudication the property of the insolvent wherever situate shall vest in the Official Assignee, and shall become divisible among his creditors, and thereafter, except as directed by this Act, no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable in insolvency, shall, during the pendency of insolvency proceedings, have any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt, or shall commence any suit or other legal proceeding except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose."

The words "other legal proceeding" must be read as ejusdem generis with the words "any suit." When read in that way they mean other proceedings of a Civil nature, and will include a proceeding in execution of a decree. Therefore, such a proceeding cannot, after the order of adjudication, be commenced against an insolvent without the leave of the Insolvency Court. At the time of the arrest, the applicant had not obtained a protection order under section 25 of the Act. But he was still entitled to the benefit of section 17 of the Act. The execution proceedings were commenced after the order of adjudication without the leave of the Insolvency Court; the arrest was, therefore, illegal, and the applicant should have been released by the Court. The order of the Judge is set aside. The applicant's bond to the Court is cancelled.

Order set aside.

Bengal Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (VIII B. C. of 1869), s. 6—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 4, 20—Under-raiyat, whether can acquire right of occupancy.

An under-raiyat who has remained in occupation of a certain plot of land and has cultivated it for more than twelve years, must be held to have acquired a right of occupancy under section 6 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. [p. 253, col. 1.]

The distinction made by the Bengal Tenancy Act between a raiyat and an under-raiyat was not recognised by Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Under the latter Act the term "raiyat" included all classes of tenants who were actual cultivators of the soil, and it was immaterial whether such a cultivator held his tenancy under a middleman or under a person who, though an occupancy raiyat originally, had placed another tenant in possession of the lands of his tenancy for purposes of cultivation, unless such sub-lease was "for a term or year by year." [p. 253, col. 1.]

Even under the present Bengal Tenancy Act an under-raiyat may by custom acquire a right of occupancy. [p. 253, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Special Subordinate Judge, Dhubri, in Assam Valley Districts, dated the 10th of December 1917, modifying the decree of the Munsif, Dhubri, dated the 3rd of August 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babus Satya Charan Sinha and Dwijendra Kumar Dutt), for the Appellant.—The appeal is by the defendant. The suit was brought to eject him, on the allegation that he was an under-raiyat, upon notice to quit under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The property in dispute is an occupancy holding, the original raiyat being one Mousa from whom the plaintiffs' predecessor purchased, they alleged, the right and that Mousa held the land as an under-raiyat. Our case is that there was no such purchase of the right from Mousa but that the plaintiffs' predecessor got himself recognised as an intermediate holder from the superior landlords—the Lakherajdars. But that the defendants purchased the right from Mousa in 1894 and that, therefore, the defendent is not liable to ejectment. My points are—(1) that the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court are conflicting as to the plaintiffs' purchase of the right of occupancy. (2) That Mousa having all along been in possession for more than 12 years and that thereafter selling his right of occupancy thus acquired under section 6 of Act VIII of 1869 to the defendant, the latter ought to have been treated as an occupancy raiyat. The learned Judge ought to have given effect to the clear provisions of the section, which I submit applies to the present case. On these two grounds I would urge that the plaintiffs' case should be dismissed inasmuch as the defendant, clearly having acquired a right of occupancy in the holding by purchase, is not liable to eviction as under-raiyat.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakerbutty (with him Babu Girija Prosanna Sanyal), for the Respondents.—As to the first branch of the agrument advanced by the other side, I would explain the learned Judge's finding and show that he has clearly and definitely found in favour of plaintiffs' purchase. As to the second branch I contend that section 6 of Act VIII of 1869 does not contemplate the acquisition of a right of occupancy by the under-raiyat. I submit an under-raiyat of an occupancy raiyat cannot acquire for himself another occupancy right, as that would totally change the status of the original raiyat. That would be going against the intention of the Legislature. Then there is another important point which ought to be properly considered. In 1912 plaintiffs sued the defendants for rent. The suit was, however, compromised and the plaintiffs agreed not to evict the defendants from the homestead lands, but they did not expressly agree to the same thing in respect to the agricultural lands. The defendants cannot, therefore, now turn round and say that they are occupancy raiyats, inasmuch as the very nature of the compromise tends to show that they are under-raiyats.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for ejectment on the ground that the defendant is an under-raiyat and is liable to ejectment upon notice, which the plaintiffs allege they served on him. It is common ground that Mousa was an occupancy raiyat in respect of the land in suit under certain Lakherajdars whose Lakheraj interest subsequently passed to the Gouripur Zemindars. The plaintiffs' case is that their father Ful Chand had purchased the occupancy right of Mousa about 40 years before suit and that after such purchase Mousa retained possession of the holding and was paying rent to Ful Chand as an under raiyat. The fact that Ful Chand was in receipt of such rent is not denied. The defendant, however, alleges that Ful Chand, somehow by arrnagement with the Lakherajdars, he being their Pleader, got himself recognised as a middleman between the Zemindar and Mousa the tenant. It is denied that Ful Chand ever purchased the interest of Mousa. The defendant says that in 1894, he purchased the occupancy right from the heirs of Mousa and holds the land as such occupancy raiyat. The first Court dismissed the suit. That decision was modified by the Court of Appeal below. That Court granted a decree for ejectment from the agricultural area of the holding, but upheld the decree of the first Court in so far as it related to the homestead land.

On second appeal it is contended that the findings of the lower Appellate Court are conflicting and upon those findings the decree passed by that Court cannot be supported. I must admit that the findings regarding the purchase of Mousa's occupancy right by Ful Chand are neither clear nor wholly consistent. But at the same time it is not difficult to understand what the learned Judge really meant to find. It seems his opinion was that the direct evidence to prove such purchase was insufficient and unreliable, but he thought that upon the surrounding circumstances a strong presumption arose in favour of such purchase. He clearly rejected the story of the defendant that Ful Chand had become a middleman by some act of the malik. I, therefore, take it as a finding of fact that Ful Chand did purchase the occupancy right of Mousa.

The learned Vakil for the appellant next urges, even assuming that Ful Chand purchased the occupancy holding of Mousa, as after that purchase Mousa and his heirs as well as the defendant No. 1 who is a purchaser from Mousa's heirs remained in occupation of the land and cultivated it for more than 12 years, the defendant must be held to have acquired a right of occupancy. In support of the argument reliance is placed on the words of section 6 of Act VIII of 1869, by which Act the present case is governed. The words of the section strongly support that conten tion. No authority has been quoted in support of the proposition that if Ful Chand acquired a right of occupancy by purchasing the interest of Mousa, although he never himself cultivated the land, no one accepting a tenancy under him could acquire a right of occupancy by cultivating the land for any number of years.

It appears from the examination of the provisions of that Act that the distinction made by Act VIII of 1885 between a raiyat and an under-raiyat was not recognised by the Act of 1869. As a matter of fact the word "under-raiyat" is nowhere to be found in that Act. The word "raiyat," therefore, included all classes of tenants who were actual cultivators of the soil, and it was immaterial whether such cultivator held his tenancy under a middleman or under a person who, though an occupancy raiyat originally, had placed another tenant in possession of the lands of his tenancy for purposes of cultivation unless, to quote the words of the section, such sub-lease was "for a term or year by year." Here it is not shown that the sub-lease by Ful Chand was of this description. The long possession of Mousa and his successors would seem to lead to a contrary conclusion. Upon this view of the case there was nothing to prevent Mousa or his heirs or the defendant No 1 as tenants under Ful Chand from acquiring a right of occupancy in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of the Act. Although it is not necessary to consider the point specially as it was not argued on either side, I feel very grave doubt whether the words "sub-let year by year" are intended to convey the same meaning as "sub-let from year to year." "Sub-let year by year" may mean sub-let year after year. If it means sub let from year to year, it is difficult to see what must be the kind of sub-lease which an occupancy-raiyat can and does ordinarily grant under which the sub-lessee may himself acquire a right of occupancy. Such an interpretation will unduly contract the scope of the section. It has been contended that no one can acquire rights under the holder of another occupancy right. There may be some force in the argument but it is inconclusive. Even under the present Act an under-raiyat may by custom acquire a right of occupancy and in such a case it would no doubt be an occupancy right held under an occupancy raiyat. Whether the acquisition of an occupancy right by a sub-tenant would effect a change in the status of the tenant is a question that need not be considered in this case.

It has been next argued that even assuming that the defendant had acquired a right of occupancy, that right came to an end when he entered into the compromise with the plaintiffs in the year 1912. It appears that in that year the plaintiffs brought a suit for rent against the defendant. The defendant raised various objections, but at last the case was compromised. By that compromise the lands of the holding were divided into two classes, lands forming part of the homestead and those that were purely agricultural. As regards the former, arrangement was made for payment of a particular sum as rent and there was a condition that the plaintiff would not be entitled to eject the defendantfrom the homestead land without special cause. But no express agreement regarding the right to eject the defendant was entered in respect of the agricultural lands. It was, however, provided that those lands would remain in the occupation of the defendant as before.

Having regard to the terms of the compromise I am of opinion that so far as the agricultural lands are concerned, it left the tenant in the enjoyment of the right as he had before, and if he had acquired an occupancy right to those lands, by reason of the compromise he cannot be said to have lost that right. On this view of the case and holding as I do that the defendant had acquired a right of occupancy, I think no case for ejectment has been made out.

In support of the cross-appeal it was contended by the learned Vakil for the respondents that the defendant was liable to be evicted from the homestead land as a special ground existed for such ejectment Both the Courts have held that the plaintiffs have failed to prove any special cause within the meaning of the terms of the compromise for ejecting the defendant from the homestead lands. This is a question of fact, and dealing with the case in second appeal I cannot interfere with the findings of the Courts below on this point. The cross-appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

The appeal is decreed and the decree of the first Court is upheld. The defendant will be entitled to his costs of this litigation throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 10—Stay of suit, when should be ordered—Court having jurisdiction to grant relief claimed, meaning of—Relief sought, whether must be identical.

To justify the stay of a suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is not necessary that the relief sought in the two suits should be identical. If the matter in issue in the two suits is the same, the later suit must be stayed without regard to the relief sought. [p. 255, col. 1; p. 256, col. 1.]

The words "jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed" do not mean territorial jurisdiction and the later suit must be stayed if the matter in issue is the same as in the first suit, although the Court in which the first suit was instituted has no territorial jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the later suit. [p. 255, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, C. J.—The plaintiff-respondent Manmull Khemka, as executor of Birji Coomary who died on the 4th April 1916, filed a suit in the Amherst District Court, Moulmein, on the 28th July 1917 against the defendant-appellant Murlidhar Bogla and Jamaladutt Bogla for Rs. 77,945 due on a mortgage-deed executed by these two persons in favour of Birji Coomary on 14th December 1915 The mortgaged property consists of timber yards, buildings and plant thereon at Moulmein. Birji Coomary was the widow of Bhagwan Das Rai Bahadur and the mortgage was taken by her as "Birji Coomary carrying on business under the name and style of Bhagwan Das Rai Bahadur." Before the filing of the above suit the two defendants appellants had on the 9th June 1916 filed a suit in the Calcutta High Court against the executor Manmull Khemka for a declaration that they were entitled to the estate of Bhagwan Das, or in the alternative were entitled to the estate of Birji Coomary, and they joined as co-defendant in that suit a minor Madan Gopal who was claiming Bhagwan Das's estate as adopted son of the widow of Mahadev, the adopted son of Bhagwan Das and Birji Coomary. The two defendants-appellants claimed the estate as grandsons of Jugal Jaisore who was the brother of Bhagwan Das's father Jaitrup.

The learned Judge held that section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code was inapplicable and that the suit should proceed. He accepted the argument of Counsel that if the defendants-appellants succeeded in the Calcutta suit the Moulmein suit would be rendered useless. But he went on to say: "That is not sufficient ground for stay of proceedings under section 10. The test should be, I consider, no matter how the Calcutta case is decided, would it dispose of the matter before me?", and he pointed out that the Calcutta Court had no jurisdiction to grant relief on a mortgage suit in which the property was in Moulmein. Finally he held that for section 10 to be applicable it was necessary that "the various incidents of the suits should be so far identical that they may, and if rightly decided should, lead to the same judgment."

This narrow view is not in accordance with the words of the section, and is not supprted by any authority. It would render the provisions of the section to a great extent nugatory by confining its operation in large classes of cases to Courts which have the same territorial jurisdiction, i. e., generally speaking to Courts in the same district. The section lays down that "No Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties.....litigating under the same title where such suit is pending in the same or in any other Court in British India having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed....." Thus three conditions are laid down: first, the matter in issue in the later suit must also be directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit; second, the parties in the previous suit must be the same as the parties in the later suit, and they must be litigating under the same title, and thirdly, the previously instituted suit must be pending in a Court which has jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed in the subsequent suit.

The corresponding section, section 12, of the Code of 1882 required that the earlier pending suit should be "for the same relief" as the later suit. Under the present Code, it is clear, identity of relief is no longer essential, and that the criterion now is "the matter in issue." We have to see whether the matter in issue in the later suit is directly and substantially in issue in the previously instituted suit. But it usually happens that there is more than one matter in issue in a suit, and it would not be unreasonable to construe the words "the matter in issue" as "all and every one of the matters in issue." To give due effect to the plain intention of the section it seems necessary to construe the words "as referring to the principal or one of the principal matters in issue." In the present case the right of the defendants-appellants to inherit Bhagwan Das's estate is one of the principal matters in issue in the Moulmein suit. The claim of the defendants-appellants to be heirs may or may not be a complete answer to the mortgage claim by the executor, but there can be no doubt that it is properly in issue in the mortgage suit. If the defendants appellants succeed in the Calcutta suit in establishing their claim as heirs, it would apparently follow that they will be entitled to the whole estate and it would be open to them to argue that the mortgage-debt due by them has become merged in their own estate. The same question, i. e., the right to Bhagwan Das's estate, forms the main issue in the Calcutta case. The parties to the Moulmein suit are parties also to the Calcutta suit, and they are litigating under the same title in both Courts.

We have no doubt also that as the section now stands, the Calcutta High Court has jurisdiction "to grant the relief claimed" in the Moulmein suit. The section does not require that the Calcutta High Court should have jurisdiction to grant the particular relief prayed for in the Moulmein suit, i. e., a mortgage decree in respect of property situated in Moulmein. It might have been so under the old Code; but all that the present section requires is that the Court in which the previous suit is pending should be a Court in British India competent to grant the relief in such a suit as that subsequently instituted. The Calcutta High Court has unlimited jurisdiction, and is, therefore, competent to grant relief in a mortgage suit of any value. The words "any Court in British India" and the explanation appended to this section show that what the Legislature had in view was not the local limits of territorial jurisdiction. It would clearly be contrary to the intention of the Legislature, as expressed in this section, that two suits having the same matter in issue should be allowed to proceed simultaneously in two British Indian Courts of equal jurisdiction, merely because the relief claimed in one case related to land in one district, in the other to land in another district, and this would be the result if the view of the District Judge in this case were to prevail.

I would, therefore, set aside the order of the District Court, and direct that the Moulmein suit shall not proceed until the Calcutta suit is decided and the respondent should pay the appellants' costs of this appeal; Advocate's fees five gold mohurs.

ROBINSON, J.—I am of the same opinion. There is a marked difference between the wording of section 10 of the present Code, and that of the corresponding section of the Code of 1882. The former Code required that the previously instituted suit should be "for the same relief" and that the Court in which it was pending should have jurisdiction to grant the identical relief prayed for in the later suit. This led to many decisions emphasizing the necessity for the same relief being prayed for in both suits.

In the present Code the words "for the same relief" have been omitted altogether, and the words "jurisdiction to grant such relief" have been altered into "jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed." This change is significant, and is not due merely to an attempt to improve the phraseology but to an intention to change the principle which should govern the application of this provision of the law. It is no longer the identity of the relief sought which is to justify the stay of a suit, but the similarity of the matter in issue. If the matter in issue in the two suits is the same, the later suit can be stayed without regard to the relief sought.

Jurisdiction to grant the identical relief limited to a very large extent the cases to which the provision could be applied, and the advantage or necessity for such a limitation is not easy to appreciate. The Court in which the first suit is instituted must now have jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed and the effect of the change in the wording as to relief must be held to govern also the provision as to jurisdiction. The interpretation of the section as a whole must be consistent and, therefore, it is no longer possible to insist that the Court in which the first suit is pending must have jurisdiction to entertain and determine the later suit. To so hold would be to stultify the change that was effected in the governing factor of the application of the provision. It is, therefore, in my opinion no longer possible to hold that because the Court in which the first suit was instituted could not try the later suit since it related to immoveable property situated outside its territorial jurisdiction, the provisions of section 10 cannot be applied where the case was otherwise a fit and proper one for the application of the provisions. It must be held that the jurisdiction was intended to be not absolute but concurrent in degree.

One of the main defences to the later suit, if not entirely the whole defence, is the very matter to establish which the suit was filed before the High Court of Calcutta. This matter must be adjudicated in the later suit. The matter in issue is directly and substantially in issue in both suits, and all the objections to both suits proceeding simultaneously, objections which are the foundation for the provision of the section, are present in this instance.

The Moulmein Court cannot, in my opinion, proceed with the trial, and its order should be set aside. I agree in the proposed order as to costs and Advocates' fees.

Order set aside.

Execution of decree—Mortgage decree—Objection to validity of decree, whether can be entertained.

A mortgage decree provided for the sale of five specific properties, the subject of the mortgage. Subsequently, it was declared that three of the five properties were not liable to sale under the decree. The decree-holder applied, in execution, for sale of the two remaining properties, whereupon the judgment-debtor objected that execution, if it could proceed at all, could proceed only for such sum as might be due on the two said properties:

HARENDRA LAL v. PABNA MODEL CO., LTD.

Appeals against the orders of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Pabna, dated the 22nd of February 1919 and 4th of January 1919 respectively.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Ramani Mohan Chatterjee), for the Appellant. —A mortgage decree was obtained for the sale of five properties, three of which belonged to one of the mortgagors, Nil Nalini Debi. On a suit brought by the sons of Nil Nalini it was declared that the mortgage decree was not binding upon them nor upon the properties of Nil Nalini, on the ground that Nil Nalini had died before the institution of the mortgage suit. The only question before your Lordships will be whether the remaining two of the mortgaged properties are liable for the whole amount or only for a proportionate amount of the mortgage decree.

I submit that the execution of the mortgage decree can proceed, if at all, only for such sum as might be found to be justly due on those two properties on which the mortgage decree subsisted and which were not excluded from the operation of that decree by the suit of the sons of Nil Nalini. The case in Mahomed Siddik v. Ram Lal Mandar (Saudagar Mian Lahiri) (1) supports my contention. Refers also to Hari Kissen Bhagat v. Veliat Hossein (2).

If through the laches of the mortgagee some of the mortgaged properties are excluded from liability under the mortgage, the mortgagee cannot throw the entire burden of the mortgage upon the rest of the properties. Refers to section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarti (with him Babu Krishna Kamal Moitra), for the Respondent.—Here the objection is taken in the execution proceedings. In the cases relied on by my learned friend the objection was taken in the suit upon the mortgages. I submit that these objections cannot be taken in the execution proceedings. The decree as it stands must be executed. The remedy, if any, lies in a regular suit questioning the validity of the mortgage decree. The question raised by my learned friend is one into which the execution Court cannot enter.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that four brothers of the name of Sanyals and two ladies, being the wives of two of the brothers, executed a mortgage-bond in favour of the decree-holder who is the respondent before us. In this mortgage-bond five properties were mortgaged and of these three were described as the property of one of the two ladies, namely, a lady of the name of Nil Nalini Debi, the other two being the property of one or more of the other five mortgagors. The respondent before us brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree for the sale of the mortgaged properties sometime in December 1916. Thereafter in March 1917 the sons of Nil Nalini brought a suit to have it declared that the decree was not binding upon them or as against the properties of Nil Nalini, on the ground that Nil Nalini had died before the mortgage suit was instituted. This suit was decreed on the 21st February 1918. On the 10th of April 1918 the decree-holder made an application for the revival of the mortgage suit and for an amendment of the plaint making the sons of Nil Nalini parties to the same. This application was opposed by at least one of the brothers and was finally rejected. Thereafter the decree-holder made his application for the sale in execution of the remaining two properties. It is objected by one of the judgment-debtors that the execution, if it can proceed at all, can proceed only for such sum as might be found to be justly due on the two properties not excluded from the decree, and in support of this contention before us two cases, Hari Kissen Bhagat v. Veliat Hossein (2) and Mahomed Siddik v. Ram Lal Mandar (Saudagar Mian Lahiri) (1) are cited. It does not appear to us that in these cases the facts are the same as in the present case. Moreover, the objections taken in these cases were taken in the course of the original suit, while here we have the objection taken to the execution of the decree as it now subsists. Obviously this is not a question into which the execution Court can enter, and the decree as it now subsists must be executed by the execution Court.

(2) 30 C. 755; 7 C. W. N. 723.

In the result this appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs.

The analogous Miscellaneous Appeal No. 66 of 1919 is not pressed and is also dismissed. We make no order as to costs in this appeal.

Mr. Burjorji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MAUNG KIN, J.—This was a suit for the administration of the estate of U Pe deceased. He is said to have married four times, the wives being Ma Ywe, Ma Nwe, Ma Nu and Ma May. He divorced the first wife Ma Ywe after he got a son named Aung Zan by her. He next married Ma Nwe, and had three children by her—San Paw the present appellant, Aung Bau and Pe Kin. After Ma Nwe's death U Pe married Ma Nu, the only issue of this marriage being Ma Tun. On the death of Ma Nu he married Ma May by whom he had three children. Ma May predeceased U Pe. Ma Myin, a daughter of the second marriage, predeceased U Pe leaving her surviving two children.

All the descendants of U Pe are parties to the suit except Aung Zan. Aung Zan has "absconded" and cannot be found and has been presumed to be dead, as he has not been heard of by any of his relations for more than seven years, and his children have been made parties to the suit in his place.

The whole of the estate in suit was acquired by U Pe during his marriage with Ma Nwe.

The questions before the lower Court were what rule of partition applied, whether Ma Ywe and Ma May were the lawful wives of U Pe, whether Aung Bon and Pe Kin were "dog sons" and whether Maung So, a grandson, also came under that category. The learned Judge of that Court held that the rule to be applied was that the children of the marriage during which the property is acquired would take double the share taken by the children of the other marriages, and that as regards the out of time grandchildren they would together take one quarter of what their parent would have taken, had he or she survived U Pe. This decision is in accordance with the clear texts of sections 66 and 67 read with section 15 of the Manukye Book X and also with the rulings in Ma Min E v. Ma Kyaw Thin (1) and Ma Saw Ngwe v. Ma Thein Yin (2), and it has not been seriously questioned before us. In my judgment it was undoubtedly correct.

SAN PAW v. MA YIN.

The learned Judge held that Ma Ywe was the lawful wife of U Pe. The ground of attack in this connection was that Ma Ywe was a slave girl, and that U Pe never married her. The evidence on the record shows that U Pe and Ma Ywe lived openly as husband and wife, and the learned Judge held that on the whole the evidence was trustworthy, and that as a matter of law living together gave rise to a presumption of marriage which has not been rebutted. I entirely agree with the learned Judge, and hold that Ma Ywe was U Pe's wife.

The learned Judge held that Ma May also was U Pe's wife. He has given good reasons for his opinion. Ma May admittedly lived with U Pe as his wife openly for several years during which three children were born to them. The evidence shows that they went to Pongyi Kyaungs and also fed Pongyis together, and that they ate together. Admittedly, U Pe had no other wife during the time he lived with Ma May. The attack on the status of Ma May's children entirely broke down in evidence. San Paw admitted that in his application for Letters of Administration to the estate he described these children as among his near relatives. Ma Tun, a daughter of U Pe by his third marriage, while denying that Ma May was the legal wife of her father, admitted having called her mother. There are two other witnesses tendered by San Paw whose evidence has been treated by the Judge as favourable to Ma May's children. Ma Pwa On (defendant's witness No. 10) says that U Pe and Ma May lived as man and wife and had children. Ma Thu (defendant's witness No. 11) says that Ma May was U Pe's wife at the time of his death. Though these two witnesses use the term "wife" loosely, their evidence goes to show that they lived together, and is certainly favourable to Ma May's children. Much was made of the fact that Ma May joined U Pe's house as a nurse to look after his children. In my judgment no inference one way or the other can be drawn from this fact. There was no formal marriage, but a very strong presumption arises from the conduct of the parties to each other. I think there is no escape from the inference that Ma May was the legal wife of U Pe.

On the question whether Aung Bon and Pe Kin were "dog-sons", the learned Judge held that they were not. Against Aung Bon it was alleged that some six years before his father's death, he was suspected of planning to kill the old man. San Paw merely says that his father suspected Aung Bon of having such an evil design, but cannot prove anything more. The only other witness on this point is Ma Tun, another of U Pe's children. She says: "Pe Kin told me and Ma May to be careful as he was planning to kill all of us. He said that he did so at the instance of Aung Bon" This evidence, strictly speaking, is not admissible, and even if admissible it is vague and meagre. There is no direct evidence to show that Aung Bon planned to kill his father. On the other hand there is evidence to show that Aung Bon was on visiting terms with his father till his death. This shows that whatever may have happened, the father had forgiven his son.

Against Pe Kin it is alleged that he was disowned as a drunkard and a thief. It is not proved that Pe Kin stole his father's property; he was merely accused of doing so. It is clear that Pe Kin was addicted to strong drink, but I do not find any evidence to show that he was disowned by his father for that. San Paw swears that in his presence the old man scolded Pe Kin for drinking, and told him not to do so. There is no reason for disbelieving San Paw as to this, but I do not think we can hold that a son who drinks in spite of his father's admonition is guilty of unfilial conduct. A son, who when in drink insults his father, or acts like an enemy towards him, may be a "dog-son." It is alleged that Pe Kin went to his father during his last illness, and that when the old man turned his face away from him, Pe Kin made a threatening gesture and had to be taken away. This is San Paw's story, but there is no corroborative evidence, though it should be forthcoming, if Pe Kin had done anything of the kind. Finally, he is alleged to have kicked his father's coffin saying that he was a bad father. The evidence on this point is conflicting, but the weight of it is in favour of the conclusion that Pe Kin having drunk as did many others, on account of the cholera scare—U Pe had died of cholera—created a disturbance near the coffin before it was removed. In any case I am at one with the learned Judge when he says: "I do not know that conduct subsequent to U Pe's death would affect Pe Kin's rights. His share of inheritance vested in him as soon as U Pe died." The result is that there is no proof that either Pe Kin or Aung Bon was guilty of conduct inimical to their father. Without such proof no son can be held to have forfeited his right to share in his father's estate. The bad conduct attributed to him must be clearly proved. It is not enough to prove that the father disowned the son for alleged misconduct. For he may have done so unjustly. The Buddhist Law does not give the father the right to disinherit his children. It only declares that the right is forfeited by the child for such unfilial conduct as brings him within the category of a "dog-son."

As regards the grandchild Maung So, he is not alleged to have misbehaved himself towards his grandfather. All that is alleged against him is that he attempted criminally to assault his uncle's wife. This obviously does not bring him within the category of "dog-son." I have agreed with the learned Judge of the lower Court on every point, and his decree must, therefore, be confirmed.

Before the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was taken to the effect that it was understamped. In the memorandum of appeal it is valued at Rs. 150 and that is said to have been done under section 7 (iv) (f) of the Court Fees Act; the suit being a suit for administration is treated as a suit for accounts. It is true that San Paw the appellant raises grounds which, if substantiated, would largely increase his share by very much more than Rs. 150. Yet it is true that he is not in a position to say even approximately what his share would be. I think it is because in a suit like this, it is impossible to value the relief even approximately that the law leaves it to the plaintiff or the appellant, as the case may be, to value the relief as he pleases, but the Legislature at the same time guards against the abuse of this privilege by enacting that should there be a deficiency of stamp ascertainable on the proper amount being eventually found as recoverable by the plaintiff or the appellant, such deficiency must be made good. The view is in accordance with the recent rulings of the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts. See Sasi Bhushan Bose v. Manindra Chandra Nandy (3) and Khatija v. Sheikh Adam Husenally (4). I am, therefore, unable to hold that the appeal is understamped.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. The case will go back to the District Court to be disposed of according to law.

TWOMEY, C. J.—I concur in dismissing the appeal. The appellant San Paw should bear the costs of this appeal.

There is a clerical error in the judgment and decree of the District Court. The share of the children of Aung Zan collectively is one twentieth and not one-twenty fourth, and the decree should be rectified accordingly. The plaintiffs claimed seventeen eighteenths of Rs. 90,000 and were allowed to sue in forma pauperis. The final decree when passed should include an order under Order XXXIII, rule 10, giving to Government a first charge on the estate for the proper Court-fees on the share claimed by the plaintiffs in the plaint.

The appellant San Paw valued the relief claimed by him in this appeal at Rs. 150. When the value of the share, 37/240ths, awarded to him has been determined, the value of the share claimed by him in this appeal should also be determined by the District Court, and the deficiency, if any, in the Court-fee paid by San Paw on his memorandum of appeal should be recovered from his share under section 11 of the Court Fees Act.

Appeal dismissed.

JOY CHANDRA DUTTA v. SARAJUBALA DEBI.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 267 OF 1917.

May 20, 1919.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri, KT., and Mr. Justice Newbould.

JOY CHANDRA DUTTA—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

SARAJUBALA DEBI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Court of Wards Act (IX B. C. of 1879), s. 55—Suit to recover balance of thica jama of garh, nature of—Sanction of Court, whether necessary—Failure to obtain sanction, effect of—Rent, definition of, scope of—Procedure—Irregularity, failure to object to, effect of—Jurisdiction.

The manager of an estate under the Court of Wards is competent to institute a suit on behalf of the estate without the sanction of the Court of Wards in order to save limitation, but he should not proceed with the suit until he obtains the requisite sanction. If he does proceed with the suit, the Court does not act without jurisdiction merely because sanction was wanting; at most, it would amount to an irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction which would not vitiate the proceedings. [p. 262, col. 1.]

A suit for the recovery of the balance of the thica jama, due on the basis of an agreement settling a reserved forest (garh) for a period of five years, under the terms of which the rent is payable in instalments and the lessees are entitled to cut down and sell valuable trees and to grant subleases of such right, is a suit for rent within the meaning of section 55 of the Bengal Court of Wards Act and no sanction is required for the institution of such a suit by the manager. [p. 262, col. 2.]

The expression "rent" has a more extensive meaning than the definition given to it by the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 263, col. 1.]

When, in a case which a Judge is competent to try, the parties without objection join issue and go to trial upon the merits, the defendant cannot subsequently dispute the jurisdiction of the Judge upon the ground that there were irregularities in the initial procedure, which, if objected to at the time, would have led to the dismissal of the suit. [p. 262, col. 1]

JUDGMENT.

CHAUDHURI, J.—A preliminary point was taken in this appeal that as the suit was brought on behalf of the plaintiffs, who are wards under the Court of Wards, without such authority as is required by section 55, Act IX of 1879, B. C., it should have been dismissed. It was also urged that, even if it were held that the manager had properly instituted the suit to save limitation under the first proviso of that section, the Court should not have proceeded with it without sanction, which was only obtained on the 17th July 1917 and filed on the 19th July 1917, when all the evidence on both sides had been taken and argument heard in part. The suit was instituted on the 17th September 1914, defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 appeared on the 6th November 1914 and defendant No. 1 a little later. They filed their written statements in April and May 1915. Issues were settled in August 1915 A commission for local enquiry was issued in January 1916. It was returned executed in June 1917. Examination of witnesses began in July 1917 and arguments began, after the whole of the evidence had been given, on the 17th July 1917. No objection was taken to the proceedings by the defendants all this time, but at their instance an issue as to the maintainability of the suit was then for the first time raised. The learned Judge has held that the suit was properly instituted by the manager to save limitation under the proviso above referred to, distinguishing it from Dinesh Chunder Roy v. Golam Mostapha (1). Strong reliance has, however, been placed by the learned Vakil for the appellants on Digendra Chunder Sen v. Nritya Gopal Biswas (2), a recent decision of this Court The trial Judge has rightly held that the manager instituted this suit to save limitation, as appears from his letter to the Collector, dated the 5th September 1914. The section, however, provides that "such suit shall not be afterwards proceeded with except under the sanction of the Court of Wards." The learned Judges in Digendra Chunder Sen's case (2) have held that such a suit cannot be proceeded with without such sanction and all proceedings taken subsequent to institution are without jurisdiction and must, therefore, be set aside.

I may say at once that I am not prepared to go that length. Section 55 seems to me to be intended for the guidance of managers. It simply lays down that if he files a suit to save limitation, he shall not proceed with it without the sanction of his employer, the Court of Wards. It is not a question of jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit has been instituted, but it seeks to control the action of the manager. There is nothing in the section which prevents the defendants from waiving the stay. To proceed with such a suit is not an assumption of jurisdiction which the trial Court does not possess. The utmost that can perhaps be said is that it is an irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, which cannot be held entirely to vitiate the proceedings. Admittedly the Court had inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit and the utmost the defendants could have required was a stay of the proceedings, but they did not ask for such stay and allowed elaborate proceedings to be taken and joined in them. There are numerous authorities which establish that when in a case which the Judge is competent to try, the parties without objection join issue and go to trial upon the merits, the defendants cannot subsequently dispute its jurisdiction upon the ground that there were irregularities in the initial procedure, which, if objected to at the time, would have led to the dismissal of the suit. Ledgard v. Bull (3). In Digendra Chundra Sen's case (2) the learned Judges directed a trial de novo, to proceed from the stage of filing the plaint. I could never have persuaded myself to make such an order in this case. It would have meant punishing the parties, involving heavy costs and loss of time. The proceedings continued for nearly three years, including local enquiries and examination of witnesses on commission. Nothing was shown or even suggested that the defendants had, in any way, been prejudiced. The manager applied for sanction in time. The plaint was sent to the Legal Remembrancer who approved of it, but it was apparently through an oversight that the Commissioner did not endorse the sanction until the date above mentioned. Duplication of machinery in these matters, sometimes as in this case, leads to unforeseen and unfortunate results, but I cannot bring myself to punish a party unless the law imposes upon me an obligation. The law does not, in my opinion, lay down such a definite bar as has been urged before us.

We are both agreed, however, that the suit was properly filed apart from the question of saving limitation. It seems to us to be a suit for rent, which is excepted under section 55. No doubt the plaint speaks of the amount claimed as balance of the sale price of the Garh, but it refers to the instalments payable under the agreement for settlement of the Garh and to the terms of the lease. The use of the expression "sale price" is perhaps due to the fact that forest or Garh settlements are frequently made by auction to the highest bidder—the usual Bengali expression for it being "the sale" of a Garh, or it may be due to certain decisions in which the assignment of the right of cutting trees from a forest appears to have been treated as a contract for sale of the timber. It may also have been used to prevent the defendants claiming suspension of rent on allegations of dispossession from portions of the forest during the subsistence of the settlement or lease. In spite of the claim as worded in the plaint, the defendants treated it as a suit for rent and issues were framed accordingly. See issues Nos. 6, 7 and 8. The document upon which the claim is based Exhibit 25 is described as an agreement for settlement of the reserved Garh for a period of five years at a thika jama of Rs 61,000, "the rent" being payable in instalments. It gives the defendants right to cut down and sell the valuable trees and to grant sub-leases of such right. It gives liberty to them to get passages made and erect huts to enable the purchasers of the wood to live in them, and to make stock-yards. It provides for damages for trespass into the area settled, and for the right of re-entry in case of default of payment of two instalments of "rent" with liberty to re-settle the Garh and also for reduction of rent in case of deficiency of area, and a duty is cast upon the lessees to inform the Police if any cognisable offence should occur. The covenants bind the parties and their representatives. It is clearly a demise of forest rights and the defendants are treated as lessees of the forest for a period of five years with power to grant sub-leases. It cannot be treated as an agreement merely for the sale of timber. The same view was taken in a document somewhat of a similar character in Abdulullah Sarkar v. Asraf Ali Mandal (4). In this case there are additional rights, namely, that of building huts and stockyards on the land and to make passages and Ghats for the clearance of timber. In the case above referred to, the learned Judges held that section 193, Bengal Tenancy Act, was applicable and that it was not rent within the meaning of section 3 (5) of that Act. It is to be noted that Act X of 1859 contained no definition of rent. When the Bengal Tenancy Act (1885) was passed, the term "rent" was defined and given a restricted meaning; section 193 was introduced, which with clause (2) of Schedule III substantially reproduces section 23, clause (4), and section 32 of Act X of 1859. In Shib Prosad Chaudhuri v. Vakai Pali (5) the learned Judges held that there was nothing in the definition of "rent" in the Bengal Tenancy Act which excludes fishery rent, although this view is not accepted in Krishna Lal Chowdhury v. Salim Mahomed Chowdhury (6). The expression "rent" has a more extensive meaning than the definition given to it in the Bengal Tenancy Act. In Peary Lal Daw v. Madhoji Jiban (7) the learned Judges were strongly inclined to treat a suit for royalty payable in respect of a mine as a suit for rent under Article 110, Limitation Act, but did not do so having regard to the cases in which Article 116 had been held to be applicable. The word "rent" in Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act includes money recoverable under any enactment for the time being in force, as if it was rent. Section 193, Bengal Tenancy Act, provides for the recovery of money payable in respect of forest rights as rent. We do not see any ground for holding that the present suit is not one for arrears of rent. A forest is landed property, and in the present case there is a lease of forest rights and the amount due is treated as rent and we think it is covered by the second proviso of section 55, Act IX of 1879, and that the suit is maintainable as it was authorised by the manager. This disposes of the preliminary point raised. We decide it against the appellants.

They next contend that as they were kept out of possession of some portion of the Garh included in the Pattah, they are entitled to suspension of the rent. This was the ninth issue in the trial Court but nothing about suspension was mentioned in it, compensation for loss having been claimed. It has, however, been put before us as a question of law and, therefore, open to them. This issue relates to Madar Tek and it is said that the plaintiffs did not allow the defendants to take trees from that Tek. The case of the plaintiffs is that the Tek is the Niskar of Madar Saheb and all that they settled with the defendants was the allotment which they had got on partition of the parent estate, namely, Saham No. 10, and that as this Tek was not allotted to them it was not settled with the defendants. A Commissioner was appointed to ascertain what the allotment was. He reported that the major portion of the disputed spot fell outside the Estate No. 10 which had been allotted to the plaintiffs, and which according to the lease was settled with the defendants. It, therefore, comes to this that Madar Tek was not allotted to the plaintiffs and it was not settled with the defendants. In making the map and upon local investigation it was, however, found that the defendants had not been allowed to cut wood from three small bits, which were considered by the plaintiffs as appertaining to Madar Tek but which really belonged to Estate No. 10. The learned Judge has found that there is no evidence to show that the plaintiffs possessed Madar Tek but that as these three small portions were within the plaintiffs' allotment and the defendants did not get possession thereof, the defendants were entitled to claim compensation for the same, and he allowed Rs. 375 as the value of the trees in those portions. It is quite clear from the findings with which we agree that it was not known to the Raj that these small portions were within the Saham, and it cannot be said that the defendants were tortiously dispossessed of them. We do not think that this is a case for suspension of rent. It is always a matter of difficulty in a forest to ascertain the boundaries with exactitude, because wild growth in course of time encroaches upon other lands in the neighbourhood. It is to be noticed that these three plots shown in the map at stations Nos. 7, 8, 9, 17, 18, 19, 30, 31 and 32 are in the boundary line and they were only discovered after careful survey. Several cases were referred to relating to suspension of rent, the basis of the Indian cases being Neale v. Mackenzie (8). We are unable to hold that any of the cases cited helps the contention put before us, or that the defendant is entitled to suspension of rent on this head, having regard to the above circumstances. We find the learned Judge has rightly allowed Rs. 375 as the value of the trees standing on the disputed area.

The defendants further complain that a portion of the Garh settled with them was let out to other persons and they were dispossessed therefrom, and suspension of rent is also, therefore, claimed before us. This is the 6th issue, but in it the relief asked for was damages. The question arises out of the settlement of Bazar Garh with other parties, which was made before the settlement with the defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the defendants' lease did not include Bazar Garh and that the plaintiffs did not let out any portion of the Garh settled with them to other parties, nor did the plaintiffs give the other parties any right to cut a certain class of trees known as Ajugi trees which they had settled with the defendants. These other parties did cut such trees, but they were sub-lessees of the defendants, under a written document, and if they exceeded their right as such, the defendants had their remedy against them and the plaintiffs are not in any way liable to the defendants therefor. We entirely agree with the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge and hold that he was right in deciding the issue against the defendants. Upon the findings no question of suspension of rent can arise.

The defendants further allege that they were unjustly prohibited from cutting the wood and selling it for a period and they are, therefore, entitled to suspension of rent during that period, and great reliance is placed on Dwijendra Nath Roy Chaudhuri v Aftabuddi Sardar (9) and Rani Lalita Sundari v. Rani Surnomoyee Dasi (10). This is the subject matter of the 8th issue. The learned Judge has found that the plaintiffs did not allow the defendants to cut and sell the wood for a certain period on the allegation that they had failed to pay the rent regularly. There is a stipulation in the agreement that in case of default of two successive instalments the lessor was entitled to take possession of the Garh. Two orders were issued on that basis by the plaintiffs to their servants, one dated the 11th Aghran 1315 and another on the 25th Joista 1316, which was withdrawn on the 11th Srawan 1316, (Exhibits J & K), not to allow the defendants to cut and sell the trees. These orders were improperly made. The defendants had not made default in the payment of two successive instalments. With regard to this matter, however, the defendants did not ask for suspension in the trial Court but claimed compensation. The learned Judge has not, therefore, found what was the period during which the defendants were not allowed to cut and sell the wood. From the evidence as it stands, it is difficult to find the period with any degree of exactitude. The defendants had sub-let the Garh to different parties and these sub-lessees have been examined on this point. They vary in their statements. Some say they were stopped for two or three days only and some say 10 or 15 days, and one witness (witness No. 8) said it was four or six months. Their own amlah, witness No. 11, said there were three prohibition orders, all verbal, which lasted 10, 20 and 30 days respectively. This is not borne out by the written orders above referred to. We think, however, that having regard to the agreement which contains a special covenant, the defendants are not entitled to ask for suspension. It runs as follows :—

"If you do not pay rent in proper time according to the instalments given in this deed, or if we suffer any loss by any act done by you, or if you suffer any loss by any act done by us, then we and you shall be responsible for the damages for losses respectively suffered in this way and such damages due to either party will be recoverable through the Court." The defendants in their written statement, paragraph 8, claimed damages to the extent of Rs. 7,000 on this head, but they preferred a claim with regard to this very matter for Rs. 1,100 only before the Board of Revenue which has control over the Court of Wards, Exhibit 24, dated 4th November 1911. The defendants have not produced any books or any documentary evidence to show what loss they have sustained. They have not given satisfactory evidence as regards the exact period during which the order remained in force and have merely relied upon the oral testimony of their sub lessees. The learned Subordinate Judge has summarised that evidence in his judgment and allowed Rs. 150 only on this head. The sub-lessees did not produce any documentary evidence but said they obtained remission of the amounts payable by them in consequence of the prohibitory orders. We have carefully gone through that evidence. Witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 do not speak about any amounts remitted to them on this head. Witness No. 4 speaks about an allowance of Rs. 100 to Rs. 125 only; he says he suffered no loss on account of the second prohibitory order but on account of the first. Receipts are not produced by him, although he obtained them; he does not even know if remission was entered in them, but he says the amount remitted was entered in the defendants' book. Witness No. 6 says that he did not suffer much loss. He obtained some remission, but cannot say if it was on account of the prohibition. He got a remission of Rs. 50 only. Witness No. 7 says that he suffered loss and got remission to the extent of Rs. 150 or Rs. 175 but it was not on account of prohibition only, but other matters were also taken into account. He says his receipts do not show that he received any remission. Witness No. 8 stated that he obtained remission of Rs. 100 or Rs. 125, which included Rs. 50 or Rs. 60 for opening roads. He does not produce any books of account or receipts. Witness No. 9 said that he had obtained remission of Rs. 600 or Rs. 700 but he changed the figures to Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 in cross-examination. This was, he said, for various reasons including the loss, he said, he sustained for not having been allowed to cut wood in Madar Tek which he said had been sub let to him by the defendants. Madar Tek, as we have found, was not let out by the plaintiffs to the defendants, and, therefore, any remission made to him by the defendants, for Madar Tek, ought not to be taken into account. The defendants have admittedly account books which they have not filed. and it is difficult having regard to the vagueness of the evidence given by their witnesses to arrive at a definite figure. The defendants have apparently realised the rent at which the Garh was sub-let by them to their sub-lessees and it was quite possible for them to show how much remission they had granted. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken the figures given by witnesses Nos. 4 and 8, but having regard to the indefinite character of the evidence of witnesses Nos. 6 and 9 he did not take them into consideration. We think, however, that something more ought to be allowed having regard to their evidence, and we accordingly increase the amount awarded to Rs. 300.

The next issue that we shall deal with is about making roads for the convenience of the defendants. There is a stipulation in the agreement that in default of the plaintiffs getting passages opened by their men in proper time, the defendants will be at liberty to get such passages made at their own cost for which they will get credit out of the money payable by them to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs admittedly did not open up any passages and there can be no doubt from the evidence that passages were opened by the defendants at their own cost. The account books produced by the defendants for 1314 and 1315 show that the cost of preparing the roads was Rs. 351-6-6, but these account books have not been properly proved. The handwriting of the entries has been proved, but the persons who wrote the account books or spent the money have not been called. In the petition to the Board of Revenue, Exhibit 24, the defendants claimed Rs. 400 as loss for not making roads. The oral evidence is of an unsatisfactory character. Various estimates are given about the cost, ranging from Rs. 3 or Rs. 4 to Rs. 1,000. The learned Judge has accepted the evidence of the defendants' witness No. 1 who was a sub-lessee and has allowed Rs. 29 only. We think this amount inadequate. The defendants certainly made one or two big roads by cutting down the jungle, and we think that it would be just to allow the defendants Rs. 350 on this head, which is practically the amount mentioned in the account book, and we direct that sum to be deducted from the amount of the rent claimed.

The defendants also claimed credit for Rs. 1,500, said to have been paid as rent but misappropriated by the servants of the plaintiffs. This item was, however, given up by the learned Vakil for the defendants, and we need not, therefore, consider it.

A further issue was raised as regards the interest claimed by the plaintiffs. Exhibit 25 provides for it and the plaintiffs have shown that interest was realised from the defendants. We hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to interest.

The learned Subordinate Judge has allowed the defendants credit to the extent of Rs. 554 altogether, namely, Rs. 29 for the roads, Rs. 150 for the prohibitory order and Rs. 375 for the timber which stood on the three little tracts adjoining Madar Tek. We vary those sums as follows: namely, Rs. 350 for roads and Rs. 300 as compensation for the prohibitory order, increasing the amount to Rs. 1,025. Proportionate amount of costs on the above basis. Except as aforesaid, the appeal is dismissed. Hearing fee is assessed at Rs. 300.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20 (c)—Place of suing—Principal and agent—Accounts, suit for, against agent—Cause of action.

The cause of action in a suit for accounts against an agent arises at the place where the contract of agency was made or where it was to be performed and where the refusal to account took place. [p. 266, col. 2.]

The fact that monies have to be sent from a particular place does not form a part of the cause of action on a contract of agency. [p. 267, col. 1.]

Mr. Ohari, for the Plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for an account arising out of a contract of agency under which the defendant was employed by the plaintiff as his agent at Tiruvaloor in Tanjore district, Madras Presidency. The defendant pleads (inter alia) that this Court has no jurisdiction. The proposal to employ the defendant as agent was made by letter addressed to him at Tiruvaloor, and was accepted by defendant by letter through the post. The contract was, therefore, made at Tiruvaloor. See Kamisetti Subbiah v. Katha Venkatasawmy (1).

It was clearly to be performed at Tiruvaloor. The refusal to account occurred there. The defendant is residing there. For these reasons the defendant contends that this Court has no jurisdiction. Plaintiff says that monies were sent from Rangoon and according to the terms of the contract they were to be sent from Rangoon. The former proposition is correct. The latter proposition is not alleged in the plaint. It seems the plaintiff may send monies from anywhere. Assuming that the monies were according to the contract to be sent from Rangoon, it is contended that the cause of action arose in part in Rangoon and that, therefore, this Court has jurisdiction. This case is similar to the Allahabad case of Salig Ram v. Ohaha Mal (2). In that case there was a contract of agency and it was held that it was made at Karachi, that it was to be performed there and that the agent committed misconduct or negligence there. But it was contended that as the resultant loss or damage occurred at Hathras, the cause of action arose in part at that place. The learned Judges (Tudball and Piggott, JJ.) observed: "The language of the section has been altered in the present Act in that in place of the words 'the cause of action arises' and Explanation III of section 17, the words 'the cause of action in whole or in part arises' have been substituted. This has not in our opinion altered the law as to what is the cause of action in suits arising out of contract. Explanation III of section 17, Act XIV of 1882, though it does not appear in the present Act, is a correct statement of what the law still is and shows clearly the true meaning of the words 'cause of action' in the case of suits arising out of contracts." With these remarks I entirely agree. Applying them to this case, I am unable to hold that the fact – if it is a fact— that monies were to be sent from Rangoon forms part of the cause of action on the contract of agency. This Court has no jurisdiction. The plaint will be returned for presentation to the proper Court. The defendant will get costs on the contested scale.

(1) 27 M. 355.
(2) 11 Ind. Cas. 712; 34 A. 49; 8 A. L. J. 1160.

Plaint returned.

Appeal, withdrawal of—Vakil, power of, to compromise, whether involves power to withdraw—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Jurisdiction, refusal to exercise, what amounts to—Refusal to entertain application.

The power given to a Vakil to compromise the matters in dispute in a pending appeal does not involve the power to withdraw the appeal unconditionally. That power must be given specifically and cannot be implied from the general words authorising the Vakil to compromise. [p. 268, col. 1.]

Where a Court refuses to entertain an application on the erroneous ground that the application does not lie, its action amounts to declining jurisdiction and its order is liable to be set aside under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 268, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 103 of the Government of India Act, 1915, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, Ramnad at Madura, dated the 27th June 1917, in I. A. No. 16 of 1917 in Appeal Suit No. 707 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—The lower Court erred in refusing to allow the petitioner to argue his appeal. He filed an affidavit complaining that his Vakil withdrew the appeal without his permission. The District Judge should have enquired into those allegations. He was wrong in construing the power to compromise given in the Vakalath as embracing the power to withdraw the appeal. The latter power must have been given specifically. Even in case of a power to compromise, the Vakil should not act in excess of his powers.

The District Judge has wrongly read the order of Mr. Moore. Mr. Moore did not give permission to the Vakil to withdraw. The case was simply adjourned.

Mr. K. Shanmugam Pillay, for the Respondents.—The petitioner's Vakil had full power, under his Vakalath, to adjust the subject-matter of the appeal. Such a power necessarily carried with it the power to withdraw the appeal if the Vakil considered that course expedient. In fact Mr. Moore granted time to enable the petitioner's Vakil to withdraw.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition to revise the order of the District Judge of Ramnad refusing to allow the petitioner to conduct his appeal. His allegation was that his Vakil had improperly withdrawn the appeal. The reasons given by the District Judge do not commend themselves to me. Nonetheless I would have had no jurisdiction to go into the matter but for the fact that the District Judge ends his order by saying that "the petition does not lie," thereby declining jurisdiction to hear the petition. The allegations contained in the affidavit of the petitioner certainly require investigation. Without asking the Vakil concerned for an explanation and without taking further evidence in the case, the District Judge disposed of the application on two grounds both of which are unsustainable. The 1st ground is that the Vakalath authorised the Vakil to compromise and, therefore, the Vakil was competent to withdraw the appeal. He is clearly wrong here. The power to compromise does not involve a power to withdraw an appeal unconditionally. That power must be given specifically and cannot be implied from the general words authorising the Vakil to compromise. In Thenal Ammal v. Solkammal (1) this Court held that the powers to compromise must be very carefully scrutinised. Reference may also be made to Basangowda v. Churchigirigowda (2).

The other reason given by the District Judge is equally wrong. He refers to an order made by the District Judge, Mr. Moore, as if that learned Judge had authorised the withdrawal on the day the case was to be heard. The order of Mr. Moore is: "Adjourned to 22nd March 1917 at the request of the Vakils on both sides. It is stated that this appeal will be withdrawn as the matters in dispute have been compromised." This does not show that without a compromise the Vakils promised to withdraw the appeal. It is clear that the present District Judge has misunderstood the terms of the vakalath as well as the terms of the order of Mr. Moore and by misunderstanding these two documents he has declined to go into the case by saying that the petition does not lie. Therefore, I am entitled under section 115 to set aside that order. I reverse his order and direct him to enquire into the allegations contained in the affidavit. The District Judge will see that it is in the interests of the legal practitioner concerned that this matter should be set at rest as early as possible before the parties and the Pleaders forget what happened on those dates.

With these remarks I send back the case to the District Judge, with directions to re-take the case on his file and dispose of it according to law. Costs will abide.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 84, applicability of—Landlord and tenant—Tenant holding under kabuliyat—Custom—Market, establishment of—Acquisition of land for market—Landlord, right of.

Where a tenant holding under a kabuliyat is bound, according to custom, to give up possession of the land in the event of a market being established thereon, the landlord is not bound to adopt the procedure laid down in section 84 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for acquiring the land for such purpose, that section being inapplicable to a contract contained in a kabuliyat. [p. 269, col. 1.]

Where, according to custom, a tenant is required to give up a specific portion of his land in the event of a market being established thereon, he cannot insist upon the landlord taking only that portion—the proportion to be acquired varying with the requirements of the market. [p. 269, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Mymensingh, dated the 20th of August 1916, affirming that of the Additional Munsif, Jamalpore, dated the 22nd of July 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Kali Kinkar Chakerbutty, for the Appellant.—The appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff landlord for Khas possession of land for establishment of a Hat. Plaintiff's case was that by the terms of the kabuliyat the defendant was bound to give the land for the establishment of a Hat. The stipulation in the kabuliyat, inter alia, was "that the tenant would be bound without any sort of objection to give up land to the landlord if he so required for the establishment of Hats, Bazars or Bandars according to the customary usage." The first Court decreed the suit, overruling the defendant's objection that he was a permanent tenure-holder having a right of occupancy and that he was not liable to be ejected from the lands in the way the landlord did. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal. On appeal to this Court the case was remanded for a finding as to whether there was any such custom as provided in the kabuliyat. The learned Judge on remand has found against me. My points are: (1) that even if there be such a custom, I can't be ejected till the actual establishment of a Hat by the landlord and that the ejectment should be according to the provisions of section 84 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; (2) that the landlord is not entitled to get more than 1/100th part of the holding according to the finding arrived at by the lower Appellate Court on remand.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter (with him Babus Mukundanath Roy and Paramananda Lahiri), for the Respondents.—The case is concluded by the findings of fact. The custom has been proved and the defendant can no longer rely on that clause. Section 84 is not applicable to this case. As regards the second point he never took that point in his written statement nor raised it in the Courts below. The appeal should be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This case was remanded to the lower Appellate Court in order that that Court might come to a clear finding as to the nature of the custom referred to in the kabuliyat. The learned Subordinate Judge has returned his finding and he says: "Having regard to the evidence adduced in this suit, I am of opinion that the plaintiff has succeeded in proving the existence of the custom referred to in the kabuliyat executed by the defendant, and that the custom is ancient, reasonable, certain and obtains throughout the Pergunnah (both in the districts of Mymensingh and Rampur)." That finding is sufficient to dispose of the case. It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that the landlord ought to have adopted the procedure laid down in section 84 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for acquiring the land for establishing Bandar (market), &c. But the present suit was based upon the terms of the kabuliyat under which the defendant was, according to custom, bound to give up possession of land in the event of establishment of a Hat, Bazar, Bandar, etc., within the land. Section 84 is an enabling section and has nothing to do with the contract contained in the kabuliyat.

The next contention is that according to the finding the custom is for the tenants to give up 1/50th or 1/100th part of the holding in the event of a market, &c., being established and that there is no reason why the landlord should get more than 1/100th part. But the plaintiff stated in the plaint that the land in dispute was required for the purpose of a market; and there was no denial that this land was necessary for the purpose of a market. That being so, we do not think that the defendant can insist upon the landlord taking only 1/100th part of the land; the proportion of the land which has to be given up apparently varies with the requirements of the market. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs (one set).

Appeal dismissed.

LOW AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 50—Service of petition on respondent—Method of service—Personal or substituted service—Procedure.

By section 50 of the Divorce Act, it is the High Court, and not the Civil Procedure Code, that is to regulate the manner in which service of the petition is to be effected. Service should, whenever it is reasonably possible, be effected on the party in person, and that whether he or she is within or without British India. Where such service cannot, for any good reason, be effected, the proper course is, in the absence of general orders, for an application to be made in open Court for a special order as to how it should be effected. The Court would then consider the particular facts existing, and pass orders, being guided by the principles on which the Court in England acts. Personal service and substituted service are expressions which have not the same meaning under Indian and English procedure, and it is not for the parties or their Advocates to decide the method of service, and then to argue that such service is as effectual as service on the party. [p. 270, col. 2.]

LOW v. LOW.

Messrs. Giles and Ormiston, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for dissolution of marriage brought by the husband against his wife on the ground of her adultery with the co respondent. The latter has left British India and the petition was served on Maung Kyaw Zan with whom he had left a power-of-attorney. The question now before me is whether this service is good service and as required by the Divorce Act.

The power given nominates Maung Kyaw Zan, a Pleader of Rangoon, to be his Attorney for certain specified purposes and among others to sue in his name, and in his name to defend or contest suits, to sign and verify written statements, etc., and if need be, to compromise or compound any suit or suits as he may deem fit.

Section 50 of the Divorce Act lays down that "every petition under the Act shall be served on the party to be affected thereby, either within or without British India, in such manner as the High Court by general or special order from time to time directs."

It is urged that section 7 of the Act which requires our Courts to act and give relief on principles and rules as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court in England acts and gives relief, refers to the grant of relief and not to minor matters of procedure, and that section 45 lays down that the proceedings shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure. I am, therefore, asked to consider this question of service with reference to Order V, rule 9, et seq. and to hold that the service is as effectual as service on the party himself. I am not inclined to hold that section 7 relates to the grant of relief only. But, however that may be, both are "subject to the provisions contained in the Act" and subject, therefore, to the provision contained in section 50. That section requires service on the party himself and lays down that the High Court shall by general or special order direct how it is to be effected. This excludes the right to fall back on the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Arabella Olarressa Eliza Mitter v. John Charles Mitter (1). In this case service had been effected by posting the summons and a copy of the petition on the outer door of the loading house in which the respondent was ordinarily supposed to be residing. No order for substituted service had been obtained. On this ground and on the ground of delay the petition was dismissed.

It is pointed out further that by section 50 of the Act, it is the High Court, and not the Civil Procedure Code, that is to regulate the manner in which service is to be effected, and in this I concur. Service should, whenever it is reasonably possible, be effected on the party in person, and that whether he or she is within or without British India. Where such service cannot, for any good reason, be effected, the proper course is, in the absence of general orders, for an application to be made in open Court for a special order as to how it should be effected. The Court would then consider the particular facts existing, and pass orders, being guided by the principles on which the Court in England acts. Personal service and substituted service are expressions which have not the same meaning under Indian and English procedure, and it is not for the parties or their Advocates to decide the method of service, and then to argue that such service is as effectual as service on the party.

In the present case it appears that there has been correspondence with the co-respondent about the matter, and that he was well aware that a petition would be filed without delay. Other suits were also likely; and in consequence he executed a general power-of-attorney in favour of Maung Kyaw Zan, and left the jurisdiction deliberately, and with some haste. The only address he left was care of a bank; but whether the bank still has instructions to forward correspondence, it is impossible to say. Further, the Attorney deposes that from information received, he has reason to believe that the co respondent has now gone to Canade. The Court might direct the petition to be served through a Solicitor with proof of such service, or it might direct service through the post with proof that the letter has been received, or by service on the Attorney when there is an Attorney, or in some other way substituted for any of the above.

There are two principles which must always be considered by the Court. In the first place, it must be assured that every reasonable step has been taken to ensure that the petition has been brought to the knowledge of the party to be affected. Secondly, it must be careful not to permit the petitioner to be deprived or delayed in obtaining relief or put to unjustifiable expense by the action of an adverse party.

It appears to me that the proper orders to have been passed in the present case would have been to direct service to be effected on the Attorney of the co-respondent, as has in fact been done. To require that the service be effected afresh would serve no useful purpose. It would merely cause delay, without advancing the ends of justice. I do not think I am bound to require it. The hearing of the petition may, therefore, proceed.

Order accordingly.

Appeal, presentation of, without vakalatnama—Presentation, whether valid—Limitation Act (IX of 1908*), s.* 5—Appeal, delay in filing—Sufficient cause—Delay due to carelessness, whether sufficient cause.

The presentation of a memorandum of appeal by a Vakil without any authority in the shape of a vakalatnama is not a valid presentation.

Delay due to carelessness is not sufficient cause to enable a Court to grant the indulgence allowed by section 5 of the Limitation Act.

Mr. Mohammad Ishfak, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to admit an appeal which was filed without a vakalatnama. The vakalatnama was not produced until after the time within which the appeal should have been filed and when produced, was found to bear a date subsequent to the date of the expiry of limitation. In these circumstances we are asked to say either that the appeal is filed within time or that sufficient cause has been shown under section 5 of the Limitation Act for extending the time. We are of opinion that a petition of appeal presented without any authority in the shape of a vakalatnama has not been legally presented at all. It may not be necessary to file a vakalatnama with the petition of appeal, but it is certainly necessary that there should be at the time of the presentation of the appeal a vakalatnama in existence bearing the signature of the appellant or his Attorney.

With regard to the petition for extension of time under section 5, it is clear that the failure to obtain the vakalatnama within the period of limitation was due to gross carelessness on the part of the Vakils in the Court below. We are not prepared to grant the indulgence asked for. The memorandum of appeal is rejected.

GURUSHIDDSWAMI v. PARAWA DUNDAYA NARENDRA.

A minor, who at the time of entering into a transaction fraudulently represents himself to be a major, is not estopped from subsequently setting up the defence of minority where the person to whom the representation is made is not deceived thereby.

Where such a transaction is set aside at the instance of the minor, the Court will not exercise its discretion under section 4 of the Specific Relief Act, unless there are very strong circumstances in the case entitling the defendant to a return of the consideration.

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Dharwar, in Suit No. 325 of 1913.

Messrs. G S. Rao and P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Jayakar and K. H. Kelkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to obtain a declaration that the sale deed passed by her on the 9th March 1903 to her deceased husband's brother was not valid, and to recover possession of the property described in the plaint with mesne profits for the year 1911-12 with future mesne profits and costs. The greater part of the evidence turned upon the question whether the plaintiff was a minor when she signed the sale deed. It cannot be disputed that she signed the sale-deed and admitted execution before the Sub Registrar, and that it appears from the document that Rs. 2,400 was paid for the land. We have considered very carefully the evidence which was dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge, and also the arguments adduced by Mr. Rao to show that the finding of the learned Judge was wrong, but there are many circumstances in the case which all point to the fact that the plaintiff was a minor in 1903.

The question arises whether she is now estopped because according to the defendant's case she represented herself as being a major, when she must have known that she was a minor. It has been held by a Bench of this Court that a person can be estopped in such circumstances, but it was admitted in that case that the circumstances in which an estoppel would be allowed would be extremely rare. But in this case there is evidence that the defendant was not deceived by what the plaintiff had told him. He had made inquiries about plaintiff's age from other sources and from the plaintiff's father. Beyond that the plaintiff was the widow of his deceased brother and it is not an unfair presumption to make against the defendant that he must have known perfectly well what the plaintiff's age was.

Lastly, the question arises whether under section 41 of the Specific Relief Act we should direct the plaintiff to restore the consideration money. The Court no doubt has a discretion to do so, but there must be very strong circumstances in the case to enable the Court to find that there is an equity in favour of the defendant. In the case of Thurstan v. Nottingham Permanent Benefit Building Society (1), referred to in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (2) by their Lordships of the Privy Council and in which the judgment of Romer, L. J., is quoted, a mortgage in favour of the society was set aside, and the question was whether the society was not entitled to re-payment of the advances; Romer, L. J., said: "The short answer is, that a Court of Equity cannot say that it is equitable to compel a person to pay any moneys in respect of a transaction which, as against that person, the Legislature has declared to be void." Cases may arise in which the Court might come to the conclusion that there was an equity in favour of the person to be paid the money. But in this case we do not think that there is any such equity. The result must be that the appeal is dismissed and the decree of the lower Court confirmed with costs.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Manbhum-Sambhalpur, dated the 4th June 1919.

Messrs. Wasi Ahmad and Sami, for the Appellants.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—The appellants before us were charged, with certain other persons, with having committed an offence under section 489D of the Indian Penal Code. The three other persons accused jointly with the appellants have been acquitted, and the present appeal is conversant only with the cases of Sarwar Khan and Mohammad Khan.

Both the accused were charged by the Crown with the principal offence specified in section 489D of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge of Purulia, who tried this case, found the accused Sarwar Khan guilty of an offence under section 489D, Indian Penal Code, and convicted the other accused Mohammad Khan of being an abettor under sections 107 and 109 read with section 489D of the Indian Penal Code.

The charge shortly stated is that the accused had in their possession certain articles and materials which were necessary, and were used by them, for the purpose of manufacturing and forging currency notes.

Before considering the evidence as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, it is necessary to state shortly a few essential facts to enable us to follow and scrutinize the evidence relied upon by the prosecution to establish the guilt of the accused.

The appellants are Afghans; and have, as would appear from the evidence, a wide connection throughout various parts of British India.

On or about the 23rd of January 1918 two boxes were despatched from Lahore consigned to a Railway Station called Gomoh within this province to a consignee bearing the name of Lal Khan. The boxes consigned at Lahore were despatched by Kabulis at Lahore; and the boxes were labelled with a label indicating that their contents only contained photographic materials.

From the evidence of the Railway Officials examined as witnesses from Lahore, it would also appear that the original consignors booking the boxes desired that the aforesaid boxes should be booked to a station other than Gomoh, namely a station called Mahuda, but being uncertain of the existence of a station known as Mahuda, the Railway Official at Lahore suggested that there was no such station; and thereupon the Kabulis, consignors, quickly changed the station of destination from Mahuda to the name of Gomoh. The labels on the boxes indicate that such a change was made, which is confirmatory of the evidence given by the Railway Officials from Lahore.

The goods were despatched and reached Gomoh on or about the 29th January 1918, having been despatched on the 23rd January. The goods remained at Gomoh Station awaiting delivery from the 29th January to the 6th February, and on the 6th February delivery of the boxes consigned from Lahore was taken at Gomoh Station, and the same were re-booked from Gomoh Station by the alleged con-signees thereof to a station called Khanoodih which is also situated within this Province.

Khanoodih is a station not far from the colliery known as Bera Bara Colliery, which is located near where the accused, with other Kabulis, at that time resided.

The goods were received at Gomoh by four Kabulis and were re-booked as passenger luggage from Gomoh to Khanoodih Station.

The aforesaid facts have not been controverted or challenged as to their accuracy.

Where the goods remained from the 6th February up to early in the month of June 1918 no one precisely knows.

On the 19th July in consequence of information which the Police Officer received in connection with a certain case of burglary, he searched the house of a man called Jethu Musahar and in his house or hut he discovered the two boxes which had been consigned from Lahore, and which had been received at Gomoh, and re booked from Gomoh to Khanoodih.

Now there is no dispute with regard to this fact, that the two boxes discovered in the hut of Jethu were the same two boxes which were actually and in fact consigned from Lahore Station.

The main questions arising for our consideration are, who placed the boxes in Jethu's hut; or on whose behalf had Jethu the custody of these boxes, and to whom did these boxes belong?

The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the accused has not controverted the incidental acts and circumstances to which I have already referred. The main defence put forward on behalf of the accused is that these boxes which were consigned from Lahore never formed any part of the property of either of the accused persons before us, and that, however they may have got into Jethu's hut, they were not the property of Sarwar Khan or Mohammad Khan, and that they are, therefore, in no way responsible either for the boxes or for the contents thereof.

Two other facts ought to be stated, about which there is no controversy.

The accused carry on the business of money lending. The accused Sarwar Khan is actually in partnership in this business with the father of Mohammad Khan; and books have been produced and given in evidence showing a printed form of hand-note in which or on the face of which the names of Sarwar Khan and Mohammad Khan's father appear as carrying on a joint money lending business.

It is also not disputed that some three years prior to July 1918 the accused Sarwar Khan had advanced to Jethu a sum of Rs. 46 on loan, secured by a hand-note to which Jethu affixed his thumb impression, and since which time Jethu has been paying interest thereon by monthly instalments at the rate of Rs. 5-12. Jethu, it is admitted, knows Sarwar Khan intimately and could not possibly be mistaken as to his identity. This admission is of importance in considering the value to be attached to the evidence of Jethu himself.

Having stated these uncontradicted facts, I will proceed to consider the evidence adduced by the prosecution to establish the guilt of the accused.

The positive and direct evidence adduced by the Crown to prove that the boxes referred to were the property of Sarwar Khan and his fellow Kabulis is the evidence of Jethu and Jethu's brother in-law Gena. Jethu's evidence, summarised shortly, is that on the 19th July 1918 the Police Officer entered his house with a view of making a search for the purpose of tracing certain articles which had been stolen. On entering his hut the Police Officer got sight of the two boxes which had been despatched from Lahore and had upon their exterior the Lahore label, the label of Gomoh and also the label of Khanoodih.

The Inspector opened one box which was not locked and having inspected its contents, ascertained from Jethu that the boxes had been entrusted to him to keep by a certain Kabuli. The contents of the box which the Sub-Inspector opened satisfied him that the contents were strange. Jethu on that evening, the 19th of July, did not expressly state to the Sub-Inspector that the owner of the boxes was Sarwar Khan, or that Sarwar Khan had given him the boxes to keep in his custody on his behalf; but Jethu did describe the person who gave him the boxes to keep as being his Mahajan from whom he had borrowed money, and from whom he had got the boxes for safe custody six weeks before; that would be early in the month of June 1918.

The Police Inspector thereupon took possession of the two boxes; and took Jethu into custody, and conveyed him to the Katras Thana, which is some 10 or more miles distant from the village where Jethu lived. Before leaving this village, which adjoins the colliery in which Jethu worked, the Sub-Inspector gave it to be understood that any Kabulis that were seen hovering about in the vicinity of the colliery pending his return should be taken into custody by the colliery manager and by such other persons as would render assistance.

On the following morning, the 20th of July, Sarwar Khan arrived at the colliery and went straight to the hut of Jethu. Jethu being absent, he being then at the Thana, Sarwar Khan was interviewed by Jethu's brother-in-law Gena.

If one can believe the evidence of Gena, Sarwar Khan said to him, "Where are my boxes?" and he replied, "The Police have taken them, and have also taken Jethu with them to the Thana," and thereupon Gena immediately intimated to the colliery manager that Sarwar Khan, a Kabuli, had turned up at the colliery; and forthwith the Kabuli was surrounded by various Chaprassis from the colliery conjointly with others, and was taken into custody. Eventually upon the evening of the 20th July, Sarwar Khan was removed to an outpost station on the road to Katras Thana; and on the following morning, the 21st July 1918, was taken formally into custody by the Sub-Inspector and brought to Katras Thana.

Jethu, who had remained in custody during the evening and night of the 19th, was discharged from custody on the morning of the 20th. But Jethu did not see or interview Sarwar Khan, after Sarwar Khan was arrested, until late on the evening of the 21st. On the evening of the 21st Jethu was sent for by the Sub-Inspector; Jethu returned to Katras Thana, and when he got there it was late in the evening, and he was called upon immediately to identify out of 40 Kabulis that were then present at the Thana the man from whom he got, as he alleged, the two boxes that were found in his house; and with little diffidence Jethu identified Sarwar Khan as being the man from whom he received the boxes and that he also was the person who had been his Mahajan or money-lender.

Now this is the first species of evidence which we have to consider in this case, because it is the main positive and direct evidence of the accused's guilt.

Gena accompanied the Police constable who took Sarwar Khan to the Thana, and some stress is laid upon an expression contained in the cross-examination of Gena which will require to be considered later.

The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the accused vehemently challenges the testimony of both these witneses, Jethu and his brother-in-law Gena; that is to say, that he asserts that their evidence is fabricated and false, and that they have been instigated into preferring a charge against the accused Sarwar Khan for the purpose of exonerating themselves from criminal responsibility for having in their possession articles such as were found in the boxes in question. In addition it is also alleged that Jethu was a suspect; that he was believed to have taken part in some burglary and that, therefore, he is a man without a clean record whose evidence ought to be viewed with grave suspicion and doubt.

Certainly these admonitions addressed to us require consideration when weighing the evidence of Jethu and Gena; and we have, during the course of the arguments which have been presented to us on behalf of the accused, very carefully considered the matters which have been so forcibly and ably urged by learned Counsel for the defence.

However, with regard to the evidence of Jethu it appears to us that there is no foundation upon which we could fairly say that his evidence has been impeached.

The fact that Jethu did not mention the name of Sarwar Khan on the evening of the 19th July is by no means the true criterion for testing the value of his evidence. It is quite possible that Jethu being illiterate may have never known Sarwar Khan as Sarwar Khan; but that he knew him as the Mahajan from whom he got monetary accommodation cannot be questioned. And beyond doubt to the Sub-Inspector on the evening of the 19th July he referred to his Mahajan as being the person who had entrusted to him the custody of the boxes which were found in his house. I am not aware, so far as the evidence on the record of this case is concerned, that Jethu has in any way been implicated in a charge of burglary. He may or may not have been; of that we know nothing. But if anything could be urged against his character which would affect his credibility and the weight to be attached to his evidence, I have little doubt that in cross examination his moral character would have been assailed and he would have been exposed under the strain of cross-examination to every legitimate test for the purpose of endeavouring to impeach his testimony and his credit.

No such course appears to have been pursued; and while giving weight to every argument that has been addressed to us on behalf of the appellants, we are of opinion that, so far as Jethu's testimony is concerned, he is a true and trustworthy witness.

Gena also seems to us a witness of truth and credibility. It is suggested that at the out-post station a constable called Mahadeo said to him, say "Sarwar Khan did it", and Gena replied "That is the truth." The construction which Mr. Wasi Ahmad put upon these words, was that Gena knew nothing himself in fact as to who was the actual owner of the boxes placed in his brother-in-law's house, but that the name of Sarwar Khan had been suggested to him by the Police constable, and that Gena had adopted it and asserted it to be the truth. It is impossible to divorce the phrase that has been referred to from the general trend of evidence given in the deposition of Gena itself. Reading that deposition and considering it as a whole, we are satisfied that to assign the interpretation which has been suggested to the expression above referred to would be unreasonable, having regard to the general context of the evidence of the witness Gena as recorded.

We think that the aforesaid expression meant no more than this that Gena had suggested that Sarwar Khan was the man who was the true owner of these boxes, and that the Police constable said "Well, why don't you say so". That seems to us a much more intelligent and a much more reasonable construction of the expression used, taking into consideration the general tenor of the evidence given by the witness, than the forced interpretation put upon a mere phrase, as suggested by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the prisoner, divorced from the surrounding context. Therefore, we accept as true and trustworthy the evidence of both these witnesses, Jethu and Gena, so far as their evidence is material in this case; and it established that the two boxes discovered in the hut of Jethu were the property of the accused Sarwar Khan. This disposes of what I may call the direct and positive evidence of the guilt of the accused.

Sarwar Khan and some 18 of his Kabuli associates lived at a distance from the colliery of about 7 miles; and as I understand, these Kabulis resided not far from the station of Khanoodih. Shortly after the discovery of the boxes in Jethu's house all the Kabulis residing in this tiled hut, some 7 miles distant from the colliery, disappeared taking with them most of their property, but leaving some things behind. Their sudden departure at this juncture is noticeable, and seems unaccountable if they had no connection whatsoever with either of the boxes discovered in Jethu's hut.

The evidence confirmatory of the positive evidence of Jethu and Gena remains to be considered.

This evidence may be classified into two distinct branches. First, the evidence given by the Railway Officials as to who in fact received delivery of the boxes from the Railway Company: and secondly, the evidence of the Finger Print Expert.

A gentleman called Bose, who is the head booking clerk at Gomoh, was called to prove that on the 6th February 1918 four Kabulis came to Gomoh Station and asked for delivery to them of two boxes consigned to a consignee bearing the name of Lal Khan. Bose says that Sarwar Khan took delivery of the boxes; and that then at his request he affixed to the Railway Receipt Register his (Sarwar Khan's) thumb impression in acknowledgment of the receipt of the goods which he had received. Bose also says that there were other Kabulis with Sarwar Khan, whom he did not at the time know by name, but whom he afterwards ascertained to be Sarwar Khan and whom he subsequently identified. Concerning the identification of Sarwar Khan by this witness I will have to deal in more detail later; but for the present, for the purpose of considering the effect of the evidence which he gave, it may be taken that Bose was referring to a person whom he identified as Sarwar Khan, the accused before us, as the person who took delivery and acknowledged the receipt of the two boxes consigned to Lal Khan.

Bose also says that Sarwar Khan alone came into the booking office, signed the Railway Receipt book by affixing his thumb impression to it and re-booked the same goods as passenger luggage to Khanoodib under four 3rd class tickets.

This incident took place, as I have said, on the 6th February 1918: and some five or six months afterwards Mr. Bose was called upon, namely, on the 10th of August 1918, to identify the person to whom he gave delivery of the boxes which were consigned to Lal Khan from Lahore.

At the test identification which took place on the 10th of August at Katras Thana Sarwar Khan was paraded amongst some 35 or 36 other Kabulis, and Bose identified Sarwar Khan as being the man to whom he had given delivery of the two boxes.

Mr. Banerjee, P. W No. 7, was present at the identification test that took place on the 10th August; and he deposes that Mr. Bose identified without hesitation and with certainty Sarwar Khan as the man who took delivery of the boxes at Gomoh Station.

In the Sessions Court and in the Committing Court Mr. Bose was by no means emphatic as to the identification of the person to whom he gave delivery of the goods as he apparently was on the 10th August.

When examined before the learned Sessions Judge, he admitted that he was present at the test identification at Katras in August 1918. He says: "That he told the Sub-Inspector that the man to whom he gave delivery was a tall stout man; but that he could not swear that it was any of the men present; but he had pointed out as resembling the man, Mohammad Khan." Whatever doubt or ambiguity might be created by this evidence, was cleared up by the answer given in cross-examination to a question put by the Counsel for the accused, and whereto Mr Bose replied, "I said the man was like Mohammad Khan but not Mohammad Khan."

In the Committing Court the evidence of this witness was certainly peculiar, to say the least of it, because before the Committing Magistrate he seemed to suggest that the person whom he identified at the test identification as being the person to whom he gave delivery of the boxes in question on the 6th February was Mohammad Khan. Now Mohammad Khan was not paraded for identification at all upon that date, viz., 10th of August, and, therefore, it would have been quite impossible for this witness then to have identified Mohammad Khan as being the person to whom he gave delivery of the boxes in question.

Now it has been fairly contended that owing to the evidence of Mr. Bose being so self-contradictory and uncertain that it is unreliable; and that no other evidence aliunde is admissible to affirmatively prove the actual identification which Mr. Bose made on the 10th of August as to the identity of the person to whom he gave delivery of the boxes.

We would yield to that argument if we thought that Mr Bose's evidence was self-contradictory and amounted to a positive denial of the identification he had previously made. But if in our opinion Mr. Bose's evidence is only inconsistent and hazy owing to his defective capacity for recollection, then we think that other positive evidence may be referred to, and would be admissible, for the purpose of enabling him to crystallise the waivering uncertainties in his mind by what antecedently had taken place in fact.

Mr. Bose does not suggest that he did not identify a person on the 10th August as the person who in fact took delivery on the 6th February, but his memory, owing to lapse of time between the 10th August and the time when the accused were on trial, prevents him from being able to say that the actual person then before him was the same person whom he had antecedently identified. Therefore, to us it appears reasonable and proper in aid of Mr. Bose's defective and uncertain recollection to admit the evidence of Mr. Banerjee P. W No. 4 and also the evidence of the Sub Inspector of Police coupled with Exhibit 22, namely the Identification Test Register which was signed by Mr. Banerjee of Mr. Bose's identification on the 10th of August of Sarwar Khan as the man to whom he gave delivery of the boxes in question and who affixed his thumb impression to the Railway Receipt Register.

The next evidence that requires to be considered in support of the case against Sarwar Khan is the evidence of the Finger Print Expert.

Mr. Wasi Ahmed has contended very strenuously that this witness' evidence is completely without merits or deserving of any credit. Mr. Wasi Ahmed contends that this witness has not applied the ordinary stereotyped rules for testing the accuracy of thumb impressions for the purpose of seeing whether they are genuine or not, and he has referred to the expression of opinion of Sir Edward Henry as stated in his book on Thumb Impressions in support of his argument. There would be great merit and force indeed in the argument addressed to us, if the witness had been cross-examined for the purpose of showing that his examination of the thumb impressions in question of the accused has been imperfect or improper. When a witness, more especially an expert witness, has been examined, and has given his evidence and has not been cross-examined in any way whatsoever for the purpose of impeaching the examination which he had made, and the test to which he had put the impression submitted for his consideration, it seems to us that it would not be a fair and proper test whereby to judge the value and weight to be attached to such witness' evidence by applying to it considerations to which the witness' attention was never directed. This witness P. W. No. 24 gives very cogent reasons in his evidence for being of opinion that the thumb impression, which was taken in Court of Sarwar Khan, corresponds in indentity with the thumb impression attached to the Railway Receipt Register to which Sarwar Khan had affixed his thumb impression on the 6th February 1918. The Finger Print Expert details catagorically three or four reasons for showing that the two thumb impressions are identical and are the thumb impression, of one and the same person, and he adds: "The combination of these peculiarities cannot occur in two different persons and, therefore, I am satisfied that they are the same as in Exhibit 35" (Exhibit 35 being the thumb impression attached to the Railway Receipt Register). No doubt the Finger Print Expert does say that the outer and inner termini of some of the ridges in the thumb impressions taken are not decipherable. But I do not think he uses or intends to use the expression "undecipherable" as applicable to all ridges, because if he did his evidence would be meaningless in the description which he gives of the 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th and 9th ridges. If all ridges were undecipherable, how could he refer to the characteristics attaching to the ridges to which I have referred; and he does describe the peculiarities attaching to each ridge to which reference has been made. This witness should have been asked whether the type system was the best system or not whereby to test the accuracy of thumb impressions. No doubt it was a question that might have been put and might have been capable of answer, and that too a cogent answer. But are we now to test the value of the evidence of the Finger Print Expert by considerations and circumstances which have never been put to him in cross-examination and which, if really material, ought to have been put?

We see no reason, therefore, at all for holding that the evidence of Uma Charan Bose, the Finger Print Expert, P. W. No. 24, is in any sense unreliable or underserving of credit. In our opinion it confirms the evidence of Mr. Bose, the head booking clerk, in this material respect, that Mr. Bose identified Sarwar Khan as being the person to whom he gave delivery of the boxes and from whom he got the receipt of acquittance for delivery on behalf of the Company.

This then completes the case so far as Sarwar Khan is concerned to this extent that he, Sarwar Khan, received the boxes on the 6th February 1918 and that he, Sarwar Khan, entrusted these boxes to Jethu for safe custody early in the month of June 1918.

What did these boxes contain?

It is suggested by the defence that these boxes contained some material for photography only, and that in no sense were the materials in the boxes ever used for any illicit purpose in connection with the forging of currency notes. Reliance is placed upon the fact that some of the articles in these boxes would be articles such as might be used in the ordinary system of legitimate process work, such for instance as enlarging of photographs, and, therefore, that there was nothing in particular to suggest that the contents of these boxes contained any material that would be essential or necessary for the forging of currency notes.

Mr. Vandyke gives very clear and distinct evidence upon this point and also one other witness.

Mr. Vandyke says: "There are certain things, the printing press, the whirler, the dragon's blood, the Lepages glue, the zinc plates which preclude any other theory than that the kit is for process work." He also added that the materials in the boxes would be just what he would have expected to have been collected and put together for forgery of notes by a person who did not know much about the scientific method of process work but had made up his stock as a result of reading various books on the subject.

Mr. Satish Chandra Chaudhury, P. W. No. 3, catagorically specifies the several articles in these boxes which would not be used for photographic purposes at, all but which would be used only for the purpose of process work in connection with the forging of currency notes. It is needless to go through the other evidence on this aspect of the case in detail. It has been referred to repeatedly and the fact remains that although some of the contents of these boxes might legitimately be used for photographic purposes, there are other materials in these boxes which strongly indicate and suggest that they were used for a purpose other than photographic work in the art of process making. If the contents of these boxes were harmless and designed merely for enlargement of photographs or for a simple and innocent system of process making, evidence might have been adduced to establish this fact by the defence.

The Crown, however, conceived that the onus was upon them and, I think rightly, to negative the possibility of this contention by establishing by proof that the contents of these boxes were designed and intended to be employed for the purpose of illegitimate process work, and by way of proof to rebut the assertion of the defence the Crown gave evidence as to the antecedent character of Sarwar Khan.

Sarwar Khan, some 18 months before he received these boxes from Lahore, appears to have been associated with a gang of Kabulis in Howrah who carried on this nefarious business of forging currency notes. He was one of those who were seen in the house which was exclusively occupied by these Kabulis on the roof, either watching against possibility of detection or for the purpose of carrying out some incidental process in the course of their scheme of forging notes. Evidence has been given which in our opinion establishes satisfactorily that Sarwar Khan was an associate with a gang of Kabulis in Howrah who carried on the nefarious system of manufacturing forged currency notes.

The evidence of witnesses Nos. 27, 28 and 29 conclusively establishes the justification of this conclusion, and it is well to remember that the evidence of these witnesses Nos. 27, 28 and 29 has not been impeached in cross-examination. Therefore, we may accept, as an actual and conclusively established fact, that the accused Sarwar Khan has had a long standing connection with a gang of Kabulis who resort to this nefarious and villainous system of forging currency notes.

This concludes in its entirety the case so far as Sarwar Khan is concerned; because we hold and find without any doubt whatsoever that he was the receiver of the boxes consigned from Lahore, that he entrusted the boxes so received by him as the owner thereof to Jethu for safe custody, that the contents of the boxes are only consistent with the theory that they formed the essential parts of a complete apparatus for illegitimately forging currency notes, and that the association of Sarwar Khan in the past clearly leads to the positive conclusion that these boxes and their contents were not intended for an innocent or lawful purpose, and that, therefore, so far as Sarwar Khan is concerned, the case for the prosecution has been fully and completely established as against him.

Therefore, we concur with the finding of the learned Judge so far as Sarwar Khan is concerned, and we affirm his conviction and sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment.

With regard to Mohammad Khan different considerations apply.

Mohammad Khan was not convicted of an offence under section 489D. The learned Judge convicted this appellant under sections 107 and 109 read with section 489D of the Indian Penal Code of abetment with conspiracy.

Now the learned Judge in this portion of his judgment appears to us to have erred fundamentally in applying the proper legal considerations which should have been present to his mind.

The main ground on which the learned Judge convicted Mohammad Khan was because he was satisfied that Mohammad Khan was a member of a gang of Kabulis at Cuttack who were suspected of carrying on the business of forging currency notes; and that, therefore, there was some connection (of which no evidence was given) between Mohammad Khan, the Cuttack man, and Sarwar Khan, the Howrah man, which by reunion of these two persons at Kharoodih developed into a full blown conspiracy there to forge currency notes. It is upon this line of reasoning that the learned Judge mainly developes the conclusion that a conspiracy existed and still exists between Mohammad Khan and Sarwar Khan.

For two reasons we think the learned Judge was wrong in the conclusion at which he arrived. One is a question of fact, and the other is a question of law.

With regard to the question of fact we are ourselves unable to concur in the finding of the learned Judge that there was evidence on which he could properly and reasonably hold that there existed in Cuttack a conspiracy to forge currency notes and of which Mohammad Khan was a member. Two or three witnesses were called to prove the existence of this alleged conspiracy, but their evidence is absolutely unworthy and undeserving of credit, coming as it does from persons who are hardened criminals and who themselves have been found guilty on many occasions of many nefarious crimes. Such evidence must be viewed with caution; and certainly before it can be accepted, it must and ought to be materially corroborated. It would be unjust and unfair to accept such witnesses' evidence, uncorroborated as it is as to the existence of an alleged conspiracy at Cuttack.

On the legal aspect of this question we are satisfied that even if such a conspiracy did exist at Cuttack, as the learned Judge has found, no legitimate evidence was adduced by the prosecution to link up and connect the Howrah conspiracy in conjunction with the alleged conspiracy at Cuttack. There is no evidence to sustain the surmise that Sarwar Khan and Mohammad Khan were the respective agents of both these conspiracies to form and fashion a new conspiracy at Katras as an adjunct of or ancillary to either the Howrah or Cuttack associations. When this fundamental error underlying the learned Judge's judgment is removed, there is nothing left of the learned Judge's judgment to support the conviction of Mohammad Khan, because the learned Judge admits that he is unable to accept or act upon the evidence of the witness Pandey, who was called on behalf of the prosecution and was witness P. W. No. 6.

P. W. No. 6 was called to prove association and intercourse between Mohammad Khan and Sarwar Khan: that they had been intimately associated with each other, and that they had in fact been the joint recipients of the two boxes consigned from Lahore. Pandey at an identification test on the 11th of August did point out Mohammad Khan as being one of those who took delivery of the boxes and who paid freight, plus the demurrage due thereon; and he also identified two other Kabulis who were alleged to have been present at the time on the railway platform This witness both in the Committing Court and in the Sessions Court was very uncertain and absolutely unreliable in his evidence and appeared in short to go back on the main outline of the identification he had made at the identification test on the 11th August. The learned Judge felt himself quite unable to accept the evidence of Pandey, and accordingly he rejected it; and by so doing the learned Judge was forced to admit that Mohammad Khan could not be convicted of the principal offence under section 489D.

We take the same view as the learned Judge with regard to the evidence of the witness Pandey. It is much more unsatisfactory in its terms than the evidence of Mr. Bose, and it would appear that in his case, it would be unsafe to allow his evidence to be supported by extraneous evidence for the purpose of clarifying his evidence as to identification, when his evidence given before the Sessions Court was so contradictory, equivocal and uncertain. P. W. No. 6 says: "I identified Mohammad Khan as the man to the best of my ability in the Katras Police Station as the man who took delivery of the boxes". "I identified Sarwar Khan and another man in the lower Court as being of the party. The boxes were re-booked to Khanoodih by them." Then in cross-examination he says "I can't say for certain now if these two Kabulis, Sarwar and Mohammad, took delivery of the boxes. I said this before the Police too. I also said at the test identification that two men like Sarwar and Mohammad removed the boxes."

This was clearly an attempt to go back on what this witness had antecedently done and said; and, therefore, we think it unsafe to accept his evidence or to accept the evidence tendered in support of it, and accordingly we reject the evidence of Pandey.

Now this being so, and finding that there was no proved conspiracy existing in Cuttack of which Mohammad Khan was shown to be a member, what else is there that goes against the accused Mohammad Khan?

The learned Government Advocate frankly and fairly admits that if we reject the evidence of Pandey, then practically there was nothing left to connect Mohammad Khan with the commission of any crime as a conspirator, beyond the bare admission of Mohammed Khan himself made immediatley after the arrest of Sarwar Khan, in which he stated that he had been living with Sarwar Khan and that he had at the request of the Police produced certain books of account belonging to Sarwar Khan.

We think that that admission, at the time that it was made, was an admission made under such circumstances that it would not be fair to act upon it for the purpose of establishing a connection by inference between Sarwar Khan and Mohammad Khan as conspirators. It was made when a friend was in trouble and was under arrest and when possibly Mohammad Khan intended to act as a surety on his friend's behalf. In addition the admission itself is open to an innocent interpretation; and between two possible alternatives we ought to draw the inference most strongly in favour of innocence rather that guilt.

There is in our opinion, so far as Mohammad Khan is concerned, no evidence on which any Court would be warranted in holding that he aided or abetted Sarwar Khan in committing the principal offence under section 489D, Indian Penal Code, as charged.

Accordingly with reference to Mohammad Khan we are satisfied that his conviction was erroneous and we hereby set the same aside, and we direct him to be discharged from custody forthwith.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

I only desire to add a few words with reference to the case of Bomanjee Oowasjee, In the matter of (1), which has been cited before us by the learned Counsel for the appellant. In my opinion the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in that case do not in any way affect the admissibility in this case of the statements made by the witnesses Rama Nand Pandey and Suresh Chandra Bose before the Police at the test identification. If the effect of those statements had been to contradict the evidence given by these witnesses at the Sessions trial, then those statements would clearly not have been admissible in evidence against the accused. But in my opinion that was not the effect of those statements. The depositions given by the two witnesses before the Sessions Court were to the effect that although they were not certain by reason of lapse of time that the appellants were the persons whom they saw at the Railway Station taking delivery of the boxes, yet it was not impossible that they might be those persons, and that in fact the person identified by the witness Bose resembled the accused Mohammad Khan and the person identified by the witness Ramanand Pandey also resembled that person.

In these circumstances the previous statements made before the Police were rightly admitted in evidence under section 157 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Conviction set aside.

AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 307—Jury, unanimous verdict of—High Court, interference by—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 24—Confession made under Police pressure, whether voluntary—Self-exculpatory statement of one accused, whether evidence against co-accused.

The High Court, upon a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, will not interfere with the unanimous verdict of a Jury, and if that verdict is not unreasonable, and can upon the evidence be supported, the High Court will accept the verdict even though it may not wholly agree therewith. [p. 283, col. 2.]

A confession recorded in circumstances which show that the accused was in charge of a Police constable and that under the continued questioning to which he was subjected by the Investigating Officer, he finally broke down, cannot be regarded as a voluntary confession, and is one within the words of section 24 of the Evidence Act. [p. 283, col. 2.]

Where in spite of the directions of the High Court that confessions should be recorded in open Court, a Magistrate records a confession at 11 o'clock at night, this circumstance shows that the confession was not voluntary and that the Magistrate failed to exercise a proper discretion in the matter. [p. 283, col. 2.].

Where an accused person is produced before a Magistrate at 12-30 A. M. for the purpose of recording his confession, and refuses to make one, but eventually does so on the Magistrate's call for the Police, the confession cannot be said to be voluntary. [p. 284, col. 2.]

A self-exculpatory statement by one accused cannot be taken into account against a co-accused. [p. 285, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code.

The facts of the case are shortly these: On the 11th October 1918 there was a fire in the out-offices of the house of the Post Master of the Sub-Post Office at Rajbari. The fire was very soon extinguished. The Post Master's case is that at the time when the fire broke out, he was in his office and there were on his table 12 registered articles, that when he left the office, he asked the accused Promotho, who was a probationer in his office, to take care of these articles and that he went to the place where the fire had occurred and came back within a very few minutes and found that the registered articles were all missing. He asked Promotho, who denied any knowledge of them. He then sent Promotho to lodge information at the Thana, though he says that he had his suspicions that Promotho had taken possession of those articles. As against the accused Hemanta it is said that he was in the Post Office verandah shortly before the fire. This was nothing unusual, as Hemanta and Promotho live together and were friends.

On receipt of the information from Promotho, the Sub-Inspector of Police took up the enquiry. Hemanta made to him certain statements upon which he went to the shop of one Shyama Charan and through an opening in the mat-wall, Hemanta brought out five of the missing letters which were unopened and three bundles of currency notes with certain letters in them, but without the envelopes. The other four registered articles were not found and have not been traced since.

At about 11-30 P. M., Hemanta was taken to a Sub-Deputy Magistrate, where he is said to have made a confession which was duly recorded by that officer. After that, Promotho was also taken there at about 12-30 A. M., and he also made a confession. It appears that Promotho, when he was asked whether he would make a confession, answered in the negative, whereupon the Sub-Deputy Magistrate asked his orderly to call the constable and hearing this Promotho at once changed his mind and agreed to make a confession, and the confession was recorded. Hemanta in his confession admitted that he had gone to the Post Office in the evening, that when he was returning the fire broke out and hearing the cry he went back towards the Post Office, that he was called by Promotho who handed over to him certain registered articles with the direction that he should open them and take care of the contents, that he put them inside Shyama Charan's shop through an opening, that shortly after he was arrested and he brought out the articles from Shyama Charan's shop. Promotho in his confession stated that when the fire broke out he was present in the Post Office sorting some letters, that he and others all went out, that the Post Master asked him to guard the office room and that he made over a bundle of insured and registered letters to Hemanta. He said that when the Post Master came back and asked him about these articles, he at first denied all knowledge of them but afterwards gave out all the facts to the Police Sub-Inspector and the Post Master.

The principal evidence against the accused consists of the depositions of the Post Master Amritalal Mukerji, the investigating Police Officer Bazlur Rashid, head post man Guru Charn, Bonomali Pal the mail peon and the second clerk Hiralal. There is also a considerable body of other evidence about the discovery of the articles from Shyama Charan's shop.

The charges framed against the accused were these: Promotho was charged under section 52 of the Post Office Act for having dishonestly misappropriated six insured and registered letters containing currency notes and stamps and six uninsured registered letters while in the course of transit. He was also charged with theft under section 380, Indian Penal Code. Hemanta was charged under section 52 of the Post Office Act read with section 70, which refers to abetment of Postal offences, and was also charged under section 380 read with section 114, Indian Penal Code, in respect of the said twelve articles. The learned Judge was apparently strongly impressed by the evidence in the case and his charge was a strongly worded one for a conviction.

The Jury, however, unanimously brought a verdict of not guilty against both the accused.

In cases of this nature, we are generally reluctant to interfere with an unanimous verdict and if that verdict is not unreasonable and can upon the evidence be supported, we think we ought to accept it, even though we may not wholly agree with it.

We propose to deal with the case briefly, as the facts are all set out in the charge. We will consider the case of Hemanta first.

His confession, in our opinion, cannot, upon the case made by the prosecution, be said to be voluntary. The evidence is that he was kept at a little distance from the Post Office in charge of a head constable and was being questioned by the Sub Inspector and that after being in that condition for 3 or 4 hours, to use the words of the learned Judge, 'under the continued questioning to which he was subjected he finally broke down.'

We are satisfied that he made the confession under circumstances that bring the case within the words of section 24 of the Evidence Act. If the confession were voluntary and if the Sub-Inspector thought that it was so, there was no reason why he should have taken him to the Sub-Deputy Magisrate at 11 o'clock at night, inspite of the recent Circular issued by this Court which lays down that as a rule confessions should be recorded in open Court. This appears to us to be a clear indication, apart from any other facts, that Hemanta's confession was not a voluntary one and that the Police Officer thought that as soon as his influence was removed, the confession would be retracted. We think the Sub-Deputy Collector was wrong in recording the confession at that hour of the night and failed to exercise a proper discretion in doing so. However, we may still take the confession into consideration as forming part of the statement of Hemanta before the Committing Magistrate. It was not in our opinion a confession of guilt at all. What Hemanta said would, at the most, go to show that he was a mere accessory after the fact. It does not in any way suggest that he went to the Post Office in order to help Promotha to commit theft, and there is no evidence from which such an inference can be drawn. The suggestion regarding a conspiracy between the two accused has failed and we have no doubt that the fire was accidental. If Promotha took out the registered letters and handed them over to Hemanta, the latter could only be charged with an offence under section 411, Indian Penal Code, but the learned Judge deliberately refused to charge Hemanta under that section because he thought that would complicate matters. For these reasons we think Hemanta could not be said to have abetted the commission of any offence by Promotha; and the charges against Hemanta must, therefore, fail.

As regards Promotha, the case stands on a somewhat different footing; but yet we are not satisfied that even in his case we should differ from the unanimous verdict of the Jury. It is difficult to believe the story told by the Post Master that he left Promotha in charge of the registered articles. If Promotha had been left in such charge, it is extremely unlikely that he, a young probationer in the Post Office aged about 20 or 21 years, would have dared to deny any knowledge of them or to remove them knowing, as he did, that he would be held responsible for them. It seems more reasonable to believe that, when the fire broke out in the kitchen, the Post Master—whose wife and children were in the house—ran in haste to the place and, as suggested by the defence, Promotha also followed him and that immediately after, it occurred to the Post Master that he had left the registered articles without placing any body in charge of them and asked Promotha to return to the Post Office to take care of them. It is extremely suspicious that this story of Promotha having been placed in charge of the stolen articles has been sought to be supported by evidence which cannot be relied upon. Some of the witnesses who depose to it, in our opinion, could not have any knowledge of it. One of such witnesses is Guru Charan who must have left immediately after the fire broke out (Bonomali said: they all went together), and yet he says he heard the Post Master asking Promotha to take charge of the articles, and the other witness is the Post Master's daughter, who in her evidence at the first trial deposed to the same fact but was not examined in the present trial. The learned Judge rightly asked the Jury to ignore her evidence.

Now we come to Promotha's confession. We think that that confession also was not voluntary. In our opinion having at first refused to make a confession, he got frightened at the Sub-Deputy Magistrate asking his orderly to call the constable and apprehending ill treatment if he were handed back to the Police, who would naturally be annoyed at his refusal to make a confession for which he was brought to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, he agreed to make a confession.

We may here add that we are not at all satisfied with the statement made by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate in his evidence that he did not think that the calling of the constable made Promotha afraid.

On this and on some of the other grounds adverted to by us in connection with Hemanta's confession, we think we cannot rely upon the confession of Promotha.

As regards the evidence, we have already said that a part of it is difficult to believe. The matter then stands thus: The registered articles were in the Post Office. The Post Master had left the office; Promotha had also left with him; he was sent back and then when the Post Master returned, he found the articles missing. There is no doubt a strong suspicion attaches to Promotha, as he had a better opportunity of taking possession of those articles than any one else. It may be a strong suspicion, but it is nothing more than a suspicion, RAM LAL v. EMPEROR.

Hemanta's statement cannot be taken into account against Promotha, it being to a great extent self-exculpatory; and upon mere suspicion we are not prepared to convict him of an offence so serious as the one with which he is charged. There remains then the evidence about the discovery of the registered articles in Shyama Charan's shop. That evidence does not touch Promotha. We cannot, therefore, say that we are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that it was Promotha that removed the articles from the Post Office and we think it would be unsafe to convict him also.

For these reasons, we think that we should not disturb the unanimous verdict of the Jury. We do not say that the learned Judge had no good grounds for referring the case to us; but we think that he took a stronger view of the case than he should have taken and his charge to the Jury would have conformed better to the spirit of the law if he had used less strong language. It is true that he put the facts before the Jury in great detail and explained to them the law quite clearly and correctly, but our remark refers to the general tenor of his charge.

For these reasons we acquit both the accused and direct that they be set at liberty.

Accused acquitted.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 258 OF 1919.

RAM LAL— PETITIONER

EMPEROR— OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 173, 190 (1) (b)—Police report, meaning of.

The Police report mentioned in section 190 (1) (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code is a Police report within the meaning of section 173 of the Code, that is to say, a report in the course of an investigation of a cognizable offence.

Application against the decision passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Bhabhua, District Shahabad.

Messrs. S. P. Varma and Harnandan Sahay, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 29 of the Police Act and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25.

It is urged before me by Mr. Varma for the petitioner that the conviction is bad, inasmuch as the Magistrate did not examine the complainant under section 200 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It is necessary to state for the purpose of the point, which has been argued before me by Mr. Varma, that the charge against the petitioner was that he refused to record an information, which was given to him concerning a burglary alleged to have been committed in the house of the informant. Subsequently the Superintendent of Police, in the course of an investigation concerning a dacoity case, came to hear of this burglary, and accordingly there was a report by the Sub-Inspector of Police, through the Superintendent of Police, to the Magistrate, concerning this failure of the petitioner to record the information to the Magistrate, and a proceeding was started on the basis of that report. The question, therefore, is whether the report of the Sub-Inspector, on the basis of which the prosecution was started against the petitioner, is a Police report, within the meaning of section 190, clause (b), of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It seems to me that the Police report mentioned in section 190 (b) is a Police report within the meaning of section 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that is to say, a report in the course of an investigation of a cognizable offence. There is authority for this proposition in the case of King-Emperor v. Sada (1). If the report of the Sub Inspector of Police is not a Police report within the meaning of section 190, clause (b), then it seems to me that the prosecution could only be started, either upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitutes such offence, or upon information received from any person other than a Police Officer. It is not suggested that the prosecution was started upon information received from any person other than a Police Officer. So the only question that remains is, was it started upon receiving a complaint of facts which constituted the offence? It seems to me that if the report be regarded as a complaint within the meaning of section 190 (a), then the failure to examine the complainant on oath is fatal to such prosecution—see the case of Jhuna Lal Sahu v. Emperor (2) and Mangu Koeri v. Emperor (3). In these circumstances, I set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the petitioner. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 435, 439, 476—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Sanction to prosecute—Sanction granted by Civil Court under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code—Revision—High Court, power of interference of—Law applicable—"Inferior Criminal Courts," maning of.

An order passed by a Civil Court under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is open to revision by the High Court only under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and not under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 287, col. 2.]

The term "inferior Criminal Court" in section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not include a Civil Court exercising its power under section 476 of the Code. [p. 287, col. 2.]

Revision of the order of the Munsif, Sihora, dated the 2nd July 1919, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 19 of 1919.

FACTS.—In a suit brought on a sarkhat the trial Court found that the sarkhat was forged and granted sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code for the prosecution of the plaintiff and his witness, who was examined in connection with the sarkhat, under sections 471 and 463, Indian Penal Code, respectively. These persons applied for revision of the order sanctioning their prosecutions. The applications were registered as criminal revisions in consonance with the prevailing practice of the Judicial Commissioner's Court. On the date of hearing before Mittra, A. J. C., the Counsel for the applicants raised a preliminary objection against the representation of the Crown by the Standing Counsel as the petitions should be treated as civil revisions instead of criminal ones. Thereupon Mittra, A. J. C., made the following Order of Reference to a Bench:—

"The question raised before me, though one covered by the authority of Shankar Rao v. Sheikh Daud (1), requires reconsideration, though I have been hitherto following the view taken by Sir Henry Stanyon. When a civil Court orders a prosecution under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and an application is made to this Court for revision of that order, the question arises whether the power of this Court is limited by the provisions of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. I find that the High Courts are now unanimous in holding that the revisional power cannot be exercised under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code but only under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The following cases cited before me support Dr. Gour's contention:—

Har Prasad Das v. Emperor (2), Bhup Kunwar, In the matter of (3), Salig Ram v. Ramji Lal (4), Mazhar Hasan v. Said Hasan (5), Dalsukhram Hurgovindas, In re (6), Ohennanagoud, In re (7), Nataraja Iyer, In re (8).

BABULAL v. EMPEROR.

In Sohoni's Criminal Procedure Code, 9th Edition, page 907, other cases are noted.

The opposite view is taken in the Punjab and the Central Provinces. But there is no reported decision of the Punjab after the Full Bench decision in Har Prasad Das v. Emperor (2). The case in Shankar Rao v. Sheikh Daud (1) follows Emperor v. Gopal Barik (9), which must be taken as overruled by the Full Bench.

I think the question is one which should be settled by a Bench of two Judges. I accordingly refer the following question for decision by a Bench:

'Has this Court power to revise under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code an order passed by a Civil Court under section 476 of the same Code or is the power of revision limited by the terms of the Civil Procedure Code?'

The record is forwarded to the Judicial Commissioner for the constitution of a Bench of two Judges to decide the point."

The Judicial Commissioner on 29th October 1919 made an order under section 7 (2), Central Provinces Courts Act, 1917, constituting a Bench of two, composed of Mittra, A. J. C. and Kotwal, A. J. C., to decide the question referred.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

The question referred for decision has been formulated in the following terms:—

"Has this Court power to revise under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, an order passed by the Civil Court under section 476 of the same Code or is the power of revision limited by the terms of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code?"

In Shankar Rao v. Sheikh Daud (1) Stanyon, A. J. C., held:—

"Every Court holding a proceeding under a power conferred on it by the Code of Criminal Procedure in India exercises a criminal jurisdiction, either ordinary or special, and, irrespective of its appellation and ordinary business, is a 'Criminal Court' in respect of such proceeding, within the meaning of that term in section 435, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898."

(9) 34 C. 42; 11 C. W. N. 125; 4 Cr. L. J. 460.

That decision was supported by a Full Bench ruling of the Punjab Court in Bishen Singh v. Amritsaria (10). Since then the question has been discussed in the various High Courts. In Har Prasad Das v. Emperor (2) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has held that an order passed by the Civil Court under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is open to revision only under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and not under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code. The same view prevails in the other High Courts:—

Bhup Kunwar, In the matter of (3), Salig Ram v. Ramji Lal (4), Mazhar Hasan v. Said Hasan (5), Dalsukhram v. Hurgovindas, In re (6), Chennanagoud, In re (7), Nataraja Iyer, In re (8).

We understand from Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure, 9th Edition, page 907, that the practice is the same in Burma and Oudh. The question has not been judicially considered by the Punjab High Court since the decision above referred to. We think that we should give effect to the plain meaning of the words "inferior Criminal Court" occurring in section 435, Criminal Procedure Code. In our opinion the power of revision can be exercised under section 439, only in the case of inferior Criminal Courts. A Civil Court exercising its power under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, not being one of the five classes of inferior Criminal Courts mentioned in section 6, our power of revision is limited by the terms of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. We think we should now adopt the interpretation of section 435 which has been accepted by almost all the High Courts in India. Our answer, therefore, is that the revision of an order passed by a Civil Court under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, can only be entertained under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and not under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code.

Answer accordingly.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION No. 433 OF 1919.
January 29, 1920.
Present:—Mr. Justice Foster and
Mr. Justice Sultan Ahmed.
JANARDAN THAKUR—PETITIONER
versus
Babu BALDEO PRASAD SINGH—
OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 195 (1) (c)—"Produced" in s. 195(1) (c), meaning of—Document attached to Police report, whether produced by either party—Prosecution in respect of such document—Sanction of Court, whether necessary.

Where in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a document comes into Court attached to a Police report prior to the proceeding, the document is not, in the sense of that section, "produced"; but even if it is, neither of the parties to the proceeding is a party to its production; consequently, the sanction of the Court under section 195 of the Code is not necessary as a condition precedent to the institution by the aggreived person of criminal proceedings against the opposite party upon a charge under section 463 of the Penal Code. [p. 291, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Purneah, refusing to interfere with the order of the Deputy Magistrate, Purneah.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Petitioner.

[FOSTER, J.—I should like to have the sections of the Penal Code, that are apposite to the present inquiry, placed before me].

Mr. Varma read section 193, Indian Penal Code.

[FOSTER, J.—You cannot refer to section 193, as no proceeding had been started when the document was produced before the Police].

But the proceedings were going to be instituted.

Counsel was next proceeding to read section 474, Indian Penal Code, when their Lordships interrupted saying that this section did not find place in section 195 (1) (c).

[FOSTER, J.—Is there any definition of the word 'case' in the Penal Code or anywhere?]

The word 'case' has not been defined in the Penal Code or the Criminal Procedure Code. We are concerned here with the word 'proceeding'.

[FOSTER, J.—Is the Magistrate issuing process the same who decided the section 145 case? If so, his order issuing process might be treated as an order granting sanction.]

Yes, but his order could not be treated as granting sanction because then he could not have tried the case. My submission is that 'produced' does not mean produced by a party and is not co-extensive with filing in evidence.

Quotes Nalini Kanta Laha v. Anukul Chandra Laha (1).

[FOSTER, J.—How do you get over the distinguishing points?]

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—The document in this case [Nalini Kanta Laha v. Anukul Chandra Laha (1)] was produced in Court by a party.]

[FOSTER, J.—And the Pleader was using that document in argument.]

[FOSTER, J.—Mr. Sinha, you would not raise the point in this case which was raised in Nalini Kanta Laha v. Anukul Chandra Laha (1) "the Crown contends..... tock place."]

[Mr. S. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.—No.]

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—Nalini Kanta Laha v. Anukul Chandra Laha (1) has no application because the document was produced by a party.]

[FOSTER, J.—Can you show us a case where sanction was given when the document was produced by a stranger?]

Mr. Varma cites Teni Shah v. Bolahi Shah (2).

SULTAN AHMED, J.—Does it carry us further than Nalini Kanta Laha v. Anukul Chandra Laha (1)?]

The word 'produced by a party' is not there.

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—How do you show it was not produced by a party? The facts and the judgment do not show this. I suspect it was a party who produced, because this case was followed in Nalini Kanta Laha v. Anukul Chandra Laha (1).]

No presumption should be made because the judgment is silent as to this.

(1) 33 Ind. Cas. 490; 44 C. 1002; 25 C. L. J. 25; 21 C. W. N. 640; 18 Cr. L. J. 522.
(2) 5 Ind. Cas. 879; 14 C. W. N. 479; 11 Cr. L. J. 280.

JANARDHAN THAKUR v. BALDEO PRASAD SINGH.

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—Then this case is useless. It is of no help to us.]

Mr. Varma reads Bhawani Das v. Emperor (3).

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—If the document had been produced by a witness, then obviously no sanction would have been necessary to prosecute him.]

My submission is that sanction is necessary even if the document is produced by a witness but is forged by a party, for instance.

[FOSTER, J.—Offence committed by a party must refer to the time when the party produced the document in Court and uttered it. Here the document was produced before the Police, assuming it was forged, and that was before any proceedings had been drawn up.]

Mr. Varma.—Yes.

Cites Bhawani Das v. Emperor (3).

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—Bhawani Das v. Emperor (3) does not decide production by a party and, therefore, can be disregarded.]

Mr. Varma cites Parameswara Nambudri, In re (4), Guru Charan Shaha v. Girija Sundari Dassi (5) and submits that in the present case the Police report embodies the document which was filed with it and proceedings under section 145 were drawn up on that Police report. The Police officer was examined as a witness and says that document was given to him to show possession.

Submits further that in section 195 (1) (c) the word used is 'production' and not 'production by a party' and, therefore, the only elements required are forgery by a party and its production, not necessarily by a party, in Court.

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—What is the meaning of 'given in evidence'? It must be by a party or on his behalf.]

[FOSTER, J.—Mr. Sinha have you considered Gopal Sidheshvar, In re (6)?]

Mr. Sinha (with him Mr. G. C. Pal), for the Opposite Party.—The petitioner cannot be allowed to both approbate and reprobate at the same time. His conduct is most objectionable.

When I prayed for sanction to prosecute him, he objected that sanction was not required inasmuch as he had not produced the document before the Magistrate. I thereupon withdrew the sanction proceedings and filed a complaint before the Magistrate. The petitioner then urged that sanction was necessary.

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—The petitioner's conduct is certainly open to criticism, but we have to decide a pure question of law here as to the competency of the present proceedings.]

Mr. Sinha then argued that the grammatical meaning of the sentence is that production means production by a party. 'By a party' has been used earlier in the sentence. By way of an ellipsis those words have been left out after 'produced'.

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—What is the good of saying "in such proceeding," if your argument is correct, because 'any proceeding' is put down earlier in the sentence?]

Mr. Sinha respectfully asks what is the raison d'etre of the section, why should a limit be placed on the right of a British subject to move the criminal law against an adversary?

[FOSTER, J.—If we look to the English Law it is illustrative. The whole object is that the Court is aggrieved and, therefore, its sanction is necessary. Take the case of a joint family document forged by or on behalf of a joint family member. The Court's grievance would be against the man who produces or on whose behalf it is produced and not against the actual forger.]

Mr. Sinha submits further that none of the rulings cited by the other side decide the point at issue at all and are distinguishable because in those cases a 'party' was concerned.

Cites Noor Mahomed Cassum v. Kaikhosru Maneckjee (7), Mohadeo Misser v. Narayan Ram Sha (8).

[FOSTER, J.—What do you derive from this Noor Mahomed Cassum v. Kaikhosru Maneckjee (7)?]

Mr. Sinha—User was before the Police and not before Court and, therefore, no sanction was necessary.

[FOSTER, J.—It does not carry us very far. We are not considering the meaning of "in such proceeding".]

Mr. Sinha sums up and says:—Mohadeo Misser v. Narayan Ram Sha (8), Lalta Prosad v. Emperor (10), Debilal v. Dhajadhari Goshami (9) are in my favour. Bhawani Das v. Emperor (3) and Nalini Kanta Lahu v. Anukul Chandra Sahu (1) are against me.

Mr. Varma, in reply, distinguishes Debilal v. Dhajadhari Goshami (9), here taslimnama was intended to be produced in the Court.

JUDGMENT.

FOSTER, J.—The facts of this case are that after a purchase in auction sale in execution of a decree for rent and delivery of possession to the purchaser, the petitioner resisted, alleging raiyati title, and propounded as the basis of this title a document called a taslimnama. The attention of the Police was called to the dispute, and the enquiring officer reported to the Magistrate that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. In the course of his enquiry the party claiming the raiyati title, now the petitioner, produced the taslimnama. The Police Officer only filed the document with his report, and after rejecting it, asked for proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. On the Police report the Magistrate drew up a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The Police Officer was examined in the hearing of the proceeding and he referred to the taslimnama; but when the petitioner filed a petition withdrawing from the proceeding, and agreeing to an order in favour of the auction purchaser, the Magistrate, without referring to the taslimnama, recorded a finding that possession was with the auction-purchaser, and he gave relief under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. Thereupon the auction-purchaser, the opposite party in the present proceedings, moved the Magistrate to impound the taslimnama and to sanction the prosecution of the petitioner. The petitioner then resisted on the ground that sanction was not required, inasmuch as it was not he who had produced the document before the Magistrate. Thereupon the opposite party withdrew from the sanction proceedings, and filed a complaint directly under sections 463, 471, 475 and 476, Indian Penal Code. The petitioner then changed front and urged that sanction was necessary. Process was, however, issued. Having failed to move the Sessions Judge, the petitioner has moved this Court to set aside the order for issue of process, on the ground of lack of jurisdiction. A Rule was issued.

No doubt the petitioner's conduct is open to criticism, but the fact remains that this Court has to decide whether the law admits of his present prosecution. This is the question now to be considered.

The petitioner relies on the terms of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. I quote the parts of that section which are apposite.

195 (1) (c). "No Court shall take cognizance of any offence described in section 463, Indian Penal Code, or punishable under sections 471, 475 or 476 of the same Code, when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate."

195 (3). "The provisions of sub-section (1) with reference to the offences named therein apply also to the abetment of such offences, and attempts to commit them".

So the offence, in contemplation of the sanctioning Court, must be an offence that has been committed by a party

(obviously this means an offence that is alleged to have been committed by a party); and the document which is the subject-matter of the offence must have been produced in a proceeding before a Court.

The opposite party urges that the section does not limit his rights as private prosecutor. His contentions amount to this; there was no "production", in the sense of the section; and even if there were, the production did not affect the right of the opposite party to prosecute directly without sanction of Court.

In considering whether there was a production, in the sense of the Code, it is impossible to ignore the provisions of section 145, sub-section (4), Criminal Procedure Code:

"The Magistrate shall then, without reference to the merits of the claims of any of such parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute, peruse the statements so put in, hear the parties, receive the evidence produced by them respectively, consider the effect of such evidence, take such further evidence (if any) as he thinks necessary, and if possible, decide whether any and which of the parties was, at the date of the order beforementioned, in such possession of the said subject."

So the evidence "produced" by the parties is to be received by the Magistrate, but he may take other evidence of his own motion. Clearly in respect of the evidence "produced" there is a bilateral transaction, a production by the parties and acceptance by the Court; in the case of evidence used in the case but not produced by parties there is a unilateral action of the Court. It seems to me, therefore, to be a strain of ordinary language to say that a document, which came into the Court, merely because it was attached to a Police report, prior to the proceeding, was "produced" in the proceeding.

But, assuming that it was "produced", I do not see how the prosecution of a party who had no hand in its production is barred by the absence of the sanction of the Court. We have been taken through a number of authorities, but in every case the party was criminally implicated, directly or by abetment, in the production: Nalini Kanta Laha v. Anukul Chandra Laha (1), Teni Shah v. Bolahi Shah (2) Bhawani Das v. Emperor (3) and other cases.

In a case quoted by the opposite party we find data which expressly exclude the participation of the party in the production of the false document. The case is Debilal v. Dhajadhari Goshami (9). There the gravamen of the charge, for which sanction was held to be unnecessary, was that the accused had set up a person, who was their tool, to propound a false Will in order to further their own designs; and they had come to Court in the guise of witnesses to support the document. They had, therefore, conceivably done some criminal acts before the document was produced in Court and given in evidence; and in respect of those acts, apart from their conduct in Court, they could be prosecuted without sanction.

The legal principle is not far to seek. After the crime has been committed by a party, and the criminal matter carried into a proceeding in Court, two persons are aggrieved, not only the opposite party, but also the Magistrate, whose course of justice has been perverted, or attempted to be perverted, by the production of the criminal matter in the proceeding. When once this has happened, it seems to be obvious that the Magistrate should control all litigation arising out of the acts in Court. For the Magistrate has two paramount interests in the eyes of the Legislature: he must protect the administration of justice and he must prevent unnecessary prolongation of suits. The whole scheme of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, seems to me to be based upon these principles. The Court is concerned, and is only concerned, where there has been a voluntary obstruction, or attempted obstruction, of the course of justice in a proceeding before it. If a person complains of an offence that does not fall within these defined limits, he is free from the requirement of sanction; for the simple reason that the Court is not aggrieved and has no concern.

In the present case the Court had no grievance against the petitioner. He neither produced the false document, nor abeted its production. So in no way did he abuse the authority of the Court.

I, therefore, conclude (a) that the document was not "produced" in the sense of section 145, Criminal Proceedure Code, (b) even if "produced," the petitioner was no party to its production, (c) the petitioner did not in any way abuse the authority of the Court, and, therefore, the opposite party is the only aggrieved person, (d) it follows that the Court, having no concern with the matter, is not required to grant sanction for prosecution.

In discussing these questions, I have, for argument's sake and because the legal principles could not otherwise be discussed, assumed that the taslimnama is a forged document. But the question whether it is forged must remain open. The Court which is now proceeding with this litigation must keep in mind that the words of section 195 (i) (c) "has been committed by a party" can only signify "is alleged to have been committed by a party"; and attention must be paid to the terms of each heading of the charge.

I would discharge the Rule issued by the Court, on the grounds stated above.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—I agree.

Rule discharged.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 599 OF 1919.

December 20, 1919.

Present :—Justice Sir George Knox, KT.

Babu ULFAT RAI—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 476, 537—Order directing prosecution—Notice to accused, whether necessary—Preliminary inquiry, failure to make, whether vitiates order—Irregularity.

Before making an order under section 476 of the Criminal Proceduie Code the Court is not bound to issue notice to the accused. [p. 295, col 1]

Where a Court after very careful consideration arrives at the conclusion that an order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is called for, and that no preliminary inquiry is necessary, the omission to make such inquiry is a mere irregularity within section 537 of the Code. [p. 294, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of Sessions Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 1st of September 1919.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision The order I am asked to revise is an order passed by the Sessions Judge of Mainpuri. It is dated the 1st of September 1919 and was passed in the case of King-Emperor v. Babu Ulfat Rai. That order is on the record. It directs that Babu Ulfat Rai should be prosecuted for offences falling under section 196 of the Indian Penal Code and under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. It further directs under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code that the case be sent down to the District Magistrate for trial by himself or any First Class Magistrate subordinate to him. There has been a great deal of argument addressed to me, but the only point that I have to consider is whether the action of the learned Sessions Judge in passing the order under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was contrary to law. According to an affidavit which will be found on the record and which is dated the 15th of September 1919, that being the date on which the affidavit was affirmed before a Notary Public, Babu Ulfat Rai was served with a notice to show cause on the 20th of August 1919 as to why he should not be prosecuted under sections 193 and 196. It is asserted in the affidavit that Babu Ulfat Rai at once applied for urgent copies of the statements of witnesses recorded in his absence against him and of other papers. These copies were not supplied to the applicant by the 1st of September 1919, the date on which the order already alluded to was passed under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That Babu Ulfat Rai applied more than once and applied in vain for adjournments to enable him to put himself in a position to show cause.

What then I have to determine is whether the order passed on the 1st of September 1919 is correct, legal, proper or otherwise and whether the proceedings of the Court passing the order have been regular. The Court which passed the order was, as has been already noticed, a Criminal Court. The officer presiding in that Court was an officer of experience and standing.

(1) He had jurisdiction to pass an order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

(2) If he considered it necessary, he had to make a preliminary enquiry.

(3) And then to send the case for enquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the First Class.

There is nothing in section 476 which requires a Criminal Court, before passing an order under section 476, to issue notice upon the accused to show cause why action should not be taken under section 476. So far then the proceedings taken by the Sessions Court appear to have been regular throughout. The order passed appears to have been correct and legal. It only remains for me to decide whether the order, considering the circumstances under which it was passed, was proper.

In connection, however, with this it is necessary also to consider what has been laid down by the law in section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In that section it is laid down that no order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered on revision on account of any irregularity in proceedings taken under section 476, unless such irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. In other words, there must be an irregularity in proceedings followed by what under the law amounted to a failure of justice.

Notice was called by the applicant to what he considered irregular at a very early stage in the proceedings.

To return to whether the passing of the order under section 476 was an irregular proceeding. This Court has in a previous case, vide, Ram Piari Rai v. Emperor (1), held that (1) there is nothing in section 476 which requires that notice shall be given to a person who is immediately concerned thereby, and (2) that this Court has always looked with disfavour upon an order made under section 476 without notice being given to the persons immediately concerned. But there is considerable distance between looking with disfavour upon an order and reversing the order as being an order contrary to law.

The circumstances before me are peculiar. There had been a long and elaborate trial resulting in a very considered judgment, and in that judgment the circumstances are set out which, in the opinion of the learned Sessions Judge, called upon him to pass the order which he did on the 1st of September 1919. It is not a case in which it can be said that the Judge had not looked at length into the proceedings antecedent to the order he passed. When he issued the notice on the 12th of August 1919, he was in the act of setting forth his judgment and the reasons for his judgment in the main case. He was then of opinion that an offence had been committed under sections 196 and 193, Indian Penal Code. He was, as that judgment shows, making a mental enquiry and by the 1st of September 1919 when he passed his order he had arrived at the conclusion that an order under section 476 was called for. He had come to the conclusion that no preliminary enquiry was necessary and appears to have acted upon this conclusion. As he had issued notice, it would have been better if he had heard anything that Ulfat Rai had to offer in explanation and given him opportunity for considering what he should or what his advisers should say.

Section 476 lays down a peculiar form of procedure. Instead of the alleged offence being sent to the Court which, having regard to the provisions of Chapter XV of the Code, would have jurisdiction to try, the Court under section 476 has to send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the First Class, and such Magistrate shall thereupon proceed, &c.; all this points to the intention that the trial should be held without any unnecessary delay.

It must always be remembered that the Judge was not trying the case or entering himself upon proceedings to determine the offences under sections 193 and 195. He was not depriving the accused of making a full and complete answer to such trial of those offences as might be entered upon. He was not depriving Ulfat

(1) 16 Ind. Cas. 515; 10 A. L. J. 247; 13 Cr. L. J. 707.

Rai of opportunities to give his answer to the charge. The utmost that could be urged was that Ultaf Rai. by not having been given an opportunity to show cause, was put in peril of a longer trial than might perhaps be actually necessary. His action in passing the order under section 476 was not in fact occasioning a failure of justice. There had been long drawn out proceedings which called for as early a decision as possible.

Acting under the provisions of section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure I am not prepared to alter the order passed and I reject this application.

Application rejected.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

JURY REFERENCE No. 1 OF 1919.

August 21, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad and Mr. Justice Adami.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

Musammat ZOHRA AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 307—Trial by Jury—Jurors divided in opinion—Reasons for opinion of Jurors, ascertainment of—Reference to High Court—Power of High Court—Circumstantial evidence, conviction based on—Principle applicable.

Where in a trial by Jury in a Court of Session, the case depends entirely on circumstantial evidence and the Jurors are divided in opinion, the Judge ought, if he intends to make a reference to the High Court under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, to ascertain from the Jurors the reasons for their opinion. [p. 300, col. 1.]

When a case is referred to the High Court under section 307 of the Code, it is open to that Court to consider the entire evidence in the case and to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the Jury, and to acquit or convict the accused of any offence of which the Jury could have convicted upon the charge framed and placed before it. [p. 300, col. 1.]

In order to pronounce a conviction in a case of circumstantial evidence the facts found should, on a reasonable hypothesis, be inconsistent with the innocence of the accused. [p. 300, col. 1.]

Reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Officiating District and Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 14th July 191 , disagreeing with the verdict of the majority of the Jury and recommending that the two accused should be acquitted.

FACTS appear sufficiently from the heads of charge to the Jury which were as follows:—

"The offence with which the prisoners are charged.

Section 302/34, Indian Penal Code, read. Read sections 299, 302 and 34, Indian Penal Code, and explained; also explained under what circumstances section 34 would be applicable, that is, when it is proved that both the accused conspired together in order to bring about the death of the deceased or acted in concert in producing that effect then only that section will be applicable, otherwise not. Simply remaining a passive spectator would not make one liable under section 34.

The case for the prosecution.

The girl Maimun, a child of about 4 years and daughter of Kalut Kasab, was taken by the accused Zohra to her house at 11 or 11-30 A. M. on Sunday, the 9th March. This was seen by several of the prosecution witnesses. The girl had some silver ornaments on her person. None of the witnesses saw the girl return. The accused Sobaratan also was seen in the house at that time by three of the witnesses for the prosecution. Shortly after this the child was missing and Zaitun (P. W. No. 7), a cousin of the deceased, and Mahmudan, the mother of the deceased, came to Zohra's house and asked her to give the child. But she said that the child has already gone back and asked them to search for the child elsewhere. They did so, but to no effect. They came to Zohra's house again and again and asked for the child and at last in the evening the accused Sobaratan threatened them with broom stick. P. W. No. 1, the father of the girl, at 4 P. M. gave information to the Thana that his daughter Maimun was missing. The people of the Mahalla kept watch in their respective houses that night. At 2 or 2-30 A. M. Mahangu, the father of the accused Zohra, raised a cry that Kalut's daughter was in his house. This cry was heard by several people, but no one entered that house. P. W. No. 1 rushed to the Thana to lodge information. As the Sub Inspector was not there, he went to the house of the Inspector close by, roused him from sleep and both came back to the Thana, where the Inspector recorded the first information in which P. W. No. 1 said that the dead body of his daughter was discovered in the house of the accused. He also said that he suspected the accused of murdering his child. After recording this information the Inspector came to the place of occurrence and held an enquiry. He at first held inquest over the dead body and also looked into the surrounding places and recovered 2 or 3 imitation pearls from the house, but no better jewelleries were found. He also discovered two trenches which were in his opinion newly dug. The two accused and the father of Zohra are the only inmates of the house, but the latter was absent throughout the day and so the child must have been killed by the two accused and by no one else. The medical evidence shows that the child must have been throttled to death. One person could have done this, but two would do it more easily. The position of the house was such that the body could not have been thrown from outside.

The case for defence.

The accused made no statements in the Sessions Court. But from their statements before the Magistrate, which have not been retracted, their case appears to be as follows:—P. W. No. 7 sent the girl with Zohra on the day in question for a piece of biscuit. Zohra brought her up to her door, gave her the biscuits. The child was not brought inside the house nor was it killed there. The dead body was dropped from outside. Sobaratan was absent from home from 8 A. M. to 3 P. M. The Mahalla people, including the mother and the cousin of the deceased, did look into the house of the accused but could not find any trace of the girl there.

Comments on the evidence.

The case rests on circumstantial evidence. To establish a charge of murder by circumstantial evidence such evidence ought to lead the Jury to "such certainty as they would act on in a matter of great consequence." Mathematical demonstration is not to be expected. At the same time the circumstantial evidence must be exhaustive and exclude the possibility of guilt of any other person or must point conclusively to the complicity of the accused. The Jury will have to consider what are the facts proved in the case and what inference naturally follows from those facts, keeping in view the rule of circumstantial evidence and the nature of proof necessary as explained above. In the present case in order to establish the guilt of the accused it is necessary to prove, first, that the child met with violent death. On this point there is the evidence of the Assistant Surgeon which I have read and explained to you. He has given his opinion that death was due to throttling by some other person. It was suggested in cross-examination that the death might have been due to some kind of epileptic fit. You have heard what the Assistant Surgeon said in answer to this (the portion read and explained). It will be for you to say whether you accept the opinion of the Assistant Surgeon or not. But if you accept that opinion, you are to find that the death was caused by violence. Second, if death was caused by violence, the next point will be to consider whether the death was caused in this house. On this point there are two undisputed facts, namely, that the child was brought near this house at about 11 or 11·30 A. M. and the dead body of the child was discovered there in the early hours of the next morning. You have heard the arguments of both sides and the suggestion on behalf of the accused that the body must have been thrown from outside. It was pointed out to you that in the saneha which P. W. No. 1 caused to be recorded at 4 P. M. he said that the child strayed out from its home for playing and was missing since then. In the first information lodged the next morning this same witness distinctly said that before lodging the saneha he knew that the child had come with Zohra, that he saw Zohra and asked her about the child and he was told that the child had been sent back. Yet he made no mention of this in the saneha, apparently because he was satisfied with the story told. Again it was pointed out to you that the medical evidence shows that death of the child must have taken place within 2 or 3 hours of her taking the last meal. The evidence of Zaitun showed that the girl took her last meal from the witness at 10 A. M. at the earliest. Some of the prosecution witnesses have said that it was about 12 that Zaitun and Mahmudan came to Zohra to enquire about the child. This is also the story which Zaitun told before the Magistrate. But she changed the story here and said that it was at about 2 P. M. that this incident took place. This is a fact much commented upon by the defence. It was argued that this change has been made deliberately, as according to the medical evidence the girl was very probably alive at 12 o'clock, when according to the earlier story Zaitun and Mahmudan made the first enquiry, and that the girl would surely have discovered herself if her mother and cousin had really come for her. From this and from the saneha and the first information the defence sought to draw the inference that the story of the accused that the girl was sent back immediately must be a true one. On the other hand, it was argued by the prosecution that the people of the class to which the witnesses belong have no great idea of time and so no definite inference ought to be drawn from their statements relating to the same. As regards the absence of any mention of Zohra in the saneha it was argued that at that time no suspicion arose and so no mention was made of this. Gentlemen, it will be for you to say what view you accept. If you accept the view of the defence, there will be no evidence to show that the girl afterwards came to the house of the accused.

There remains the other fact, namely, the discovery of that dead body in the house. This fact is undisputed. The position of the house and its surroundings have been clearly described before you. The Inspector also described the condition of the thatches and walls when he first saw these the next morning, and from these you are to decide whether you can accept the story of the defence that the dead body was thrown from outside. If you believe that story or if you think that the story is a probable one, you are to acquit the accused. But, on the other hand, if you consider that the dead body could not have been introduced into the house by any outsider, the murder must have been done in the house itself. You have heard the evidence. You have also seen the map of the locality prepared and you have also heard the circumstances very fully and you are to take all these into consideration in coming to a proper conclusion on this point. The next point for your consideration would be, supposing the girl was murdered and was murdered in the house, whether the accused did so or not. In this connection you are to see if anybody other than the two accused could have done so without any complicity on the part of the accused. The evidence shows that no one except the two accused and the father of the accused Zohra were in the house from 11.30 A. M. of Sunday to the time when the dead body was discovered. Of Zohra's father the evidence shows that he was absent the whole morning, came home for a short time at about noon and again left the house immediately and did not return till the evening. As regards Sobaratan, her story is that she was away from 8 A. M. to 3 P. M. But several of the prosecution witnesses have said that they saw her in the house at about midday. The evidence of her husband, who was examined in this Court at the suggestion of the Jury, also shows that she was at home at midday. It will be for you to accept or reject this evidence. If you accept this evidence, you will see that her story that she was away up to 3 P. M. cannot be true. But that alone is not sufficient to convict her. You will see also if she took any part in the act. If you are of opinion that both the accused took part in causing the death of the child or that they acted in concert before or at the time of the commission of the act, section 34 will apply and both of the accused will be liable for the act. But if you find that one of these accused or the father of the accused Zohra did the act and the others were only passive spectators, then section 34 will not be applicable and you cannot make them responsible simply because after the commission of the act they or any of them may have helped to prevent discovery. If you find that only one person did the act without the complicity of the others and there is nothing to show which person did so, you must acquit both the accused. The whole case has been placed before you and it is for you now to give your opinion.

The duties of the Judge and Jury.

Gentlemen, in a case tried by Jury it is the duty of the Judge to explain the law to you, to place the case of both parties before you, to place the evidence bearing on each part of the case and to comment on the same and generally to help you in coming to a conclusion. In doing so the Judge may sometimes give his opinion on some points of evidence, but you are not bound by it. You are sole judges of facts. You are not to be influenced by any opinion expressed by the Judge nor by anything you may have heard outside the Court relating to the matter. But it is your bounden duty to consider the whole evidence and arguments in the case and give your verdict in the light of the law laid down before you by the Judge."

The verdict of the Jury was as follows:—

"Foreman says that the Jury is divided in their opinion. Two are for not guilty and three for guilty against both under section 302/34, Indian Penal Code."

The Sessions Judge, disagreeing with the verdict of the majority of the Jury, made a reference to the High Court which runs as follows:—

"Facts of the case have been fully set forth in the record of the heads of charge to the Jury. According to the prosecution story the accused Zohra came with the murdered child to her house at about 11-30 A. M. No one saw the child return. The dead body of the child was found in the house of the accused at 2-30 A. M. next day. The evidence on the record shows that it was improbable for any one to introduce the dead body into the house. When search was made for the child, both the accused said that it was not in their house but had already been sent back. The medical evidence shows that the child was done to death by throttling. From the evidence it would appear that the child must have been murdered in the house of the deceased. In my opinion these facts have been proved beyond doubt. I am, however, of opinion that the evidence does not show that both the accused must have done the act or that even if one of them did so, she did it with the concurrence of the other and in furtherance of a common object. I am also of opinion that the evidence does not show which one of the accused did so. The reason for this opinion is that it is difficult to suppose that accused Zohra had originally any intention to kill the child. It is more likely that seeing the child in their house with ornaments, one of them took it into her head to secure the ornaments by killing the child and so did the killing and the other being taken aback, did not oppose and afterwards both of them tried to throw off the scent when search was made for the child. The evidence also shows that the father of accused Zohra came into the house at midday when, according to the medical evidence, the child was probably alive. It is not, therefore, impossible for him to have done the act without any complicity on the part of the accused, though the latter might have been accessories after the fact. It cannot, therefore, be said that the circumstantial evidence in this case is exhaustive and excluded the possibility of guilt of any other person or points conclusively to the complicity of the accused. I accordingly disagree with the verdict of the majority which, in my opinion, is clearly wrong and unwarranted by the circumstances proved in this case.

The case is accordingly submitted to the High Court under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code."

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This is a reference under section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Sessions Judge of Patna, who, not agreeing with the verdict of the majority of the Jury, has submitted the case to us for consideration. Three of the Jurors gave a "verdict of guilty" against both the accused under section 302 read with section 34 of the Indian Penal Code, and two of them gave a "verdict of not guilty."

The accused Musammat Sobratan and Zohra were committed to the Court of Session to stand their trial on a charge under section 302, Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge amended the charge by adding section 34 to section 302 in the charge.

The accused Zohra is 20 years of age, is unmarried and is the daughter of accused Sobratan. Mahangoo baker is the husband of Sobratan and father of Zohra. They live in a small house in Mohalla Domtoli, Dinapore, the Domtoli road being to the south of the house.

The charge relates to the murder of a girl named Maimun, a child of about 4 years. She was the daughter of one Kaloot Qassab, P.W. No. 1. His house is at a distance of 100 paces north of the house of the accused. In that house Mahmoodan, wife of Kaloot, and Zaitun, his niece, live. On Sunday the 9th March 1919 Kaloot had gone to Nasrigunj to sell meat. During his absence at 11 or 11-30 A. M., the accused Zohra came to his house and purchased some Choories, worth one pice, from Zaitun and as she had not got the pice with her, she asked that Maimun be sent with her to her house so that she might give her one pice worth of biscuits. Maimun had an hour before taken her meal and was then playing in the Osara. Zohra took the girl with her to her house. As the girl did not return 2 or 2½ hours after, Zaitun and Mahmoodan mother of Maimun went to the house of Zohra and asked for the child. At that time both Sobratan and Zohra were at their house, and Zohra said that the child had returned after Zohra gave her biscuits, in the Ekka of her grandmother, and asked Zaitun to search for the child elsewhere. She did so but to no effect. They came to Zohra's house again and asked for the child, and at last in the evening the accused Sobratan threatened to beat them with a broom stick if they came again to her house.

In the meantime Kaloot returned from Nasrigunj at noon and not finding the girl Maimun, he lodged information at the Thana at 4 P. M. to the effect that the child went out to play and was missing.

The people of the Mohalla kept a watch in their respective houses that night. At 2 or 2 30 A. M. Mahangoo, father of the accused Zohra, raised a cry that somebody had thrown the child into his house. Kaloot then went to the Thana and, not finding the Sub-Inspector there, he went to the house of the Inspector close by, and aroused him from his sleep. They both came to the Thana where the Inspector recorded the first information to the effect that at 2 A. M. Zohra, her mother and father shouted out from their house that somebody had thrown the dead body into their house and thereupon he (Kaloot) and several others went to the Angan of Zohra and found the dead body of Maimun lying there. Kaloot in the first information charged Musammat Zohra, her mother Sobratan and father Mahangoo with killing his daughter in order to take away the ornaments from her person. These ornaments were said to be a silver Jugnu, a Hasuli, a Paunchie, Karas on both ankles and gilat or German silver Chharas, two round each ankle. The value of the ornaments was subsequently in evidence said to be Rs. 20 or Rs. 25.

The Thana was not far off from the place, and the Inspector in the company of two Sub-Inspectors and a number of constables arrived at the place and held an inquest over the dead body and recovered two or three imitation pearls but no other ornament was found. The Inspector searched for the missing silver ornaments in the house, but could not find any. He found a number of pieces of dirty cloth lying on a platform in the south-eastern corner of the verandah, with some blood stains on them in several places. The blood stains were said to be due to menstrual fluid. The cloth was taken charge of and sent to the Chemical Examiner who, on analysis, found the stains on the cloth to be human blood. But these pieces of cloth have not been shown in this case to be connected with the murder.

The Inspector found the dead body lying on its back with its head towards the north and legs towards the south. The hands and legs were lying stretched along her sides parallel to the body. The palm of the hand was open. The child had a brass ring on her right ear lobe with 4 yellow imitation pearls and three green ones, out of which one was broken. She had German silver anklets, two on each ankle, five glass Choories on the right and four on the left hand. The Choories were entire and unbroken and the body was besmeared on all sides with horse dung. He also found a heap of horse dung on the western part of the courtyard, but the place where the child was lying was bare. The heap of horse dung was found disturbed. There are narrow verandahs thatched to the north, east and south of the courtyard, the northern and southern being 2 to 3 cubits and the eastern 5 to 6 cubits. The northern wall is 9 feet high. He found one pearl near the dead body and two imitation pearls in the eastern verandah. Near the body he found a piece of torn Kurta which fitted in with one of the Kurtas the child had on her body. He did not find any marks of disturbance anywhere on the thatches. The door of the house by which the Inspector entered was the only opening into the house and the door had no bolt from inside but had a chain from outside. There were two trenches in the house, one inside the room which the Sub-Inspector P. W. No. 12 found on measurement to be $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet long, 2 feet broad and $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet deep, and the other in the Angan 2 feet long, $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet broad and one foot deep. The Sub-Inspector also found a lane to the north of the accused's house leading to the Sultanpur road. That space is vacant and ends at the back of the accused's house. The wall on that side was 8 feet high with a parchhatti on it about one cubit in breadth.

The body was sent by the Inspector through Sheo Ranjan Misser, Constable P. W. No. 13, to the Assistant Surgeon of Dinapore. The Assistant Surgeon held post mortem examination on the 10th of March at 10-30 A. M. He found bruising of the whole face and anterior of the neck with small abrasions and human nail marks over the anterior neck. The bruises on her face, nose and the lips were due to rubbing with hands or some other similar object. The Assistant Surgeon was of opinion that death was caused by asphyxia due to throttling, and that death might have been caused by one person but that two might have done it more easily. The Doctor found in the stomach 6 oz. of rice, dal and vegetables half digested and was of opinion that the child must have died two or three hours after she took her last meal. The Doctor says that the child must have died a little more than 12 hours before the time he examined her but it might be 20 or 24 hours before. Zaitun in her evidence has said that the child had taken her meal an hour before Zohra took her, i. e., between 10 and 11 A. M. We do not know whether any food was subsequently given to the child by the person who had her in her charge before her death. Thus the child must have died any time between midday of the ninth and the time that her dead body was found. The Assistant Surgeon returned the Sari, the anklets, the ear rings containing false pearls, a piece of Kurta and some Choories (whole and not broken) to the Constable (P. W. No. 13) who had taken the dead body to him for post mortem examination.

Upon these facts the accused have been charged with the murder of the child. The case of the accused was that Zaitun, the girl's aunt, sent her with Zohra on the day in question for one pice worth of biscuits. Zohra brought the child to her door, gave her biscuits and the child was then returned immediately and that the murder did not take place in the accused's house, but that somebody threw the dead body into the house after midnight. The case of Sobratan accused further was that she was absent from her house from 8 A. M. to 3 P. M. The Jury were divided in their opinion; 3 gave a verdict of 'guilty' and 2 of "not guilty." The learned Sessions Judge has not accepted the opinion of the majority of the Jury and has referred the case for our consideration.

We do not know what are the reasons upon which the opinion either of the majority or minority of the Jury is based, and in a case of divided verdicts we have to consider the opinion of the minority as well as that of the majority of the Jury. It would have been well if the learned Sessions Judge, when he intended to refer the case to us, had invited the Jury to give their reasons for their opinion. This is the view taken in the cases of Emperor v. Chellan (1), Emperor v. Annada Charan Thakur (2), Emperor v. Surna- moyee Biswas (3). It was still more necessary to have the reasons of the Jury for their vrediot when the oase depended entirely upon the oiroumstantial evidenoe. The learned Government Advooate urged that the referenoe of the Judge is only upon a point of law and that the learned Sessions Judge agreed on facts with the opinion of the majority of the Jury, and henoe it was not open to us to go into the evidenoe in this oase. This view cannot find favour with us. It has long been settled by a string of oases that the High Court is required to oonsider the entire evidenoe in the oase and to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the Jury, and then to acquit or oonviot the accused of any offence of whioh the Jury could have oonvioted him upon the oharge framed and plaoed before it. It is needless to quote authorities on the point. They all appear to have been referred to and discussed in the two aforesaid oases. The present Code of Criminal Prooedure in olause 3 of section 307 has made it perfeotly olear. The whole oase has been submitted to us and we have to go into the entire evidenoe in the oase and the opinions of the learned Sessions Judge and the divided verdiots of the Jury.

As already observed, the evidenoe in the oase is entirely oiroumstantial and there is nothing direot to impliaate the accused in the orime and as put by the learned Sessions Judge in his oharge to the Jury, the oiroumstantial evidenoe must be exhaustive and exolude the possibility of guilt of any other person or must point oonolusively to the oomplioity of the accused. In a oase of oiroumstantial evidenoe the facts found should be inoonsistent on a reasonable hypothesis with the innooenoe of the accused before a oonviotion oan be pronounoed. Keeping this in view we have now to deoide, if both or any of the accused is guilty of the offenoe of the murder of the ohild. The ohild oame by her death by throttling and the objeot of this murder, whoever the murderer be, was to rob the ohild of the ornaments that were on her person at the time. The dead body of the ohild was at midnight found in the house of the accused. The ohild was at 11·30 A. M. taken by Zohra and the ohild since then was not seen by any person.

The next question is how the dead body of the ohild oame to be in the Angan of the accused. The first ory of the dead body of the ohild being in the house was raised by the inmates of the house Mahangoo, Zohra and Sobratan, to the effeot that the ohild was thrown into their house from outside. The evidenoe of the prosecution witnesses points to the fact that they heard at midnight the declaration of Mahangoo that the dead body of the ohild was in his house. Mahangoo examined as a Court witness himself says that he was aroused by Zohra and was told by her that some Halla was made in the Mohalla that something had fallen. Mahangoo's statement has to be taken with great reserve, as he has also been oharged with the murder in the first information by Kaloot and as he ooouples no better position than that of an aooomplioe. Kaloot himself in the first information says that at 2 A. M., in the night all three Zohra, Sobratan and Mahangoo shouted out from their house that some one had thrown the dead body into their house. The house according to the plan is in the midst of a number of other houses, the oooupants of whioh according to the evidenoe kept a watoh that night. The accused's suggestion is that the ohild must have been thrown from the northern wall behind whioh there was an open space leading to the lane whioh joins the road on the north. But no sign of any disturbanoe on the thatoh of that wall was found by the Inspeotor or the Sub-Inspeotor. The position in whioh the dead body was found lying under the eaves of the house points more to the fact of the dead body having been quietly laid down there than of having been thrown there from outside. As already observed the Inspeotor found the body on its back, with the hands lying stretohed along its sides parallel to the body and beameared with horse dung. The heap of horse dung was in the western verandah but the plaoe where the body was lying was bare. Two of the pearls were found in the eastern verandah. The body must, therefore, have been in other plaoes in the house before it was laid under the eaves of the house.

Considering all the circumstances of the case, it is impossible to hold that the dead body was thrown into that Angan by an outsider and the learned Sessions Judge is, therefore, right in holding that the child must have been murdered in the house of the accused. This also agrees with the fact that it would have been impossible, when such a hue and cry was raised from midday and when the whole Mohalla people were so vigilant, for an outsider to introduce the body into the house of the accused. If the child was murdered outside by anyone else, there does not appear to be any reason why the dead body should be thrown into the house of the accused and not disposed of in some other way and in some other place. It is also not difficult in the circumstances of the case to hold that one or more inmates of the house must have murdered the child. These are Mahangoo and the two accused before us. The medical evidence shows that the death might have been caused by one person, but two would do it more easily. It is, therefore, clear that one at least of the three inmates of the house must have done, it but possibly all three might have joined in it. It is true that the evidence against Mahangoo is practically nil and against Sobratan not so conclusive as to fix the guilt upon her with any amount of certainty. She no doubt appears to have been in the house about midday when the search first commenced and when such frequent inquiries were made by Zaitun and the mother of the dead child and she ultimately threatened Zaitun and the mother of the dead child to beat them with a broom stick if they again came to her house. But this is not a conclusive evidence of her guilt. The circumstantial evidence in this case against her cannot be accepted as sufficient for conviction. Agreeing with the opinions of the learned Sessions Judge and of the minority of the Jury I acquit Sobratan of the charge against her.

The case of Zohra, however, stands on a different footing. It is admitted that she brought the child with her at 11-30 A. M. to her house. When Zaitun went to Zohra to demand the child, she was told that the child had come away with her grandmother on the Ekka on which she came from Dinapore Station that midday and passed by the house of the accused on her way to the complainant's house. No doubt it would have been well if the prosecution had examined the grandmother of the child. But the evidence is overwhelming upon the point that the child was not returned and that nobody either in the Mohalla or in the house of the complainant saw the child again. The attitude adopted by Zohra and Sobratan, when Zaitun and the mother of the dead child repeatedly went to them to demand the child, goes to show that there is no truth in the suggestion that the child was returned at midday. The Mohalla people are definite in their statement that they did not see the child go back. If the child had returned, how could the dead body then be found in the house of the accused? The finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the child was never returned may also be accepted. Whether or not any of the other inmates of the house joined in the conspiracy to kill the child, it is certain that Zohra must be in the conspiracy and she cannot possibly be exonerated of the charge of murder of the child.

Zohra was seen constantly in the house the whole time. She does not deny her presence in the house all along. If she was in the house, it is impossible for the murder to have taken place there without her knowledge and complicity, the house being so small, with the Angan of 3 cubits square, the northern and the southern verandahs 2 to 3 cubits and the eastern verandah 5 to 6 cubits. The child was missing ever since she had brought it to her house and yet she did not stir out of her house to make a search for the child. If she had sent the child back by herself, or on the Ekka with the child's grandmother, to the complainant's house, she would have been the first on hearing of the missing of the child to go to the complainant's house and to have her statement verified.

Disagreeing with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge and the minority of the Jury and agreeing with the opinion of the majority of the Jury, I hold that Zohra is guilty under section 302, Indian Penal Code. But in the circumstances of the case and in view of her age and of the fact that there is no evidence of what part she actually took in the murder or whether she alone did it or any other inmates of the house joined with her in the act, I do not think that she deserves the extreme penalty of the law and a sentence for transportation for life will meet the ends of justice.

Zohra is accordingly convicted under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and transported for life.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Decree accordingly.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), ss. 50, 307—Notice—Essentials of valid notice.

To render a person liable under section 307 of the U. P. Municipalities Act for failure to comply with a notice, the notice must be a legal notice and a notice issued by some authority competent to issue it. Where that authority is the Board or the Chairman of the Board, a notice issued and signed by any other officer of the Municipality is not a legal notice. [p. 308, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Mirzapore, dated the 20th September 1919.

Mr. G. P. Boys, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Additional Sessions Judge of Mirzapore, whereby he dismissed the appeal and upheld the order of Babu Ramji Das, Magistrate of the First Class, sentencing the applicant to a fine of Rs. 160. Several grounds are taken. The learned Counsel referred me to the procedure which was adopted in this case. There can be no doubt that the procedure abounds in irregularities and is by no means procedure authorised by law when a Court has to deal with an offence. If the irregularities were few in number, it might be possible for a Court to ignore them and to hold that they were irregularities which had crept into the case from mere carelessness or ignorance of the law. Even then it would be necessary to consider whether the irregularities complained of are such as to give cause for an apprehension that the individual prosecuted for the offence or the public would be liable to injury, but when the irregularities are so many as have taken place in the trial and the proceedings antecedent to trial as in the present case a Court cannot overlook them.

I propose to deal with one or two of the irregularities which I consider dangerous to the public, or which might easily result in considerable danger to the public. The offence is one punishable under section 307 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act, 1916. This provides that if a notice has been given under the provisions of this Act or under a rule or bye-law to a person requiring him to execute a work in respect of any property, moveable or immoveable, &c., the person shall be liable on conviction before a Magistrate to a fine which may extend to Rs. 500. It is hardly necessary to point out that the notice made punishable by this section must be a legal notice and a notice issued by some authority competent to issue such notice. It could never be contemplated that a notice which the law authorises the Board or the Chairman of the Board to issue can cover a notice issued and signed, say, by a Daftari or a peon in a Municipality which the Board or the Chairman may or may not have seen. In the present case the intention to issue a notice by the Board was contemplated and even ordered to be sent. The paper, however, containing the notice when it reached the person concerned and charged with disobedience of it, was, as a matter of fact, issued and signed by the Secretary, and there was nothing to show on the face of it that the Municipal Board had sanctioned the prosecution.

The section of the Act which deals with a matter of this kind is section 50. This requires that several powers, duties and functions shall be performed or discharged by the Chairman of the Board and not otherwise (section 50, clause E). Exception to this general authority is provided for in cases where there is an Executive Officer. It appears that in Mirzapur at the time, namely, the year 1918, there was no Executive Officer and if the Board wanted to issue a legal notice, it could only get it performed or discharged by the Chairman of the Board. I do not mean to lay down for a moment that the Chairman of the Board must go and tender or otherwise execute service of a notice required by the Municipal Act, but the person who receives what is said to be a notice, can question it if he does not find on the notice any signature of the Chairman guaranteeing that the notice is one sent by the Board. This so called notice was, as the evidence shows, taken to the house of business of the accused. It was then given to a Munib. No attempt, so far as the evidence shows, was made to seek for and so find the accused. It is not shown or suggested that the Munib was an adult male member of the family. It is suggested that he was a servant of the family but the "servant" contemplated by section 303 must be a servant ad hoc. The notice was not fixed on any conspicuous part of the building to which the notice related.

It is quite possible that a so called notice may be given to some person employed by the owner for particular duties not connected with the receipt of letters, notices, etc., and overlooked by such person and never brought to the knowledge of the owner or a member of the owner's family. There is a great difference between giving a notice to a male member of the family and fixing it to some conspicuous part of the building where the possibility and the probability is great that the owner must come to know of it within a reasonable time.

There is an important section in the Act which appears to have been overlooked, namely, section 314, which says that no Court shall take cognizance of such offences except on the complaint or upon information received from the Board or some person authorised by the Board by general or special order in this behalf. Neither the Board nor the Chairman of the Board nor any person authorised by the Board by general or special order has been shown in this case to have instituted the prosecution before the Court which dealt with it. The person who instituted the prosecution was the Secretary of the Board. The Secretary does not appear to have gone to the Court, to have handed in to the Court, the authority for his act, or to have sworn to the complaint.

As I have already shown, the Secretary is not a person who has been authorised by the Municipal Act to do work of this kind.

Here again it is quite possible to consider the necessity of this guarding section. An overzealous Secretary, not to speak of a Secretary influenced by some other motive, may run into Court and institute a complaint without proper authority to do so.

From the papers in this case it is evident that there were some searchings of heart, for, the Vice-Chairman of the Board on the 16th of May postponed proceedings and directed that the case should be put up before himself. In any case, I hold that the accused in this case did not receive what Act No. II of 1916 contemplates as a notice and that the Court had not jurisdiction to do what it did. Acting under my revisional powers I set aside the conviction and the order and direct that any fine or part of the fine that has been paid be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 813 OF 1919.
February 20, 1920.
Present :—Mr. Justice Piggott.
DHARAMRAJ AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 106, order under, when can be passed—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 452—Criminal trespass—Breach of peace—Order requiring security—Justification for order.

When a person is convicted of an offence a necessary ingredient of which is a breach of the peace, an order under section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code may lawfully be passed by the Magistrate.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 11th November 1919.

Mr. M. Ishaq Khan, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is as to the propriety of an order under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure binding over Dharamraj and three other persons to keep the peace, the said order following a conviction recorded under section 452 of the Indian Penal Code. The offence in question is one of aggravated house-trespass; the particular aggravation need not be considered. The question is, what was the nature of the house-trespass of which these applicants were found guilty? The finding is that they came with lathis prepared to assault Rai Singh, Ziladar of the Court of Wards, that Dharamraj aimed a blow at the Ziladar which was caught by the thatch of the house, that the Ziladar then took refuge inside his house and closed the doors, but the four applicants pushed the door open and assaulted the Ziladar inside his own house. It follows that the criminal trespass of which these men have been convicted is the entry of a house with intent to commit the offence of causing hurt. The conviction is, therefore, one of an offence a necessary ingredient of which is a breach of the peace. I have been referred to a good deal of case-law on the subject, but the case most directly in point is an old one, that of the Queen v. Jhapoo (1). I have no doubt that upon a conviction of criminal trespass, where the intention of the trespass is to commit a breach of the peace, an order under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, may lawfully be passed in the discretion of the Magistrate. This point is made all the clearer by a consideration of the case of Empress v. Kundan Singh (2), in which an order under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, was quashed on the ground that the criminal trespass of which the accused person had in that case been convicted was trespass on an empty house. It is unnecessary, therefore, for me to consider the somewhat larger question raised by the decision of this Court in Emperor v. Manik Rai (3), in which an interpretation was put on the words "involving a breach of the peace" in the section in question considerably wider than any which is necessary for the disposal of the present application.

One other point has been taken on behalf of the applicants. It is said that they acted in the heat of passion, under provocation afforded by an insult addressed to Dharamraj and Ram Das by the complainant Rai Singh, and that it is quite unlikely that they should ever feel disposed to repeat their offence. As I have found the order in question to be within the jurisdiction and discretion of the trying Magistrate, I should in any case be reluctant to interfere upon a mere question of discretion. In the present case, however, I do not think it can be said that an order which affords the Ziladar protection in his future dealings with these men is on the face of it such an improper exercise of discretion as to invite interference in revision by this Court. I dismiss this application.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152, O. XLI, r. 11—Amendment of decree—Appeal, dismissal of—Jurisdiction to amend decree.

Where a decree is confirmed upon appeal, the decree of the original Court becomes merged in the decree of the Appellate Court, and the latter Court alone has jurisdiction to amend the decree: this is so even in the case of a second appeal dismissed under rule 11 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code without notice to the respondent.

Revision of the order of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 5th April 1919, disallowing the application of amendment of decree in Civil Appeal No. 286 of 1915, decided on the 30th October 1916.

Mr M. R Bobde, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. V. Kukade, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—In Suit No. 133 of 1913, in the Court of the Munsif, Khamgaon, the present applicant obtained a decree for possession of certain property including possession of the field described in the decree as survey No. 486 of Kasba Shegaon. There was an appeal against this decision, No. 286 of 1915, in the Court of the District Judge, and the case reached this Court as Second Appeal No. 473 B of 1916, that second appeal being dismissed under Order XLI, rule 11, Act V of 1908 It was then discovered that survey No. 486 was a mistake for 485. An application had been made to the lower Appellate Court to correct the original decree, but it has been rejected on the ground that the original Court's decree and the decree of the lower Appellate Court have merged in this Court's decree in Second Appeal No. 473-B of 1 16, and, therefore the lower Appellate Court had no power to amend the decree, the only Court competent to do so being this Court.

The mistake is here admitted.

There is some difference of opinion in the High Courts as regards these amendments The Madras High Court holds that "the jurisdiction of a Court of first instance to amend a decree under section 206 was ousted by the confirmation of that decree on appeal;" and that this applies also to second appeals dismissed under section 551 of the old Code of Civil Procedure: Munisami Naidu v. Munisami Reddi (1). The Allahabad High Court in Asma Bibi v. Ahmad Husain (2) takes, after a review of the cases on the point, a similar view as does the Calcutta High Court in Una Sundari Devi v. Bindu Bashini Chowdhrani (3). The Bombay High Court, however, holds that the dismissal of an appeal under Order XLI, rule 11, leaves the decree of the lower Court untouched, neither confirmed, nor varied, nor reversed, and that such decree remains the decree of the lower Court which can amend it, in order to bring it into accordance with its judgment : see Bapu v. Vazir (4).

I think the view of the majority of the High Courts should prevail and direct the correction of the decree in Suit No. 133 of 1913 on the file of the Munsif, Khamgaon ; for field survey No. 486 therein shall be shown field survey No. 485 of Kasba Shegaon.

As the mistake seems to have been due to the present applicant's mistake in her plaint in the original suit, I do not give her her costs here or in the lower Appellate Court. Parties will bear their own costs in both Courts. I fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 15.

Hindu Law—Succession—Sudras—Illegitimate son, whether can succeed collaterally.

An illegitimate son of a Sudra cannot inherit the separate property of his father's legitimate son as a brother. [p. 307, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Thana, in Appeal No. 60 of 1915, amending the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Murbad, in Civil Suit No. 301 of 1913.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The question of law raised in this second appeal on the facts found by the lower Courts is whether an illegitimate son of a Sudra can inherit the separate property of his father's legitimate son as a brother.

The facts are that one Ganpatrao had a son Daulatrao by his first wife, two sons Raojirao and Balvantrao by his second wife, and an illegitimate son Dhakojirao by a kept mistress. Daulatrao was a separated member of the family and had acquired the property in suit; he died without an issue. The plaintiff claims his property under a sale deed passed in his favour by the sons of Raojirao, Balvantrao having died without any male issue. The defendant claims it under a sale deed by Dhakojirao. The contest between the two purchasers depends upon the rights of their respective vendors to inherit Daulatrao's property according to the Hindu Law. The parties, whose right of inheritance we are concerned with, are Sudras. Both the lower Courts have decided against the defendant, who now appeals to this Court and raises the question stated above.

The point was not argued in the lower Courts, and the reported decisions are clearly against the contention. See Ravji Mahadu Patil v. Sakuji Kaloji (1), Shome Shankar Rajendra Varere v. Rajesar Swami Jangam (2) and Ramalinga Muppan v. Pavadai Goundan (3). It is argued, however, that the ratio decidendi in Subramania Iyer v. Rathnavelu Chetty (4) is not consistent with the view that an illegitimate son is excluded from all collateral succession and that the decision in Sadu v. Baiza and Genu (5), approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jogendro Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Singh (6), has not been considered in the case of Ravji Mahadu Patil v. Shakuji Kaloji (1). It is urged that it is not possible to reconcile the view that a father is an heir to his illegitimate son and the express provision that an illegitimate son in the case of Sudras is entitled to share the property of his father with the other legitimate sons with the conclusion that the illegitimate son is excluded from all collateral succession in the family of his putative father. I have carefully considered these decisions and the provisions in the Mitakshara and the Mayukha bearing on this point. Personally I do not think that the two conclusions are irreconcilable. The question of collateral succession has been fully dealt with by Banerji, J., in Shome Shankar Rajendra Varere v. Rajesar Swami Jangam (2) and I do not think that any further discussion of the texts can serve any useful purposes. Bhashyam Ayyangar, J. in Ramalinga Muppan v. Pavadai Goundan (3) thought that it was tolerably well established that an illegitimate son, though he might succeed as heir to his paternal and maternal estate, had no claim to inherit to collaterals. Though the case of Sadu v. Baiza and Genu (5) has not been referred to in the case of Ravji Mahadu Patil v. Shakuji Kaloji (1), it is clear on the facts of that case that the point as to collateral succession did not arise for decision. Nanabhai Haridas, J., observes at page 46 of the report as follows:—"Whether he can as a brother inherit anything from them or not, is a question upon which we are not called upon to pronounce any opinion in this case, for the plaintiff here does not claim any self-acquired property of Mahadu, nor are we called upon to express any opinion upon the other question, whether he can inherit anything from collaterals." The judgments in Subramania Iyer v. Rathnavelu Chetty (4), particularly the judgments of Sadasiva Aiyyar, J., and Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., show that the point for decision in that case was quite different, and that the decision as to the right of the putative father to succeed to his illegitimate son did not necessarily conflict with the view accepted by that Court in other cases as to the exclusion of an illegitimate son from collateral succession.

The current of decisions is strong and uniform and it would require very clear texts to induce any Court to re-consider the point. There is no such express text in favour of allowing an illegitimate son a right to collateral succession. On the contrary, I think that the decisions are fully justified by the Mitakshara and the Mayukha The well-known verses which lay down the order of succession in the case of obstructed heritage are applicable to all classes (see Mitakshara, Chapter II, s. 1, pl. 1 and 2; Stokes' Hindu Law Books, page 477), while the rule allowing the illegitimate sons to share the father's property with his legitimate sons is a special rule applicable to Sudras only. It seems to me very difficult to interpret the word bhratra (brothers) used in the text relating to succession as including illegitimate sons of the father in the case of Sudras and excluding them in the case of other classes. Neither Vijnaneswara nor Nilkantha in expounding the text has suggested such an interpretation: and according to all recognised rules of construction such an interpretation does not appear to me to be correct. The fact that the same word is used in the immediately preceding text specially relating to Sudras and in the commentary thereon with reference to illegitimate sons in relation to the legitimate sons of the same father does not appear to me to afford a sufficient basis for interpreting the same word in two different senses when applied to different classes in one and the same text expressly relating to all classes.

Besides a dasiputra does not get the full share which an aurasa son can get: and this differential treatment accorded to him by a special text cannot be applied to the case of collateral succession. At least there is no express text for it; and it would be extending the application of a special rule for Sudras beyond the limits mentioned in the text, if illegitimate sons were treated on the same footing as legitimate half brothers as to the order of succession and the extent of the shares.

I think that the view accepted in these decisions as to illegitimate sons not being entitled to collateral succession among Sudras is correct.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal and confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court with costs.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur.

Appeal dismissed;
Decree confirmed.

Custom—Alienation—Extravagance of alienor—Consideration—Rent and interest due on mortgage—Necessity—Burden of proof.

Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that four mortgage deeds executed by their father shall not affect their reversionary rights. The first was a possessory mortgage, while the other three were deeds of further charge, the consideration being chiefly rent and interest due under the 1st mortgage. It appeared that the rent was enhanced every time a new deed was executed. The first Court, finding that the land was ancestral and that the mortgages were not proved to have been for necessity, gave the plaintiffs a decree. On appeal the District Judge agreed with the Court of first instance as regards the first deed but held that both considera tion and necessity had been proved with regard to the remaining three and modified the decree accordingly. The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to the High Court:

Held, (1) that the mortgages being in favour of the defendants themselves, they ought to have clearly established by evidence that the rent charged was fair and that there was necessity for enhancing the rate of rent after every three years: [p 309, col. 1.]

(2) that the mortgagor having been proved to be extravagant and it not being shown that he managed his property well and carefully, it could not be said that the subsequent three mortgages were for necessity and that, therefore, they were not binding on the plaintiffs [p 309, col 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 13th January 1919, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 24th August 1918, decreeing the claim.

Dr Shuaib-ud-Din, for the Appellants.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the plaintiffs for a declaration that four mortgage deeds, dated the 24th of May 1906, 23rd of July 1910, 18th of January 1913 and 23rd of October 1915, executed by their father, mortgaging 37 kanals 15 marlas of ancestral land, shall not be binding on them after the death of their father. The suit was resisted by the mortgagees on the ground that the land was not ancestral and that the mortgages were made for consideration and necessity and, therefore, binding upon the plaintiffs The Court of first instance held that the land was ancestral, that the mortgages were not proved to have been made for necessity and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in the terms of the relief claimed in the plaint. On an appeal by the defendants, the lower Appellate Court agreed with the Court of first instance as regards the mortgage-deed dated the 24th of May 1906, in holding that necessity had not been established, but as regards the remaining three mortgages the Appellate Court took a different view and held that both consideration and necessity had been proved. It accordingly modified the decree passed by the Court of first instance. The Appellate Court, therefore, gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for a declaration that only the mortgage-deed dated the 24th of May 1906 shall not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs on the death of their father Partaba. The claim relating to the remaining three mortgages was dismissed.

Two appeals have been preferred from the decree of the lower Appellate Court to this Court: (1) by the defendants taking exception to that portion of the decree by which the mortgage deed, dated the 24th of May 1906, had been held not to be binding on the plaintiffs, and (2) appeal by the plaintiffs challenging the decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing their suit relating to the other three mortgages.

So far as the appeal of the defendants-appellants relating to the mortgage deed dated the 24th of May 1906 is concerned, there is very little room for argument. The decision of the Appellate Court is based upon findings of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal. The mortgage money Rs. 700 was made up of two items, namely, Rs. 300 due on two bonds executed three days before the mortgage in question, namely on the 21st of May 1906. The defendants attempted to prove that these sums were required for the payment of a decree. The decree, however, was never produced. Some oral evidence was given in proof of the consideration and necessity. Both the Courts below agreed in disbelieving the evidence. The second item of Rs. 400 is said to have been paid before the Sub-Registrar in cash; but the purpose for which the sum was borrowed was not mentioned in the deed. Evidence was called to prove that this sum was required by Partaba to meet the marriage expenses of his daughter. It was, however, clearly brought out in the evidence that the marriage of Partaba's only daughter had taken place in Sambat 1952, long before the execution of the deed of mortgage. Necessity, therefore, was not proved with regard to either of the items. The two Courts below were, therefore, fully justified in decreeing the claim of the plaintiffs with regard to the mortgage of Rs. 700. There is no force in the appeal of the defendants-appellants which must, therefore, be dismissed.

As regards the remaining three mortgages, the two Courts have differed and I have to decide which of the two Courts has arrived at a correct conclusion. These three mortgages were also executed in favour of the same mortgagee in whose favour the possessory mortgage dated the 24th of May 1905 had been executed.

The mortgage dated the 23rd of July 1910 is for Rs. 232-8. It is composed of four items, Rs. 86 due on account of three years' rent on the land comprised in the original mortgage-deed, Rs. 20 stated to have been taken beforehand for what purpose no one knows, Rs 20 were paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar, and Rs. 6-8 for deed expenses. The Court of first instance held that the original mortgage dated the 24th of May 1906 having been held to be invalid, Rs. 186, being the rent of the mortgaged land, must necessarily be disallowed. No necessity was proved for the two items of Rs. 20 each.

The third deed, dated the 18th of January 1913, was for Rs. 270 composed of two items, Rs. 231 representing rent for three years in respect of the mortgaged land, Rs. 39 were taken beforehand and it was not shown by evidence for what necessary purpose the latter sum was borrowed.

The fourth mortgage, dated the 23rd of October 1915, was for Rs. 280 composed of three items, Rs. 261 rent for three years, Rs. 13 cash, and Rs. 6 deed expenses. No necessity was proved for the Rs. 13 taken in cash. With regard to the item representing the rent for three years, in each of these mortgages there is one fact clearly noticeable. For the first three years rent is charged at Rs. 62 a year; in the next mortgage the rent is calculated at Rs. 77 a year and in the last and the fourth mortgage the rent is mentioned at Rs. 87 a year. The mortgage being in favour of the defendants themselves, they ought to have clearly established by evidence that the rent charged was fair and that there was necessity for enhancing the rate of rent after every three years. There is entire absence of any evidence on this point. The Court of first instance accordingly held that these mortgages were not binding upon the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court disagreed with the Court of first instance with regard to these three mortgages on the ground that having mortgaged the whole of his land to the mortgagees, Partaba was left without any means of maintaining himself and his family and that, therefore, he was driven to take the land on lease from the mortgagees. It, therefore, came to the conclusion that the amount had been taken for necessity. As regards the other small items mentioned in the three deeds, the lower Appellate Court held that they were too petty to be taken notice of. It has been contended on behalf of the defendants that having regard to the fact that Partaba was left without any means to support himself and his family, the three mortgages in question must be taken to have been executed for necessity. In support of this argument the learned Vakil for the defendants has relied upon Piran Ditta v. Moti (1). I have read this ruling carefully and I fail to see that it in any way helps the case of the defendants. In that case it was not shown that the mortgagor had been guilty of extravagance or immorality It was positively found that he managed the affairs of his family carefully and economically, but owing to his slender circumstances had to borrow money to meet the expenses of his family. In this case the facts are quite the contrary. It has been shown that the mortgage for Rs. 700 by Partaba had not been made for any legal necessity. The whole of the property had been mortgaged without any apparent need. The charge of extravagance, therefore, is fully made out against him. It is not shown in this case that Partaba managed his property well and carefully. The reasons given by the lower Appellate Court appear to be wholly inadequate. I, therefore, accept the appeal of the plaintiffs and set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court with respect to the mortgages of 1910, 1913, and 1915 and restore that of the first Court with costs.

Appeal accepted.

Raja NARENDRA LAL KHAN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Contract—Privity of contract—Stranger, whether can sue on contract—Trustee and cestui que trust—Covenant by assignee to pay third person, whether can be enforced by latter.

A contract can create no right or liability in a person who is not a party to it, unless he can claim or be charged through a party, as in the case of a cestui que trust claiming through the trustee. But a contract may be in form with a named person, and yet be intended to secure a benefit to another as cestui que trust in such a way that the latter may sue in his own right to enforce the contract. [p. 311, cols. 1 & 2.]

The defendant No. 2 demised to the defendant No. 1 for a term of three years a zemindari on 8th October 1910 on a yearly rental of Rs. 10,000. Out of this sum of Rs. 10,000 a sum of Rs. 6,000 was to be appropriated by the defendant No. 1 in reduction of certain amounts due to him from the defendant No. 2, and he was to pay the balance of Rs. 4,000 to the defendant No. 2 annually for three years. By an Indenture, dated 16th December 1910, the defendant No. 2 assigned to the plaintiff by way of mortgage the sums payable to him by the defendant No. 1 under the demise of 8th October 1910. Afterwards, by an Indenture, dated the 23rd January 1911, the defendant No. 2 assigned to the defendant No. 1 all arrears of rent of the zemindari and also granted him a receipt for all rents payable to him by the defendant No. 1 for three years, viz., Rs. 12,000, and in that Indenture the defendant No. 1 entered into a covenant with the defendant No. 2 to pay Rs. 10,000 and interest which the defendant No. 2 was liable to pay to the plaintiff under the assignment by way of mortgage and also agreed to indemnify the defendant No. 2 for all claims and demands in respect thereof. The defendant No. 1 paid Rs. 5,000 to the plaintiff by way of part payment of plaintiff's dues from the defendant No. 2. In a suit by the plaintiff for recovery of the balance from the defendant No. 1:

Held, (1) that there was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 and that, therefore, the suit was not maintainable: [p. 311, col. 1.]

(2) that the mere covenant to pay the plaintiff did not make the defendant No. 1 a trustee for the plaintiff in respect either of the rent of Rs. 12,000 or of the arrears of rent. [p. 311, col. 2]

Mr H. D. Bose (with him Mr. H. K. Mitra), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the judgment of Greaves, J., delivered on the 20th February 1917, whereby he dismissed the suit with costs.

The facts are set out fully at pages 105, 106 and in the first paragraph of page 107 of the paper-book; they depend upon documents and there is no dispute about them.

With regard to the third paragraph on page 107, the learned Judge's finding that he had no evidence as to the authority of P. C. Mitter is contested.

It was argued that the evidence of the plaintiff shewed that the 2nd defendant and an officer of the Raja on a certain occasion told him that the Raja was going to take the liablity of re-payment to the plaintiff and asked, if he was agreeable: that the plaintiff said if the Raja took the liability he was agreeable to advance the money; and it was urged that but for this representation the plaintiff would not have advanced the money. It is to be noted first that no date was given for this conversation, and in the second place the plaintiff said he was not sure of the name of the Raja's officer, but that he thought his name was Purna.

I do not think the abovementioned contention is correct. The plaintiff himself said later in his evidence that it was at Amarendra's request that he paid the money.

Amarendra was A. N. Dutt, who is now dead. He was the brother of H. N. Dutt, the attorney in whose office the plaintiff's mortgage of the 16th December 1910 was prepared.

I think it is evident that the period of time to which the plaintiff was referring in his evidence with reference to the visit of P. C. Mitter was the later date, viz., on or about the 23rd January 1911.

It appears from the Raja's letter of the 22rd January 1911 to his attorney H. N. Dutt that Purna Babu was going to Calcutta and the Raja requested his attorney to act in consultation with him; that was with reference to the transaction which materialised in the deed dated the 23rd January 1911.

There is no evidence to shew that prior to that date the Raja contemplated taking upon himself the liability to pay the sum due from the 2nd defendant to the plaintiff: and further there is no evidence that in December 1916, when the money was advanced by the plaintiff, P. C. Mitter had any authority to represent that if the plaintiff would advance the money, the Raja would undertake the liability to repay it, even if any such representation was in fact made.

The suit is not brought under section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, but the cause of action is based upon the ground that under the circumstances of this case the 1st defendant became a trustee for the plaintiff in respect of (1) the rent of Rs. 12,000 which he was liable to pay to the 2nd defendant under the lease of the 8th October 1910 during the term of three years thereby created and (2) the 75 per cent. of the realisable arrears of rent.

By the deed of 23rd January 1911 the 2nd defendant assigned to the 1st defendant all arrears of rent and granted him thereby a receipt for the rent payable by the 1st defendant to the 2nd defendant in respect of the demised premises from the 26th December 1910 for the full term of three years, and the 1st defendant entered into the covenant with the 2nd defendant to pay the Rs. 10,000 and interest due from the 2nd defendant to the plaintiff and agreed to indemnify the 2nd defendant for all claims and demands in respect thereof.

There is no doubt that the 1st defendant was aware of the mortgage to the plaintiff of the 16th December 1910, for it is recited in the deed of 23rd January 1911 and the assignment created by that deed was, therefore, subject to the plaintiff's mortgage.

There is here no question of privity of contract between the plaintiff and the first defendant: a contract can create no right or liability in a person who is not a party to it, unless he can claim or be charged through a party, as in the case of a cestui que trust claiming through a trustee. There is, however, no doubt that a contract may be in form with a named person, and yet be intended to secure a benefit to another as a cestui que trust in such away that the latter may sue in his own right to enforce the contract. In my judgment the 1st defendant did not become a trustee of the plaintiff in respect of either of the two matters hereinbefore referred to. As regards the first, viz., the rent of Rs. 12,000 payable to the 2nd defendant by the 1st defendant, there was nothing more than a personal liability of the 1st defendant to the 2nd defendant, of which the 2nd defendant by the deed of 23rd January 1911 relieved and discharged the 1st defendant. I fail to see how the mere covenant which the 1st defendant entered into with the 2nd defendant to pay the plaintiff the amount due on his mortgage can possibly be said to have created the 1st defendant a trustee in respect of the Rs. 12,000 or of his personal liability in respect thereof.

As regards the second matter, viz., the 75 per cent. of the arrears of rent, although the arrears of rent were absolutely assigned by the 2nd defendant to the 1st defendant by the deed of 23rd January 1911, I find nothing in the deed indicating that the 1st defendant bound himself to pay the amount due to the plaintiff out of such arrears of rent: the 1st defendant took the assignment of the arrears of rent subject to the plaintiff's mortgage, but that in my judgment by itself is not sufficient, even when coupled with his personal covenant with the 2nd defendant to pay the amount due to the plaintiff, to constitute the 1st defendant a trustee of the arrears of rent, when received, for the plaintiff.

Further, even if the 1st defendant did constitute himself a trustee of the arrears of rent, as urged by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff, it would be necessary for the plaintiff, in order to succeed in this suit, to prove that the 1st defendant had in fact received the arrears of rent, or at all events some part of the arrears.

The learned Judge has found upon this point that he had not sufficient materials before him to decide the 9th issue which was stated as follows:—"Has the 1st defendant realised any arrears of rent and, if so, how much.

The evidence in relation to this matter is that of J. N. Mukerjee at page 42 of the paper-book. He stated that in the year 30th Pous 13 8 to 15th Sravan Rs. 28 243-14 6 were realised and Rs. 28,459 6 0 were spent. The latter sum included the Rs. 5,000 paid to the plaintiff in March 1911 and Rs. 20,034-10 in respect of cesses, taxes and Government revenue. As regards arrears the only evidence is that the Rs. 28,243 "was realised as rent. The roker will show that this amount was realised as rent: the abstract of account does not show it. It does not show how much was realised from Patnidars or for arrears of rent."

"There is nothing to shew how much was realised for arrears of rent,"

This does not prove that any arrears of rent were realised, for the statements above referred to are consistent with none having been received. It was urged on behalf of the plaintiff that the matter was solely within the 1st defendant's knowledge and that the plaintiff could not prove the realisation of any arrears of rent and, therefore, an account should now be ordered.

I do not think this can be acceded to. The plaintiff did not ask at the trial for an adjournment for further enquiry into the defendant's books for the purpose of ascertaining if any arrears had been collected; and further I should have thought it would not have been impossible for him to have proved the collection of some arrears by calling some of the tenants liable for arrears, if in fact any arrears had been collected.

In my judgment the plaintiff failed to prove the collection of any arrears of rent by the 1st defendant and for this reason as well as for the reasons already mentioned his suit would fail.

In the course of the argument our attention was drawn by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff to the case (amongst others) of Deb Narain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal (1) and he relied particularly only upon a passage at page 11[illegible],* in which the late Chief Judge referred to Touche v. Metropolitan Railway Warehousing Company (2) and quoted a passage from Lord Hatherley's judgment as follows: "The case comes within the authority that where a sum is payable by A B for the benefit of C D, C D can claim under the contract as if it had been made with himself."

The learned Counsel relied upon that as a statement laying down the general law and urged that this case was covered thereby. I think it is desirable to draw attention to what was said by Cotton, L. J., with reference to the abovementioned passage in Gandy v. Gandy (3):—

"Of the cases that have been referred to, I will notice the last mentioned by Mr. Hemming, that of Touche v. Metropolitan Railway Warehousing Company (2), where there was an arrangement between a promoter of a Company and another person that a certain sum should be paid out of the funds of the Company to that other person; the Company seems to have admitted the arrangement, and in the articles there was a contract or stipulation that the money should be paid to the promoter, in order that the arrangement might be carried out. There Lord Hatherley held that the other person who was to get the money was entitled to sue under that contract. What Lord Hatherley says is this [Touche v. Metropolitan Railway Warehousing Company (2)]:—'The case comes within the authority that, where a sum is payable by A B for the benefit of C D, C D can claim under the contract as if it had been made with himself. It is possible that Walker may, as he states in his answer, not be under any personal liability to the plaintiffs; but I think that, on the evidence, the plaintiffs were to be paid when Walker got the money, and they knew that by the articles of the Company he was to be paid.' Now, if that is intended to lay down the rule as a general proposition of law in the general terms there used, it is not consistent with the other case referred to, Empress Engineering Company, In re (4), but it may be that on the facts of the former case it was considered that the contract between Walker and the Company was entered into by Walker as a trustee for and on behalf of the plaintiffs; and, if so, that is in accordance with what I understand to be the law. But the late Master of the Rolls, in Empress Engineering Company, In re (4), dealing with Touche's case (2) said this in the course of the argument:—'In that case the Lord Chancellor finds, as a fact, that Walker was to receive the money as a trustee for the plaintiffs. If you can make out that Jones and Pride are cestui que trust, that alters the case. It appears to me that they are not. The promoters were liable to Jones and Pride, who are simply their creditors. A being liable to B, C agrees with A to pay B. That does not make B a cestui que trust.' This shows that the general terms used by Lord Hatherley must be taken with some qualification as laying down the general law." The judgment of Cotton, L. J., is important, as showing that the passage quoted from Lord Hatherley's judgment should not be read as having the unqualified effect as contended by the learned Counsel for the appellant, but that the general terms used therein must be taken with some qualification as laying down the general law.

In my judgment this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Whatever powers a Hindu widow may have under the Hindu Law of adopting a son, these powers cannot be controlled by the will of her deceased father-in-law If, however, she adopts a son contrary to the terms of the Will, that would affect his rights to take under the Will as a persona designata, but would not in any way affect his right to be considered as the grandson of the testator under the adoption. JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J. One Vithaldas and his son Bhagwandas were members of a Hindu joint family. Bhagwandas died in 1871 leaving a widow Ichhubai and a daughter Bhikhibai. Vithaldas died in 1875, the sole surviving co-parcener.

On the 3rd May 1875, he made a Will. He left all his property, moveable and immoveable, to his daughter-in-law Ichhubai for life But he said: 'if she likes, she may take upon her lap an adopted son. In case a boy is adopted her adopted son will become the owner of the whole of my property.' At the end of the clause are the words 'in case Bhikhibai happens to have a son she (Ichhubai) should not take a boy in adoption.'

Clause 3 is as follows:—

"If Ichhubai happens to die without having taken a boy in adoption, then all that property mentioned in the first clause shall after her death become of the ownership of Bhikhibai, the daughter of my deceased son Bhagwan by his first wife and the wife of Tribhowan Varjiwan and of the sons that may be born to her; no other kinsman whosoever shall have any claim, right or interest."

Ichhubai adopted a son in 1896, but at that time Bhikhibai had a son, the plaintiff in the case, born on 14th October 1891. After attaining his majority the plaintiff filed this suit against the adopted son defendant No. 1 and various other defendants alleged to be in possession of the property of Vithaldas, praying that he should be put in possession of the plaint properties. The defendants denied the right of the plaintiff to inherit the property and urged that his claim was time-barred. The defendants other than defendant No. 1 relied upon alienations in their favour either by defendant No. 1 or by Ichhubai.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was not entitled to inherit the property of Vithaldas as an heir under Hindu Law, that he was not entitled to claim the property of Vithaldas as a donee under the Will, and that the property of Vithaldas did not devolve to Bhikhibai under his Will.

Accordingly he dismissed the suit with costs. From that decision the plaintiff has appealed to this Court. In the first place it is clear that whatever powers of adoption Ichhubai had under Hindu Law, Vithaldas had no power to control them by his Will. He could, however, leave his property to Ichhubai's adopted son as a persona designata, provided the adopted son was born in his lifetime. The words at the end of clause 1 of the Will 'in case Bhikhibai happens to have a son she should not take a son in adoption' impose a condition that the adopted son must be adopted before Bhikhibai had a son, in order to enable him to take under the Will. It was just as if Ichhubai had a power to appoint, the power being defeated by the birth of a son to Bhikhibai. The above words do appear to have been written at the end of clause 1 as an afterthought, but we agree with the trial Court that it would not be safe to conclude that they were inserted after the Will was executed.

Reading clause 3 it would seem that the testator first intended that Bhikhibai should take no interest if Ichhubai adopted a son. Then it may have occurred to him that he wanted his estate to go to Bhikhibai and her sons if she had any and that, therefore, the birth of a son to Bhikhibai should put an end to the right of Ichhubai to appoint a person who should take the estate, so the last sentence was added to clause 1.

As the 1st defendant was adopted after Bhikhibai had a son, it is clear that he cannot take as a persona designata under the Will.

Bhikhibai died in 1897 a few weeks before Ichhubai, and the right of the plaintiff to succeed to the estate after the death of Ichhubai depends on the question whether the remainder given to Bhikhibai by the Will was vested or contingent.

It has been urged that the testator intended that Bhikhibai should have a vested remainder, liable to be divested if Ichhubai adopted a son before Bhikhibai had a son. But whatever the testator may have intended and although we must endeavour to give effect as far as possible to the testator's intentions, we are bound to construe the Will according to well-established rules, and give the written words their plain grammatical meaning. The testator evidently had in his mind various contingencies, and unfortunately he did not obtain expert advice, so that the written words should express his intentions regarding the devolution of the estate, according as those contingencies might or might not happen. Moreover, his difficulties were increased by the fact, as I think that he changed his mind after he had written clause 3.

To enable a remainder to be vested there must be a direct gift. Without the words added to clause 1 it is clear that Bhikhibai only took a remainder contingent on Ichhubai dying without taking a son in adoption. But it has been urged that on account of the added words in clause 1, we must read clause 3 as if it ran, 'if Ichhubai happens to die without having taken a boy in adoption who can take the estate under the condition mentioned in clause 1'. In any event those words would not create a vested remainder, but a remainder contingent on a son being born to Bhikhibai before Ichhubai adopted, or Ichhubai dying without having adopted. The only possible chance the plaintiff has of succeeding would be if his mother's contingent interest on his birth became a vested one. But it is impossible to read clause 3 in that way

Starting with the fact that on the death of the testator there was no direct gift of the remainder to Bhikhibai, but a gift contingent on the happening of an uncertain event, viz., the dying of Ichhubai without having taken a boy in adoption, I cannot say, in face of the fact that Ichhubai did adopt that the contigency mentioned in clause 3 has occurred.

The result must be that on the death of Ichhubai, as defendant No. 1 could not take, there was an intestacy.

The plaintiff urges that defendant No. 1 is excluded from the inheritance because his adoption was contrary to the terms of the Will.

But that would only affect his rights to take under the Will as a persona designata, and would in no way affect his right to be considered as the grandson of Vithaldas under the adoption, which his mother undoubtedly had a right to make as a Hindu widow. But even if the defendant No. 1 could not succeed, we are told, and it does not seem to be disputed, that there are nearer heirs to Vithaldas than the plaintiff, who could only succeed as a Bandhu. In my opinion, therefore, the decree of the lower Court must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12—Appeal—Exclusion of time spent in obtaining copies, extent of—Appellant, duty of.

The time for any given appeal can only be extended by the period which is necessary to obtain essential documents for the Court to which the appeal is made, provided the appellant applies once and for all for every such document before the period of limitation for his appeal has run out. Section 12 of the Limitation Act does not contemplate or allow an appellant to apply for a series of documents one after the other and to claim that his time of appeal be extended merely because he has applied within the successive periods of what he contends is the extended limitation of time.

Application under section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by a creditor who wishes to raise various questions in an appeal on the order of discharge granted by the learned Judge of Saharanpur. The only matter before us is whether the appeal should be allowed, it being contended that the appeal is out of time. Having regard to the terms of section 12 of the Limitation Act, we are of opinion that section 12 merely extends the time for any given appeal by the period which is necessary to obtain essential documents for the Court to which the appeal is being made, and that it does not contemplate and does not allow an appellant to apply for a series of documents one after the other and to claim that his time of appeal is extended merely because he has applied within the successive periods of what he contends is the extended limitation of time. In other words, an appellant must apply under section 12 once and for all for every essential document before the period of limitation of his appeal has run out. He cannot seek in aid the extended period if he find later that an essential document is omitted. Well, that being so, it is quite clear that on the dates the 90 days had expired without the appellant having applied for the decree and, therefore, as far as this application seeks to be brought within the provisions of section 12 and is an application as of right, the application must fail. But Mr. Nihal Chand has asked that this appeal may be admitted on the general grounds which are allowed to us in our discretion. We have considered the matter and we are willing to admit the appeal, and we are influenced to some extent by the fact that the order of the District Judge of Saharanpur seems to us an order difficult to work out in practice and one which on consideration by the High Court may require some modification. In these circumstances we allow the application, not under section 12, but under section 5 and we give to the respondent on the application the costs of this application and fix them at Rs. 32.

Where in a suit a question arises as to the amount of money spent by a deceased person for a particular purpose, a statement, in his Will specifying the amount so spent is not admissible in evidence under section 32 of the Evidence Act, inasmuch as the statement is not made against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the deceased [p. 317, col. 1]

A memo. of expenses made by the deceased is also inadmissible in evidence, if it was not made in the ordinary course of business [p. 317, col. 1.]

The erroneous omission before the lower Courts to object to the admission of evidence does not make that evidence relevant and the High Court must entirely disregard such evidence. [p. 317, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Nasik, in Appeal No. 32 of 1916, modifying the decree passed by the Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge at Nasik, in Suit No. 210 of 1916.

Mr. D. S. Varde, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. C. Virkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the plaint property, Rs. 330-8-0 for arrears of rent, and future rent at Rs. 10 per month until possession, alleging that the property was ancestral property of the plaintiff; that it was almost completely built by his father Hari; that at the time of Hari's death building materials to the extent of Rs. 800 were left; that Hari died on the 16th July 1904; that after Hari's death the affairs of the minor plaintiff were looked after by other persons; that Annaji, the deceased father of the defendants, undertook to complete the plaint house on condition that the building materials were to be used; that the house was to be kept in repairs out of rent; that Annaji incurred expense to the extent of Rs. 100 to Rs. 150 in completing the house; that after Annaji's death in 1912, although plaintiff's guardian demanded possession, possession was not delivered.

The trial Court decreed that the defendants should put the plaintiff in possession of the plaint property; that the defendants should pay to the plaintiff Rs. 110-8-0 and interest on Rs 110-8-0 at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of decree till satisfaction, and that the defendants should pay rent at Rs. 6 per mensem to the plaintiff from institution of the suit till the happening first of any one of the three events mentioned in Order XX, rule 12 (1) (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. On appeal the lower Appellate Court directed that the plaintiff should recover possession of the house on payment of Rs. 664 0-0 to the defendants.

The main question in the suit is, what was the amount spent by Annaji, the father of the defendants, in completing the building? The defendants said that the amount was Rs. 730, and they relied upon Annaji's Will and a memo. of expenses prepared by Annaji, which showed that Annaji had spent that amount. It does not appear that any objection was taken in the trial Court to the admission of the Will and the memo. as evidence. The trial Judge held that the memo. was a useless piece of evidence. There was nothing to support the version of the defendants that Rs. 730 were spent on the plaint house save the mention made in the Will, and apparently the trial Judge did not rely upon the statement in the Will.

THAKURJI v. NANDA AHIR.

In appeal again it does not seem to have been argued that the Will and the memo. were inadmissible in evidence The learned Subordinate Judge said that Annaji's relationship with plaintiff and Annaji's willingness to complete the house at the request of the Panchas led him to say that Annaji would not name a bogus sum in his Will. The memo. was carefully examined by him, which showed that all the items except the two items of Rs. 38 8 0 and Rs. 27-8-0 were spent on the repairs of the house, and after taking an account he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was to pay Rs. 664 to the defendants.

It has now been urged before us in second appeal that neither the Will nor the memo. was admissible under section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act, and it seems quite clear to us that that contention is a sound one, as the statement in Annaji's Will that he had spent Rs. 730 in effecting the repairs of the house is not a statement made against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of Annaji, nor can it be said that the memo., said to be made by him, was made in the ordinary course of business. The Legislature has provided that statements made by deceased persons shall only be admissible in evidence when certain conditions are fulfilled. We are satisfied that neither the Will nor the memo. are admissible under section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. But it has been argued that in second appeal we should not consider the admissibility of this evidence as no objection was taken to its admission in either of the lower Courts. At first sight that seems a reasonable proposition, as if Pleaders in the lower Courts do not take objections to the admission of evidence, then the Judges in the lower Courts do not consider whether it is admissible or not, and we do not have the advantage of their opinion on that question. But it has been laid down by the Privy Council in Miller v. Babu Madho Das (1) that the erroneous omission before the lower Courts to object to the admission of evidence does not make that evidence relevant, and, therefore, their Lordships in the appeal before them laid down that they must, as the High Court ought to have done, entirely disregard that evidence. Following that decision, we must in this appeal entirely disregard the Will and the memo. The result follows that they are not evidence, and that they cannot be relied upon to prove what Annaji spent on this house. In our opinion, therefore, the appeal must succeed and the decree of the trial Court restored. The defendants must pay the plaintiff's costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Decree reversed.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 20th September 1917.

Mr. Janki Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this second appeal is Sri Thakurji through Parmeshri Das. The suit was instituted by one Nanda Ahir and the relief claimed by him was that a decree might be given him for possession of 15 gandas and $4\frac{1}{2}$ dants share together with sir land, etc., by removal of the unlawful possession of the defendant, first party, and cancelment of a wakfnama so called dated the 1st of November 1911. In the lower Appellate Court's judgment the facts are given that on the 1st of April 1901 Sovai Ahir, father of the plaintiff, executed a deed of gift of $1\frac{1}{2}$ pies out of 15 gandas and $4\frac{1}{2}$ dants in favour of the defendant No. 1.

The allegation was that this property was the joint property of the family; that Sovai aforesaid had no right to give it in gift; that the defendant had taken possession of the entire 15 gandas and $4\frac{1}{2}$ dants; that the property was not the self-acquired property of Sovai. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that he agrees with the Munsif that it was satisfactorily proved that Sovai acquired the property in question from the income of the joint ancestral property and that at the time he acquired it, he, Nanda and his other sons were joint with him, and that Sovai had no right to give the property away by gift. The lower Appellate Court decreed the plaintiff's claim for recovery of possession of $1\frac{1}{2}$ pies only and declared the deed of gift in respect of it invalid. On behalf of the appellant it is contended that the gift, being only of a small portion of the donor's property, was valid under the Hindu Law, and in support of this contention reference is made to a passage in the Mitakshara, being Slokas 28 and 29 of the Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 1, in part 2 of the Law of Inheritance. Reference is also made to the case of Gopal Chand Pande v. Babu Kunwar Singh (1) and Raghunath Prasad v. Gobind Prasad (2). In this last named case the learned Judges say: "That an examination of the authorities is sufficient to show that a father is competent to deal with ancestral property, not only for the especial exigencies mentioned by the Judge, but also to make 'pious and reverential gifts to Brahmans, as Brahmutra Krishnarpana,' also 'gifts from affection towards Vishnu and other divinities.'" Looking into the original text, in the passage quoted, this seems to be an extension of the word there used. Paragraph 27 begins by saying that it is settled that ownership in the father's and grandfather's estate is by birth, and paragraph 28 is cited as an exception to the above, but one of the limitations attached to this exception is that the alienation must be during a season of distress (apat kale) for the sake of the family and specially for pious purposes. I do not think we can eleminate the words "during a season of distress" from the rest. Following the ordinary rules of interpretation they qualify the following words; and in the present case, it has not been established that the transfer in dispute was made "during a season of distress." It is suggested that the mention made in the plaint in paragraph 2, namely, "that the plaintiff was sentenced to transportation for life in a murder case and after sixteen years he was released and came here in Jeth last," covers the provision "during a season of distress." I have been referred to no evidence which shows that the transfer was made "during a season of distress." I do not think it safe to take this exception and to qualify it in any way. Then, besides that, we have the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3), which lays down broadly that joint family property cannot be the subject of a gift, sale or mortgage by one co-parcener except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-parceners. For the passage from the Mitakshara see page 442.*

For these reasons I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant Municipality from removing the disputed otla that he had raised, alleging that the defendant's notice of the 23rd October 1913 for its removal was illegal and ultra vires. The very simple fact appears from the evidence that the plaintiff built this otla without obtaining permission of the Municipality under section 96 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act, and having built without that leave, the Municipality were entitled under sub-clause (5) to issue a notice requiring such building or addition to be altered or removed, and under section 154 (6) they were entitled to give notice that if the plaintiff did not comply with the notice to remove, the work would be done by the Municipality at the plaintiff's costs.

The main question which seems to have been tried in both the lower Courts was whether the ground on which the otla was built was part of a public street or not. The first issue in the trial Court was whether the site of the otla in dispute belonged to, and as such had been in possession of, the plaintiff. The trial Judge held that the site did not belong to the plaintiff, nor was it in his occupation as alleged. Then he went on to hold that it was part of the street land not vested in the Municipality. In consequence of that finding, and the way in which the first issue was dealt with, a long discussion ensued as to whether the land on which this otla was built was part of a public street or not. The same error appears in the proceedings in the lower Appellate Court, as after remarking that it had been held that the land on which the otla was constructed was not the plaintiff's land, the learned Judge went on to say, "the next question was whether the street in which the otla was put up was a public street." The learned Judge thought, as the street was not a public street, the Municipality had no right to remove the otla, nor had it any right to prohibit the plaintiff from building the otla. That finding appears to me to have been due to a misunderstanding regarding the proper construction of section 96, which provides that a person intending (1) to begin to erect any building; or (2) to alter externally any existing building; or (3) to add to any existing building; or (4) to reconstruct any projecting portion of a building in respect of which the Municipality is empowered by section 92 to enforce a removal or set back, shall give notice thereof to the Municipality in writing and shall furnish to them at the same time, if required by a by-law or by a special order to do so, certain documents and plans.

The Court seems to have been of the opinion that this was a question of re-constructing a projecting portion of a building in respect of which the Municipality is empowered by section 92 to enforce a removal or set-back. It is quite clear that in this case the plaintiff was seeking to add to an existing building, and section 92 does not come into the case at all. The plaintiff was bound to ask for permission before he could build the additional structure, and if he built without obtaining permission, he did so at his own risk. Therefore, it is quite clear to me that the Municipality was justified in acting within their powers in issuing the notice of October 1913, calling upon the plaintiff to remove the structure. In my opinion the appeal succeeds. The decree of the lower Court must be set aside and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

HEATON, J.—I agree. The meaning of section 96 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act apparently seems to have been misunderstood. I entirely concur in the analysis given by my Lord the Chief Justice of clause (1) of that section. It deals with four classes of cases, and it is only in dealing with the 4th class that section 92 comes into operation. It might, of course, have been a point in dispute in this case as to whether the mere making of a plinth was adding to an existing building. But as a matter of fact that contention never was raised, so we need not consider it. The plaintiff himself asked for permission to make the addition to the building, that is to say, the plaintiff himself proceeded as if section 96 applied and thereafter the Municipality also proceeded under section 96, and it is now outside argument that in this case section 6 is the one to apply. How then it ever came to be supposed that it mattered to anybody whether there was a public street or a private street or indeed any street at all, I am totally unable to understand. The judgments of the lower Courts do not do anything to remove the obscurity of my mind as to how this question of a street ever was raised I suppose something was assumed by both parties before the District Judge that is not assumed here. I think, therefore, the appeal must be allowed as proposed.

Civil Procedure Code Act (V of 1908), O XXXIV, r. 6—Hindu Law Joint family—Mortgage by father—Finding that mortgage was not executed for antecedent debt or for purpose binding on sons Personal decree for balance due after appropriation of sale-proceeds, whether can be passed against joint property of father and sons.

Where a mortgage deed by a Hindu father is found not to have been executed for an antecedent debt or for a necessary purpose binding on the sons, the Court should nevertheless incorporate in the decree the condition that if the sale-proceeds of the father's share are insufficient to pay the decree amount, the decree-holder can proceed against the mortgagor personally and the joint property of himself and his sons, provided the loan is not attacked as immoral or illegal. [p. 321, col. 2.]

The mortgage as an alienation of property may fail if there was no necessity for it and no debt really antecedent to the mortgage transaction, but the sons will nevertheless be under a pious obligation to pay the mortgage debt qua debt unless it is an illegal or immoral debt. [p. 322, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No 10 of 1919, preferred against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif Coimbatore, in Original Suit No 47 of 1918

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. Siva Ramakrishna Aiyar, for Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Appellant.—The sons are liable on the theory of pious obligation to discharge their father's debt. They should prove that the debt is not binding See Sami Ayyangar v. Ponnammal (1), approved of in Venkataramanaya Pantulu v. Venkataramana Doss Pantulu (2).

The personal remedy available to the mortgagee is not barred and hence the liability exists even if the debt is not necessary, so long as it is not illegal or immoral Sami Ayyangar v. Ponnammal (1). Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3) did not consider this question See Vinjanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Dekshatulu (4). See also Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (5).

Mr K. R. Rangaswamy Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—The father can alienate only for necessity or for an antecedent debt. Any undue extension of the theory of pious obligation would result in insecurity of rights. Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3) lays down the rule. The facts are different in Vinjanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Dekshatulu (4). See Ramasami Nadan v.

Certain land was granted to A. K. in perpetuity as ala lambardar and to whomsoever as his successor occupied that part. In 1879 his son M. was appointed ala lambardar and the land came to his possession. On M.'s death in 1892 the land was divided in equal shares between his two sons S and A. and the widow of a 3rd son Mutations took place on the 13th May 1892. Subsequently S. was appointed ala lambardar on the 31st August 1892 but died on the 16th September 1892. His son, born on the 12th September 1892 and appointed ala lambardar on the 12th December 1892, instituted the present suit for a half share of the land against A. (his uncle) on the 9th October 1914, the widow having died meanwhile:

Held, (1) that A. was in possession on the 13th May 1892 according to the revenue entries, which had a presumption of accuracy in their favour, and had been in possession since

(2) that his possession from the very first was adverse to any ala lambardar in esse or in posse and continued up to the date of suit;

(3) that as A. denied any right of any person as ala lambardar to hold the land, time began to run immediately against this act of trespass·

(4) that the plaintiff, having been born after that date, could only exercise the right to sue within 12 years from the date of the act of trespass and that his present suit was time-barred.

JUDGMENT.—In this case in 1865 Mr. Brandreth as Settlement Officer made a grant of 200 ghumaons of village shamilat land to one Alam Khan. The land was granted to him in perpetuity as ala lambardar and to whomsoever as his successor occupied that post. In 1879 he appointed his son, Muhammad Bakhsh, ala lambardar and the 200 ghumaons came to his possession. The remainder of Alam Khan's land went to his other sons. Muhammad Bakhsh died early in 1892 and the 200 ghumaons was divided in equal shares among his two sons, Sardar Khan and Allah Din, and the widow of his third son, Hayat Khan. Mutations to this effect took place on the 13th of May 1892. Subsequently his son, Sardar Khan, the father of the present plaintiff, was appointed ala lambardar on the 31st August 1892 but occupied that position only till his death on the 16th of September 1892. The present plaintiff, his son, was born on the 12th September 1892 and was appointed ala lambardar on the 12th December 1892. He instituted the present suit for possession of a half share in the land against Allah Din on the 9th October 1914. The other co-sharer, the widow, had died meanwhile on some date not ascertainable from the record. The suit has been dismissed by the lower Appellate Court as time-barred.

Mr. Nanak Chand on behalf of the appellant urges that plaintiff did not become entitled to possession until the date of his appointment as ala lambardar, namely, the 12th December 1892, and that his suit was within time as instituted within three years of the date when he attained majority. He urges that the plaintiff did not derive his title or his right to sue from his father, the appointment of ala lambardar being governed not by inheritance but being in the gift of Government. This argument is plausible, but it takes no account of what are the obvious facts of the case, namely, that Allah Din was in possession on 13th May 1892 according to the revenue entries, which have a presumption of accuracy in their favour, and has been in possession since. His possession from the very first was adverse to any ala lumbardar in esse or in posse and continued up to the date of the suit. It is clear that by taking possession of his share of the land as he did Allah Din denied at once any right of any person as ala lambardar to hold the land and that time began to run immediately against this act of trespass. The plaintiff, therefore, who obtained a right to sue some seven months after the act of adverse possession, could only exercise this right within 12 years, which he has failed to do.

We, therefore, agree with the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The facts in this case are not disputed. The plaintiff was assessed for income-tax in the year ending 31st March 1913 in the amount of Rs. 833 5-4. The plaintiff paid that amount on the 18th June 1912. It is admitted that the income of the plaintiff on which the assessment was levied was less than the actual income on which assessment ought to have been levied. When that had been ascertained, a supplementary bill was sent to the plaintiff for the amount of Rs. 488-10-8 on the 7th November 1912, and a direction was made that the plaintiff should pay the amount of the bill by the 4th of January 1913. The plaintiff paid in the amount on the 8th January 1913 under protest. Later on the plaintiff received a notice demanding payment of Rs 61-1 4, as fine on account of the default in the payment of the income-tax money by the time fixed. The plaintiff paid the fine. He then filed this suit to recover from the Secretary of State for India the said amounts of Rs. 488-10-8 and Rs. 61-1 4 on the ground that the said amounts had been illegally levied, together with an amount of Rs. 38-1-6 as interest.

The plaintiff's suit has been dismissed in both Courts. In second appeal the same argument has been adduced before us which did not find favour in the lower Courts, namely, that the powers of the Collector of Income Tax had become exhausted when once he had made an assessment, and that any further assessment for the same year was illegal. Section 14 of the Income Tax Act II of 1886 provides that "The Collector shall, from time to time, determine what persons are chargeable under Part IV, and the amount at which every person so chargeable shall be assessed." We do not think that that section means that when the Collector has once in any particular year determined that a certain person is chargeable under Part IV, and has determined the amount at which that person so chargeable should be assessed, his powers against that person for that year are exhausted, in the event of his discovering that the income of that person is somewhat greater than the income upon which the tax was first assessed. The words "from time to time" appear to me to make it perfectly clear that the Collector has the power after the first assessment to make a fresh assessment, if the circumstances of the case require it. Even if we had any doubt in our minds as to the meaning of the words of section 14, we have section 50, which provides that "all powers conferred by, or conferrable under, this Act may be exercised from time to time as occasion requires." That decides the question before us without any doubt. In my opinion the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—I cannot conceive that when the Legislature passed the Income Tax Act, they intended to express what the appellant says they have expressed. What he says is meant by the Act is that when the Income Tax Collector has once made an assessment, he cannot increase or alter it (at a later date), although it may be perfectly clear that the original assessment was made on an under-estimate of the income tax payer's income. If that were so, it would certainly revolutionize my conception of the powers of the Income Tax Collector. Not only can I not conceive that the Legislature intended to enact such a thing as that, but I think the words of sections 14 and 50 of the Act clearly show that the Legislature expressed the opposite intention. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The word 'interests' in Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, is not confined to interests in existence prior to the sale so as to exclude interests created by the sale.

An auction-purchaser is a person whose interests are affected by the sale within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, Guntur, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 27 of 1917, preferred against the order, dated the 27th March 1917, of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Guntur, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 52 of 1917, in Execution Petition No. 654, of 1916, in Original Suit No. 874 of 1913.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Lakshminarayana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question to be decided is whether an auction-purchaser is a person "whose interests are affected by the sale" within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90, of the present Code of Civil Procedure. Those words did not occur in the Code of 1882 and the question is, therefore, one of first impression, so far as auction-purchasers are concerned. Under Order XXI, rule 91 an auction-purchaser may apply to the Court to set aside a sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, but those words do not go far enough to meet the case of auction-purchasers who have been misled by a statement inserted through error or fraud in the proclamation of sale to the effect that the property to be sold is unencumbered.

There can be no doubt that, if an application is made under Order XXI, rule 92, to set aside a sale, an auction purchaser is entitled to notice of the application as being a person "affected" thereby.

In this respect, the practice of giving notice to auction-purchasers has received the approval of the Privy Council [see Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (1)]. If an auction purchaser's interests are affected by an order setting aside the sale, it is difficult to see why his interests are not also affected by the sale, although it is true that they are affected in a different sense and in a different degree.

(1) 19 C. 683; 19 I. A. 166; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 209.

In one case, he stands to lose an interest acquired by the sale, in the other, he acquires an interest which he did not possess previously. We have not been shown any reason for confining the word "interests" in rule 90 to the narrow meaning of interests in existence prior to the sale so as to exclude interests created by the sale.

In Mahomed Kala Mea v. Harperink (2) the Privy Council have laid stress upon the duty of Courts to see that in sales held under their direction, nothing is done to mislead purchasers into the belief that properties for which they bid are free from encumbrances; when, if the truth were known, it would appear that they were properties of little or no value on account of their being heavily encumbered. The present is a case in which the respondent was equitably entitled to have the sale set aside as being an unfair bargain into which he was induced to enter by misrepresentation. and we think that the Courts below were right in their opinion that the words of the Code are wide enough to provide a remedy for such a case in execution.

We, therefore, confirm the order appealed against and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Income Tax Act (II of 1886), s. 14—Collector, whether can make fresh assessment in same year.

Under section 14 of the Income Tax Act, 1886, the Collector has power, after the first assessment, to make a fresh assessment in the same year, if the circumstances of the case require it. [p. 335, col. 2.]

to have maintained herself out of the other 44 acres of her husband's property is hardly one to be relied upon by the plaintiff. But certainly the onus lay on the plaintiff to show that none of the Rs. 400 was required for legal necessity by the widow. She had to support herself and her daughters and it would certainly appear that even if not the whole of Rs. 400, she would require some of it.

Then the question arises whether the widow oversold or, in other words, sold more than was necessary, in the circumstances at the time. There certainly may be cases where a widow may sell far more of the property than is required at the time for legal necessity. Now it is quite possible that in this case a portion of the Rs. 900 may not have been required actually by the widow for legal necessity, but it lay upon the plaintiff to show that so much of the land as was required, as the plaintiff says would suffice for the legal necessity, could have been sold, otherwise one is entitled to presume that the widow could not have sold less than she did in order to realize what was required at any rate to pay off her husband's debts, and to provide herself with maintenance until the famine was over. In Bal Krishna Das v. Hira Lal (2) the daughter of a separated Hindu sold a house, which had been the property of her father in his lifetime and had been previously mortgaged by herself and her mother jointly. The debt at the time of the sale amounted to Rs. 7,775, and the house was sold for Rs. 19,500. On the other hand, it was found that the house was not one which could have been divided and sold piecemeal. On these facts it was held that the reversioner to the last male owner was not entitled to recover the house from the vendees.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff has not satisfied the onus which lay on him, and that, therefore, the judgments in the lower Courts cannot be supported. The suit must be dismissed with costs throughout, the decree of the lower Appellate Court being reversed.

HEATON, J.—I agree. I only add a few words, because it might be supposed that we were in second appeal interfering with a decision arrived at on the evidence by the Court of first appeal. The evidence, or rather the facts found, as set out in the judgment of the Court of first appeal, show that the sale, which the plaintiff now seeks to set aside, was a legal and proper sale. Because the facts found establish, first of all, that as regards Rs. 500 out of Rs. 900 of the consideration, there was undoubtedly necessity for the sale. They also establish that as regards the remaining Rs. 400, whether there was necessity or not is a matter of conjecture and speculation. But the facts found also show that the nearest reversioners specifically assented to the sale. We have, therefore, facts found which, so far as they go, must compel the conclusion that the sale as a whole was a proper and legal sale. Before a Court could be justified in holding the contrary, there would have to be other evidence, there would have to be other facts proved which would rebut the conclusion which I have just stated and would support something better than a merely conjectural or speculative inference. There are not in this case other facts of that nature proved. I think, therefore, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court was a decision which was wrong in law. Therefore, I think the appeal must be allowed.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—On the 3rd September 1901 Balawa, the widow of one Danapaya, deceased, sold the plaint property to the 1st and 2nd defendants with the consent of her two daughters, the nearest and only reversioners at the time. In 1909 Balawa adopted the present plaintiff, and the plaintiff has now brought this suit for a declaration that the sale-deed of 1901 was not binding on him, and that he was entitled to recover possession of the plaint lands from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It must be noted that Balawa is still alive. The plaintiff is a minor suing by his maternal uncle, and it looks very much like an attempt on the part of the widow to set aside an alienation made by her in 1901, because as a matter of fact the plaintiff would know nothing about what was being done in his name.

The trial Court directed that on the plaintiff paying to the defendants within three months from the date of the order the sum of Rs. 800, the sum spent for improvements by the defendants, the defendants should put the plaintiff in possession of the plaint lands.

On appeal, the lower Appellate Court has amended the decree of the lower Court by directing that the plaintiff should pay Rs. 500 in addition to Rs. 800, as it had been proved that out of the price for the land which was realised in 1901, Rs. 500 were required by the widow for legal necessity. Now the alienation of 1901 was an alienation by the widow of part of the property left to her by her husband with the consent of the reversioners. Such consent was held, in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (1), to afford a presumptive proof, which would validate the transaction as a right and proper one if not rebutted by contrary proof. See the remarks of their Lordships at page 84*. As soon as, therefore, the defendants, on whom first the onus lay to show that the alienation was for legal necessity, did prove that the reversioners had consented, the onus shifted to the plaintiff to show that there was no legal necessity. Neither of the lower Courts seems to have noticed that at a particular point of the trial the onus of proving legal necessity shifted. The legal necessity is set out in the sale-deed: Rs. 400 were due to the defendants by Danapaya and Rs. 100 were due to one Irappa, and Rs. 400 were required for Balawa's maintenance owing to famine at the time. It is not disputed that the year 1901 was a famine year in the District of Bijapur. Therefore, the suggestion that Balawa ought 12 years, he must be held to have acquired the status of a settled raiyat. It is not necessary that the "village" must be in existence for the whole period of 12 years. It is sufficient that the "village" was in existence at the date of the suit or just before that date. I, therefore, submit that my clients did acquire the status of a settled raiyat.

Sir Rash Behary Ghose (with him Babus Bepin Behary Ghose and Karunamoy Bose), for the Respondents.—There is no substance in my learned friend's argument. Reads section 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The section lays down that in order that a person may be a settled raiyat, he must have for a period of 12 years "continuously as a raiyat held land situate in any village." Now there was no "village" in the Sunderbans before 1898. The area was declared and constituted a "village" on the 28th of February 1912, only a few months before the present suit was instituted. It must, therefore, be conceded that the defendants acquired no right of occupancy before February 1912. The declaration of Government constituting the area a "village" cannot have any retrospective effect.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—What is the effect of the declaration?]

The area became a village from the date of the declaration. Refers to an unreported case, Second Appeal No. 2451 of 1905, decided on 27th June 1907 by Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ. See also section 3, clause (10) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar, in reply.—The word "village" has reference only to the land in respect of which occupancy right is acquired. It is not necessary that the village should be in existence for more than 12 years. What is necessary is that the village must be in existence when the tenant acquires the right of occupancy. The land should be in the occupation of the tenant for a period of 12 years. At the time when the question is to be decided it is to be seen whether the land is situated in a "village." The words "situate in any village" in section 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are only descriptive. The unreported case referred to by my learned friend does not decide the question which is now before your Lordships.

JUDGMENT.—The only question raised in this case is whether the defendants are settled raiyats within the meaning of section 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is found that the defendants have held the land continuously for a period of 12 years and as raiyats, but that the area within which the land is situate (in the Sunderbans) did not constitute a "village" until it was declared as a "village" on the 28th February 1912, only a few months before the suit was instituted.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that although that is so, the question whether a person has held lands situated in a village for a period of 12 years, is to be determined with reference to the state of things at the date of the suit and not during the period of 12 years, and it would be sufficient if the land which has been held by a raiyat is in a "village" just before the suit and need not be in a "village" for the period of 12 years, during which he held the land as a raiyat. But the section lays down that in order that a person may be a settled raiyat he must have for a period of 12 years "continuously as a raiyat held land situate in any village." If this declaration had not been made, the defendant could not have been held to be a settled raiyat, and the fact that a few months prior to the institution of the suit, the area within which the land is situated was declared to be a "village" cannot have a retrospective effect; and we think that under the section it is necessary that the holding of the land by the raiyat for a period of 12 years must be holding of land in a "village" during the whole of that period.

A village is defined in section 3, clause (10) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and our attention has been drawn to an unreported case (Second Appeal No. 2451 of 1905) decided on the 27th June 1907 by Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ., where it was held that unless the land is situated within the boundaries of a village as defined in section 3, clause (10) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a person holding the land cannot be a settled raiyat. That case does not decide the question now before us. But having regard to the word-the decree was dead on the 31st March 1910, and even although the further Darkhast was admitted thereafter, that would not have the effect of reviving the decree, so that the Court was entitled to consider the question in the present Darkhast, and come to the conclusion that no Darkhast ought to have been admitted after the 31st March 1910. But we have been referred by the appellant's Pleader to the case of Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri Chowdhry (1), which was a case very similar to the present case. There a decree was passed in 1851, and thereafter there were many applications and proceedings to enforce or keep in force the decree. An application was admitted on the 5th September 1874, although the previous application was dated the 7th August 1871, and, therefore, the last application was admittedly more than three years after the previous one. It was held by the lower Court that a decree once dead no proceedings by means of an application out of time could revive it, but their Lordships of the Privy Council considered that that was not a correct argument, and held that the order, although it may have been erroneously made, was nevertheless valid, unless reversed upon appeal. The result is that we must consider the order made on the Darkhast of the 12th September 1910 as valid, as it was not reversed on appeal and, therefore, the present Darkhast is within time, as the last instalment was paid by the defendant on the 26th March 1913. We, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court, and direct that execution do proceed as prayed for. The respondent must pay the costs of the Darkhast throughout.

Decree reversed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of B.C. 1885), ss 3 (10), 20—'Settled raiyat', whether must hold land in 'village' during whole period of 12 years—Declaration constituting an area a 'village,' whether can have retrospective effect.

In order that a person may become a settled raiyat within the meaning of section 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by holding land as a raiyat continuously for a period of 12 years, it is necessary under the section that he must hold land in a "village" continuously during the whole of that period. The fact that the area within which such land is situated was at some time declared to be a "village" cannot have retrospective effect. [p. 331, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Additional District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 22nd of August 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Basirhat, dated the 18th of September 1914, and remanding the suit to the lower Court with certain directions.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar (with him Babu Uma Charan Lahiri), for the Appellants.—It has been found that the appellants before your Lordships have held the land in suit continuously for a period of 12 years as raiyats. Then there was a notification by which the area within which the land is situated was declared as a "village." As soon as, therefore, the area was constituted a "village," my clients must be held to have become raiyats of that "village." The question whether a person has held land situated in a "village" for a period of 12 years, so as to acquire the status of a settled raiyat within the meaning of section 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is to be determined with reference to the state of things at the date of the suit and not during the whole period of 12 years. If, therefore, at the date of the suit a person is found to have held land as a raiyat in a "village" for a period of plaintiffs unmistakably accused the defendants of misconduct amounting to an offense of criminal misappropriation punishable under section 403, Indian Penal Code. The defendants made no appearance in the Small Cause Court and the Subordinate Judge overlooked this important point. As I am about to show, the decision on the merits also is not satisfactory. I have no hesitation in applying the ordinary rule that a defect in the Court's jurisdiction cannot be waived.

With regard to the merits, I do not think it can be said to have been impossible for Jagannath to identify the lost buffalo, nor did the trial Judge doubt his ability to do so. In the plaint it is stated that the buffalo ran away 4 or 5 days after coming to the plaintiffs' premises. Reading that statement in the light of the fact that the sale took place on the 7th, not on the 17th October, I think the trial Judge was wrong in holding that Jagannath could not have gone to the defendants' house and seen the missing buffalo on the 13th October. Jagannath was not asked when he returned from Sigone to Handia to tell the plaintiffs what he had seen and in any case the allegation in the plaint with regard to the 25th idem could not certainly be interpreted as meaning that the plaintiffs did not hear of the animal's escape until that date. It seems probable, as the plaintiffs explained in this Court, that the date of the sale having originally been entered as the 17th October instead of the 7th, the 25th was entered consequentially instead of the 15th, the second mistake being left uncorrected through oversight.

There must be a proper trial in the Court of ordinary jurisdiction. The decree of the Small Cause Court is set aside. The necessity for a re-trial having arisen partly from the plaintiffs' own mistake and the defendants having made no appearance at the trial, I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Mr. Y. N. Nadkarni, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a decree was passed on the 18th February 1899 for Rs. 376 and costs in favour of the plaintiff. The first Darkhast presented to the Court was dismissed for non-production of a succession certificate on the 20th March 1907. Thereafter a Darkhast was filed on the 31st March 1910, which was disposed of on the 8th September 1910, and then another Darkhast was presented on the 12th September 1910. The defendant then appeared and contended that the Darkhast of the 31st March 1910 was barred. Apparently the Court decided that the Darkhast of the 12th September 1910 was in time, and directed that the money due should be paid by instalments, the first instalment to be paid on the 15th April 1912. On the 26th March 1913 Rs. 220 were paid to plaintiff. The present Darkhast was filed on the 19th November 1915 to recover the balance due under the decree of Rs. 270-3-6.

The first Court directed execution to proceed. The lower Appellate Court reversed the order of the lower Court, and dismissed the Darkhast with costs, on the ground, as I take it, that ORDER.—The plaintiffs in this case live at Handia and the defendants at Sigone. On the 7th October 1918 the defendants made over two she-buffaloes to the plaintiffs for Rs. 185-8 0, of which Rs. 110 was taken in cash, the rest representing the value of an old grain debt. In the plaint the date of the sale seems to have been originally given as the 17th October, but a line has been drawn through the figure "1." The plaint further alleges that 4 or 5 days after the buffaloes came to the plaintiffs' house, one of them ran away and went to the defendants' house. The plaintiffs discovered its whereabouts on or about the 25th October and asked the defendants to return the animal, which they refused to do. The defendants' action is described as fraudulent and unlawful and amounting to an offence. The cause of action was said to have arisen on the 26th October 1918. The relief claimed was return of the buffalo and its calf born after the sale, or in the alternative for Rs. 110 as the value of the animals.

The plaint was presented in the Court of the Munsif, Harda, but that Judge returned it for presentation to the Small Cause Court.

The defendants made no appearance in the Small Cause Court. The plaintiffs examined three witnesses, namely, the scribe of the sale deed, one of the attesting witnesses and their servant Jagannath, who professed to have recognised the buffalo at the defendants' house and to have unsuccessfully demanded its return.

The claim has been dismissed on grounds which appear from the following passage in the Court's judgment:—

"It has been proved by the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 3 that defendants did sell and deliver two buffaloes to plaintiffs in lieu of Rs. 185 and one of the two might have run away.

"But it has not been satisfactorily established that the buffalo which ran away is with defendants, for according to P. W. No. 2 who is plaintiffs' own servant, he went to see on or about 13th October, whereas in the plaint plaintiffs say in paragraph 3 (a) that they were informed about the buffalo having run away on or about 25th October 1918, and hence P. W. No. 2 could not have been sent to see before that date. As it has not been established that the runaway buffaloe is with defendants, I cannot but dismiss the claim with costs."

The plaintiffs now move this Court to interfere, firstly, on the ground that Article 43A of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, bars the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court, and, secondly, because the reference in the plaint to the 25th October 1918, as the date on which the whereabouts of the runaway buffalo were discovered, is obviously mistaken.

For the defendants it is urged that the plaintiffs should have appealed against the order of the Munsif who returned the plaint. With regard to the evidence of Jagannath it is urged that he could not have recognised a buffalo which he had only seen once previously. Finally it is said that the plaintiffs must be held to the 25th October as the date on which their servant discovered the lost buffalo. On the question of jurisdiction I think the Munsif who returned the plaint either failed to read that document or was unaware of the addition made by Act VI of 1914 to the Second Schedule, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887. The there can be no manner of doubt that even the ground upon which the majority of the House of Lords took that particular case out of the purview of the rule, has no application to the case before us.

We are accordingly of opinion that the District Judge was right in non-suiting the plaintiffs. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1—Mortgage suit—Equity of redemption split up—Suit barred as against some purchasers—Liability of others, extent of.

Where the equity of redemption of a mortgage is split up and several persons become entitled to different portions of it and a suit on the mortgage is barred by time as against some of the purchasers of the equity of redemption, while it is within time as against the remainder, it would be contrary to the principles of equity to permit the mortgagee, who by his own negligence has lost his remedy as against a portion of the equity of redemption, to throw the whole burden of the mortgage on the owners of the remaining portions.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Nasik, in Appeal No. 258 of 1912, dismissing an appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Sinnar, in Civil Suit No. 774 of 1910.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Appellant.

Mr D. C. Virkar, for Respondent No. 5.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 500 for principal and Rs. 500 for interest, in all Rs. 1,000, by sale of the property mortgaged by the father of the first defendant and the grandfather of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 to plaintiff's assignors, Chaturbhuj and Gumanchand Marwaris, on the 28th October 1870. It appears that the equity of redemption was sold in 1883 to the father of defendant No. 5 and another. Those two purchasers separated. Half the equity of redemption came to the fifth defendant, one fourth to Kashi Ramji, and one fourth to Dada Kashi by sale from Kashi Ramji. Kashi Ramji and Dada Kashi ought to have been made parties to the suit under Order XXXIV, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, but the plaintiff refused to make them parties, because as a matter of fact his claim against them had became time-barred. He now seeks to throw the whole burden of the mortgage on half the property, the equity of redemption in which came to defendant No 5. An exactly similar case arose in Imam Ali v. Baij Nath Ram Sahu (1). Their Lordships there remarked:

"In the case before us, all the properties comprised in the mortgage are liable for the satisfaction of the debt and after different persons have become interested in different fragments of the equity of redemption, the properties continue to be so liable; and all that the owner of any portion of the equity of redemption is legitimately entitled to ask is that not more than a rateable part of the mortgage debt should be thrown upon the property in his hands. This is manifestly just and the mortgagees cannot claim to throw the entire burden upon a portion of the mortgaged premises because by reason of their own laches, they have lost their remedy as against the remainder."

This is what has happened in this case, and it is manifestly contrary to the principles of equity that the plaintiff, who by his own negligence, had lost his remedy against the owner of half the equity of redemption, should seek to throw the whole burden of the mortgage on the owner of the other half. In our opinion, therefore, the appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

of a voluntary character, for example, a prisoner of war kept in the enemy country cannot be regarded as an alien enemy.

A person may not be resident in an enemy country and yet he may acquire an enemy status if he carries on business in that country. As observed by Lord Lindley in Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines Limited (4), "When considering questions arising with an alien enemy, it is not the nationality of a person, but his place of business during war that is important. An Englishman carrying on business in an enemy's country is treated as an alien enemy in considering the validity or invalidity of his commercial contracts."

There can be little doubt that of the six members of the plaintiff firm five not only reside in a hostile country but also carry on business there, and they must, therefore, be treated as alien enemies, but the sixth is not an enemy. What then is the effect of this constitution of the firm upon the suit brought by it?

Now, it is beyond dispute that a partnership firm is not a juristic person like a limited company, and has no existence in law apart from the members composing it. A firm is only a short expression for denoting the several persons who are members thereof. We must, therefore, take it that the present suit is brought by six persons, of whom one is a friend and five are enemies. Now, a series of cases decided by the English Courts, beginning with the case of McConnell v. Hector (1), have laid down the rule that if one of the partners in the firm is an alien enemy as defined above, neither he nor his partner, who does not bear an enemy character, can recover money owing to the firm in the English Courts. A discordant note, however, appears to have been struck in a recent judgment of the House of Lords in Rodriguez v. Speyer Brothers (5), and it is necessary to examine this case carefully in order to see what it did decide. The firm dealt with in that case carried on a banking business in London until the outbreak of war with Germany and consisted of six persons, only one of whom was an enemy having an interest to the extent of 1/40th. The partnership was ipso facto dissolved by reason of one partner having become an alien enemy, and in order to get in the assets and wind up the affairs of the firm an action was brought in 1916 by the firm for the recovery of a debt alleged to have accrued due before the commencement of the war. The question arose whether the action was maintainable. Of the five Law Lords, who decided the case, two were of the opinion that, as one of the plaintiffs was personally disqualified from seeking the aid of the British Courts, the suit could not be maintained. On the other hand, the remaining three members of the Bench, while recognizing the validity of the rule referred to above, considered that the rule was not a definite and an inflexible one and should not be applied to cases where its application would be mischievous and contravene the principles of public policy, which alone gave rise to the rule. They pointed out that the special circumstances of the case showed that the action was really for the benefit of the partners who were not enemies, and the enemy alien could not during the war reap any benefit from the action. It was accordingly held that to prevent an alien enemy, in these circumstances, from being a party to an action as plaintiff would do much more harm to British subjects or to friendly neutrals than to the enemy; and this was a consideration most material to be taken into account in determining whether a case falls within the true scope and extent of the rule. In view of these special circumstances the majority of the House of Lords allowed the case to proceed.

It is to be observed that in the cases of McConnell v. Hector (1) and Candilis and Sons v. Victor and Co., (6) the majority of the firm consisted of alien enemies and in both the cases it was decided that the action brought by the firm could not be maintained. No dissent was expressed by the majority of the House of Lords from the rule laid down in these cases, which were distinguished on the ground of the special circumstances in Rodriguez v. Speyer Brothers (5). In view of the constitution of the firm, with which we are dealing,

Now, the city of Mecca is situate in the Turkish Vilayet of the Hedjaz, and a state of war was proclaimed in November 1914 between His Britannic Majesty and the Sultan of Turkey. The action, though relating to a transaction entered into and probably carried out before the declaration of the war, was brought during the war; and the crucial question for determination is whether such an action can be maintained in the Courts of British India.

Section 83, sub-section (2), Civil Procedure Code, makes it perfectly clear that an alien enemy residing in a foreign country cannot maintain a suit in any of such Courts. It is, however, contended that as the five partners residing in the hostile country are British subjects, they cannot be treated as alien enemies within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of the law. This contention is, in our opinion, wholly erroneous. It is true that the phrase "alien enemy" in its natural significance has reference to nationality, and indicates a subject of a State which is at war with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and would not include a British subject or a neutral subject. But this is not the meaning of the expression when used in reference to civil rights and liabilities. For this purpose the place of residence, or the place where the business is carried on, and not the nationality, is the determining factor, and even a British subject will be treated as an alien enemy, if he voluntarily resides or carries on business in a hostile country. In other words, an enemy means a person, of whatever nationality, residing or carrying on business in the enemy country. The residence must of course be a voluntary one, because it is clear that an involuntary residence, e.g., that of a prisoner of war or an internee, does not debar him, if otherwise qualified, from inovking the assistanee of the British Courts.

That nationality is not the test for determining the status of a person for the purpose of civil rights and liabilities is clear from the explanation appended to section 83, Civil Procedure Code, and the doctrine has been repeatedly affirmed in a series of judgments by the English Courts. It was enunciated during the Napoleonic wars in the case of McConnell v. Hector (1), when two of the Judges laid down that a British subject resident and carrying on trade in an enemy's country is an alien enemy and is consequently incapable of suing in an English Court. The reason of the rule is that the fruits of the action may not be remitted to a hostile country and so furnish resources against this country. For that purpose the case of an Englishman residing abroad does not differ from any other person.

There can, therefore, be no doubt that even if the five partners residing at Mecca are British subjects, a matter upon which no definite opinion can in the absence of evidence be pronounced, they must still be regarded as alien enemies, because they are residing in a hostile country. Their residence alone would be sufficient to bring them within the category of alien enemies. As pointed out by Lord Alvanley, C. J., in McConnell v. Hector (1), "Most certainly every natural born subject of England has a right to the King's protection so long as he entitles himself to it by his conduct, but if he live in an enemy's country he forfeits that right." This rule has since been affirmed in several cases, vide, inter alia, Porter v. Freudenberg (2).

What residence in an enemy country will suffice to make a man an alien enemy is a question of degree. It is clear that the residence contemplated by the rule need not amount to what is called domicile, namely, permanent residence sine animo re ertendi. A much less permanent residence is sufficient to constitute a man an alien enemy, provided that it is not of a temporary character. The correct proposition appears to be that if a person resides in a hostile country for a substantial period of time, he acquires the disability attaching to an enemy during that period, vide Porter v. Freudenberg (2) and Daimler Company Limited v. Continental Tyre and Rubber Company Limited (3), unless such residence is with the consent of the Crown. The residence must, however, be foundation for an order dismissing a suit, as the matter can always be put straight by directing the party who has made the original mistake to pay the costs of the opposite party incurred on account of the mistake having been made Therefor, the order dismissing the suit must be set aside and the appeal allowed with costs. The case will then go back to the lower Court to be tried on the merits under Order XLI, rule 23, and the plaintiff must have an opportunity, if the Judge so directs, to amend her plaint.

In a suit for recovery of money due on account of costs of building, it appeared that the plaintiff firm consisted of six persons, one of whom lived at Delhi and carried on the business of the firm, while the remaining five resided at Mecca where the partners had another firm of a different name. The action, though relating to a transaction entered into and probably carried out before the declaration of war between Britain and Turkey, was brought during the war:

Held, (1) that even if the five partners residing at Mecca were British subjects, they must still be regarded as alien enemies because of their residence in a hostile country. [p. 325, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 19th January 1916.

Dr. Mohammad Iqbal, for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The action, which has led to this appeal, was brought by the firm of Haji Ali Jan against the defendant Abdul Shakur Khan, for the recovery of a sum of money due to the firm. The allegations in the plaint are that the predecessor of Abdul Shakur Khan had asked the firm to get his serai at Mecca repaired, and that the plaintiff carried out the repairs and spent thereupon a large sum of money, much in excess of the amount deposited with the plaintiff for the purpose. The action is accordingly for the balance of the money due to the plaintiff.

It is common ground that the plaintiff firm consists of six persons, one of whom lives at Delhi and carries on the business of the firm Haji Ali Jan, while the remaining five members reside at Mecca where the partners have got another firm called "Abdul Sattar-Abdul Jabbar."

Bapu, who is alleged to have become the owner of the Bhag as a survivor between himself and Desai Purshottam, his first cousin. The 2nd defendant was the son of Bai Lalu, the sister-in-law of the plaintiff's mother. The 1st defendant claims title to the plaint property through Desai Manor, a distant relation of Bapu, and also in virtue of a transfer from Gadbad, the 2nd defendant. The defendants Nos. 3 to 5 claim to be in possession through Bapu's cousin Desai Purshottam, and the 6th defendant claims through Desai Manor.

The suit was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge on the ground that it had been decided in a former suit, in which the 1st plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5 were parties, that females were excluded from inheritance to this particular Bhag. That suit was brought by the transferees of Desai Manor against the present plaintiffs and others, alleging that Desai Manor was the nearest male agnate and heir of Desai Purshottam and Bapu. The suit was dismissed on the ground that, whether females were excluded from the inheritance or not, Desai Manor was not proved to be the nearest Pitrai heir to Bapu. An issue was raised whether the custom of the daughter's exclusion by a Pitrai was proved to have been in existence in the Bhagdari village of Rahad. The Court held that it was proved in the case that in the Bhagdari village of Rahad the daughter was excluded from inheritance to her father's property. It must be noted that the suit was dismissed because plaintiffs claimed through Desai Manor, who was not proved to be the nearest Pitrai heir to Bapu, and, therefore, there was no necessity for a finding on the issue whether the daughter was excluded by a Pitrai in this particular Bhagdari village. It has been argued in support of the judgment of the Court below that this finding is res judicata within the meaning of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. No doubt the issue was heard and the issue was decided, but it was not finally decided, because it was not necessary for the decision which the Court came to dismissing the suit, and Bai Nathi had no opportunity of appealing against the Court's finding on that issue. In fact there was no necessity for her, even if she could have appealed against it, because she got everything which she wanted in the suit which was filed against her. We have been referred to the case of Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia (1). But that case was referred to in Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (2). The Judges there say that the Privy Council in a more recent case have expressed an opinion which is in opposition to the judgment of the Full Bench in Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia (1). The test they applied is this: has the issue been finally decided, and they say: "We think that the finding of the Court in the previous suit was not final, inasmuch as the decree was not based upon it, and there could be no appeal against it, because the decree was in favour of the party against whom the finding was recorded," and that case was followed in Parbatty Debya v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (3). In my opinion that is a correct test to apply to the question before us. If when drawing up the decree it had been declared that females were excluded from inheritance in this Bhagdari village, then it might have been urged that the matter had been finally decided, on the ground that Bai Nathi might have appealed against that decision, and had not done so. But ordinarily where a suit is dismissed, nothing is stated in the decree except "the suit is dismissed." Against that decree the defendant cannot appeal. In my opinion, therefore, the finding of the lower Court that this question was res judicata against Bai Nathi was wrong, and, therefore, the suit ought not to have been dismissed on that ground.

But it has been suggested that the suit is also liable to be dismissed as bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action. That should never be a ground by itself for dismissing a suit. The party, against whom misjoinder is alleged, must always have an opportunity of remedying the defect, by striking out the parties who ought not to have been joined and amending the plaint, and also by making any necessary amendments so as to strike out any causes of action which ought not to have been joined. This is only a technical ground, which should never form the in Raghunath Addaikka Pattar v. Natesa Pillai (8) and an observation in support of it is also found in Sami Ayyangar v. Pannammal (1).

It is argued, however, for the respondents that the recent decision of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram's case (3) has entirely altered the law on the point and the observations of their Lordships in page 444* have been relied on. This Court has considered the effect of this ruling in two cases recently in Vinjanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (4) and in the Full Bench case Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (5), and it was held that the pious obligation of the sons did arise during the father's lifetime and that the debt involved in a mortgage was an antecedent debt which attracted the pious obligation of the sons to pay, even though the mortgage as a transfer of an interest in joint ancestral property failed. The mortgage as an alienation of property may fail if there was no necessity for it and no debt really antecedent to the mortgage transaction; but the sons will nevertheless be under a pious obligation to pay the mortgage debt qua debt, unless it is an illegal or immoral one. We are bound by these views and must hold that the observation in Sahu Ram's case (3) does not alter the law on the point we are considering and we must follow the rule in the earliar cases. In fact such a point was not raised at all before the Privy Council. The point that their Lordships were considering was whether the mortgage was as such binding on the sons and whether a mortgage decree could be passed against them.

In the present case though the plaintiff prayed expressly for a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, against the ancestral property, the sons did not plead or prove that the debt was illegal or immoral. They cannot be given a fresh opportunity for the purpose. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to a decree as he asks for under rule 6 against the 1st defendant personally and against the ancestral property of himself and his sons.

The further point raised in this case is that the father s share liable for the mortg-ge decree is a $\frac{1}{4}$th share and not 1/5th share, as one of his sons now on record, the 5th defendant, was born after the mortgage was executed. This is not denied and, therefore, the decree of the lower Courts should be modified by also stating that a $\frac{1}{4}$th share of the mortgaged property is saleable under the mortgage decree. With the above modification the second appeal is dismissed but without costs.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 527 OF 1916.

In order that a finding upon a particular issue should operate as res judicata, it is necessary not only that the issue should be heard and decided, but that it should be finally decided, i e, its decision should be necessary for the final disposal of the suit. [p. 323, col. 1.]

Where a decree is not based upon a finding and is in favour of the party against whom the finding is recorded, so that that party cannot appeal against the finding, the finding cannot be said to be final and would not operate as res judicata. [p. 323, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of the properties described in Schedules C, E, F attached to the plaint, and mesne profits, alleging that the plaint properties formed part of a Buag in Rahad in Waghra Taluka. The 1st plaintiff claims as the daughter of Ulaganatha Goundan (6), Sripat Singh Dugar v. Krolyot Kunar Tagore (7).

At any rate, the father's share should be first sold before the sons are sought to be made liable.

Mr. N. Sivaramakrishna Aiyar, in reply.—The father's powers are wider. See also Raghunath Addaikka Pattar v. Natesa Pillai (8). A personal decree can be passed before the properties are proceeded against. Jeuna Bahu v. Rai Parhmeswar Narayan Mahtha Rai Bahadur (9). See also Kishun Pershad Chowdhry v. Tipan Pershad Singh (10) and Ramasami Nadan v. Ulaganatha Goundan (6).

JUDGMENT.—The lower Courts have found that the suit mortgage was neither executed for an antecedent debt nor for any necessary purpose binding on the sons. It is, therefore, clear that the mortgage as a mortgage is not enforcible against the sons' shares in the property mortgaged and no mortgage decree for sale of those shares can be passed against them. This is not controverted by the appellant. It is, however, claimed for the appellant that a conditional decree for the recovery of any balance left, in case the net proceeds of the sale of the father's share of the mortgaged property are found to be insufficient to pay the amount due to him, should have been passed under Order XXXIV, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, against the 1st defendant, the mortgagor, personally and against the ancestral properties of himself and his sons, as prayed for by him in his plaint.

That a conditional decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act can be passed in the mortgage suit itself without waiting for the mortgaged property to be sold to ascertain if any balance will be left over, is clear from the observations of the Privy Council in Jeuna Bahu v. Rai Parhmeswar Narayan Mahtha Rai Bahadur (9). We think the same rule will apply under Order XXXIV, rule 6.

In the present case it is not denied that the present claim against the mortgagor under the mortgage-deed is within time and is legally enforcible against him and a conditional personal decree for any balance should, therefore, have been passed against him in this suit.

Such a personal decree is in the nature of an ordinary money decree for a debt due by the father; and for such a decree, unless the debt is shown to be of an illegal or immoral character, the ancestral property in the hands of the sons will be liable on the basis of their pious obligation to plaintiff for their father's just debt. It was recognized by the Privy Council itself in Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (11) that in execution of a money decree against a Hindu father for a debt due by him, joint ancestral property of himself and his sons can be sold and the purchaser will get a valid title to the sons' shares as well, unless they show that the debt is of an illegal or immoral character. See page 171. It has also been decided in this Court that a creditor could join the sons in the suit on the father's debt and obtain a decree making their shares in the family property liable. See Ramasami Nadan v. Ulaganatha Goundan (6). This view was further developed in a later Full Bench case, Mallesam Naidu v. Jugala Panda (12), where it was held that the cause of action against the father and the sons and the debt was one and the same. After these decisions it has been the practice to give decrees in suits against the Hindu fathers on money claims not only against them but also against the joint family property of themselves and their undivided sons, where such sons are made parties and do not allege and prove the illegality or immorality of such claims. That a similar decree could be given in mortgage suits under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, corresponding to the present rule 6, was expressly decided in Kishun Pershad Chowdhry v. Tipan Pershad Singh (10), a similar view was taken Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 162, 439—Accused furnished with copies of Police diaries—Omission, material, in copies—Re-cross-examination, right of—Refusal of Court to allow exercise of right—Irregularity—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

An accused person was, on his application therefor, furnished with a copy of the Police diaries and of the statements of the prosecution witnesses recorded by the Police During the pendency of his appeal it was discovered that the statement of one of the witnesses furnished to the accused was not the complete statement recorded in the Police diary of the statement made by him to the Police. He thereupon applied to have that witness recalled for the purpose of re-cross-examination in order to generally impeach his credit. The Judge rejected the application, assuming that the statement made by the witness to the Police was untrue:

Held, that the accused was entitled to have the witness recalled for re-cross-examination, and that the Judge committed a grave error of law in refusing the application, justifying interference by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. [p. 340, col. 2; p. 341, col. 1.]

Criminal revisions against the order of the Officiating Sessions Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 30th May 1919, dismissing the appeals of the petitioners against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Samastipur, dated the 22nd April 1919.

Messrs. Manuk and K. B. Dutt, for the Petitioners.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—These three applications in revision are conversant with the facts relative to the prosecution of certain persons under sections 342 and 355 of the Indian Penal Code.

Criminal Revision No. 241 is presented on behalf of Babu Ramasray Chowdhury who was represented by Mr. Manuk, and who has been convicted under section 342, Indian Penal Code, and fined the sum of a thousand rupees, and in default rigorous imprisonment for three months. The accused was also convicted under section 355, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment, coupled with a fine of a thousand rupees.

Criminal Revision No. 240 is presented on behalf of the accused Sadanand Misra, Mangla Dhanuk, Ramphal Chowdhury and Nirsoo Mehtar, all of whom have been convicted under the same sections. They have been convicted under section 342, Indian Penal Code, and fined Rs. 25 each, and the same four persons have been similarly convicted under section 355, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to a simple fine of Rs. 50. Sadanand Misra, however, has been convicted under section 342 and section 355, Indian Penal Code, and has received a sentence corresponding in details with that awarded against Ramasray Chowdhury. In fact Sadanand Misra is the Manager of Babu Ramasray Chowdhury.

The third application in criminal revision, viz., No. 242, is an application on behalf of the Crown for enhancement of sentence in the event of this Court being of opinion that the accused were properly convicted of the offences with which they were respectively charged.

We do not intend in this case to deal in detail or at length with the facts relative to the case presented by the prosecution. It is undesirable that we should do so, having regard to the view which we take of the matters arising for our consideration and determination.

Briefly it may be stated, however, that the accused are all charged jointly with an offence of unlawfully confining a man called Ramu and also with using criminal force towards him. The incidents out of which the prosecution arose occurred on the 17th of December 1918.

SADANAND MISRA v. RAMASRAY.

The accused were all tried before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Samastipur; and Mr. Raisman, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, convicted all the accused by his order dated the 22nd April 1919.

From the decision of the Sub-Divisional Officer the parties appealed to the learned Sessions Judge of Darbhanga. The Sessions Judge, who was acting for the time being as such, was Mr. Jadunandan Prasad. It is mainly against his judgment that the several objections urged before us have been taken; which, the accused contend, give them the right to have the case presented by the prosecution retried.

I desire to avoid any reference to the facts of the case one way or the other; because it is undesirable that this Court should express any opinion either on the facts or upon the evidence by which those facts are supported Suffice it to say that three points are urged by Mr. Manuk and Mr. Dutt on behalf of their respective clients with a view of inducing us to set aside the entire proceedings in the original prosecution against the accused.

Taking each of these points in order they may be stated as follows:—

The first is that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate admitted in evidence protem the statement or confession of a person called Nirsoo Mehtar (who is now an accused person before us) made to P. W. No. 13, which he ought not to have admitted in point of law; and although the Magistrate did subsequently reject and disregard the aforesaid confession in arriving at a conclusion with regard to the merits of the case, nevertheless, it is urged, his mind must have been influenced if not prejudiced by a consideration of the facts stated in the statement or confession made by Nirsoo Mehtar. Nirsoo Mehtar was a sweeper, and he made a statement to the Police which was recorded by the Police Sub-Inspector with regard to certain incidents that took place on the 17th December, relative to certain indignities alleged to have been inflicted upon Ramu in the house of Babu Ramasray Chowdhury. It is alleged that the statement was taken from Nirsoo, not as an accused, but as a witness; and recorded by the Police Inspector as such: and consequently that it was not necessary to have the statement or confession of Nirsoo recorded by a Magistrate. Whether the statement was taken from Nirsoo or not as a witness, he is now an accused person and has been convicted.

The learned Sub-Divisional Officer himself was satisfied after consideration that the statement made by Nirsoo Mehtar to the Sub Inspector, P. W. No. 13, was not legal; and was, therefore, inadmissible in evidence against the accused or any of them.

Mr. Manuk contends that although the learned Magistrate eventually rejected the confession of Nirsoo, it must have affected the mind of the learned Sub-Divisional Officer. The learned Sub-Divisional Officer assures us that he disregarded and rejected the statement made by Nirsoo from his consideration altogether in arriving at a conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. We think that if the learned Sub Divisional Officer says that he rejected this statement in toto, we must accept his statement as true in the due exercise and discharge of his duty. We cannot believe that he, the learned Magistrate, would deliberately state that he had rejected the statement as forming any part of the evidence which influenced him in arriving at a determination with regard to the guilt or innocence of the accused, if that fact was untrue: because otherwise we should have to credit the learned Sub-Divisional Officer with the charge that he had deliberately and wilfully stated what was false. No doubt if a similar incident occurred in the case of a trial by Jury, different considerations would apply and the case would assume a different aspect. But where one person deals with the evidence who is a Judge of law and fact and that single Judge states with apparent integrity that he discredited a certain matter, we must believe that in fact he did discredit it and put it totally out of his thoughts and consideration. Therefore, we do not attach much importance to the first point urged by Mr. Manuk although we are of opinion that, had the learned Magistrate acted quite rightly and properly, he would have ruled directly as to the admissibility or inadmissibility of the confession made by Nirsoo in the first instance and then, but not until then, would he have looked at it or considered its terms. Unfortunately the learned Sub-

Divisional Officer adopted a different course of conduct, and one that we feel bound to say is most undesirable. He accepted the document with a taint upon it and eventually having read it and ruled as to its admissibility, rejected it. That is not the proper course to be pursued. It is most undesirable that in such cases a Magistrate should indulge in a practice so loose, and in my opinion also unsatisfactory, if not improper.

The real gravamen of the charge preferred by Mr. Manuk against the conviction in this case relates to the statement made by P. W. No. 4, a man called Banke. This is the second ground on which the propriety of the conviction in these cases is impeached. Banke was an eyewitness to the alleged incidents that took place on the morning of the 17th of December in the house of Babu Ramasray Chowdhury. It is alleged that on the evening of the 17th this witness, in company with P. W. No. 5, left at the request of the Musammat Alakhurpi in search for her manager. That is to say, that P. Ws. Nos. 4 and 5 left the village of Keota where the parties resided on the evening of the 17th December, and proceeded throughout the district to search for Gokal Singh, who was the manager of the Musammat.

Banke stated in the lower Court before the Sub-Divisional Officer, and also to the Police to whom he made a statement on the 24th December, that he was absent from the village of Keota from the evening of the 17th until the 24th December.

Musammat Alakhurpi also swore in her examination that she ordered Banke in company with P. W. No. 5 to go in search forthwith of her manager, and in pursuance of her order that they left the village of Keota on that date.

The learned Sub-Divisional Officer in this case thought it desirable to furnish a complete copy of the Police diaries to the accused; and as far as I can see, the Sub-Divisional Officer acted with fairness and propriety in what he did; I am sorry that, in these applications, any allegations have been made either as against the Sub-Divisional Officer or the learned Sessions Judge of impropriety on their part. There may have been to a certain extent irregularity in methods of procedure; but I am satisfied that in no way whatsoever did the learned Judge or the Sub-Divisional Officer deliberately do anything, knowing it to be deliberately wrong, or contrary to fair dealing, between the Crown and the prisoners. The prisoners desired to have copies of the Police diaries, and more especially the statements recorded in the Police diaries, made by the prosecution witnesses; and accordingly they were supplied with copies of such statements as they required; and amongst the statements which they asked for was the statement of Banke. The statement of Banke that was furnished to accused was not the complete statement recorded in the Police diary of the statement which was in fact made by Banke on the 24th December. From that statement a short paragraph was omitted. The omitted paragraph contained material matter which would be fairly calculated to discredit the evidence that Banke gave before the trial Court. The accused discoverd, pending the hearing of the appeal, that in fact the statement of Banke which had been furnished to them was imperfect; and they alleged through their legal advisers that the responsible authorities had deliberately suppressed a portion of Banke's statement in the draft furnished to them. In my opinion there was not any attempt at deliberate suppression of any portion of the statement of Banke; there was an omission to furnish an entire statement of Banke, but when the diaries are examined, it becomes quite obvious that the omission was due to a mistake by way of oversight on the part of the typist; and we thoroughly concur in the observations of the learned Judge that there was no deliberate intention on the part of the authorities to suppress that portion of the statement of Banke which was omitted from the statement furnished to the accused.

However, the accused, as they were entitled, pointed out to the learned Sessions Judge that in that portion of the statement of Banke which was omitted from the copies furnished to them, a vital matter appeared in respect of which they ought to be allowed to re-cross examine Banke and, if necessary, to have him re called for such purpose, and in addition to cross-examine the Police Inspector.

Now the vital matter in the statement of Banke which was omitted from the draft furnished to the accused was the statement that Banke was in the village of Keota on the evening of the 18th and the morning of the 19th of December. If the statement of Banke as given to the Police, and deposed to as evidence in the trial Court before the Sub-Divisional Officer, was true, Banke was not in the village of Keota after the evening of the 17th. Therefore, there was material in the statement of Banke as recorded by the Police Sub-Inspector which would vitally have affected Banke's credit as a witness; and I think that the accused were entitled to use the statement made by Banke to the Police Sub-Inspector with a view of generally impeaching Banke's credit.

The learned Judge declined to accede to the request of the Counsel appearing on behalf of the accused, and consequently the learned Judge refused to permit Banke to be recalled for cross examination or to allow the Sub-Inspector of Police to be cross-examined. In so ruling the learned Judge, we think, made a grave and regrettable mistake. We do not think that he made the mistake he did intentionally; but we do think, it was an exercise of discretion that was in itself deplorable, because the learned Judge ought in common fairness and also in justice and fair play to have allowed Banke to have been re cross-exmained in respect of a vital matter touching his credibility not only as to the facts stated in the statement itself, but also relative to the incidents of which he is alleged to have been an eye-witness which occured upon the morning of the 17th December.

But the learned Judge deals with this matter by saying: "I will assume that Banke was in the village on the 18th and 19th, as deposed to by him, and if he was, he is a liar; on the other hand I will assume, if you like, that he was in the village on the 18th or 19th of December as alleged, and that his statement to the contrary is, therefore, false: and accordingly whichever process of reasoning is employed, I arrive at the conclusion that what Banke stated at the end of his statement to the Police Sub-Inspector is untrue, and I will discredit it."

With great respect to the learned Sessions Judge, evidence at a criminal trial cannot be dealt with in that manner.

The learned Government Advocate candidly admits, and he is always very fair and upright in the way in which he conducts the cases in which he appears on behalf of the Crown in this Court, that if the learned Judge had ruled rightly on the submission made to him, he would have acceded to the application of the accused, and allowed Banke to be examined or to be cross-examined. However, notwithstanding the ruling of the learned Judge, the Government Advocate contends that it affords no reason or justification why the conviction should be set aside or that the accused should be re tried. The Government Advocate adopts a somewhat unique position and argues:—discredit Banke; discredit the entire of Banke's evidence if you like; discredit P. W. No. 5's evidence, and possibly P. W. No. 6, but apart from these witnesses there is ample other evidence on the record which would justify a conviction of all the accused; therefore, act on it, and determine, irrespective of the evidence of Banke and of the other persons associated with him as alleged eye-witness of the incidents that occurred on the 17th Decemer 1918, the merits of the prosecution case and adjudicate as to the guilt of the accused.

With great respect to the argument of the learned Government Advocate it fails to appreciate the functions of this Court acting in its revisional jurisdiction. If we acceded to the argument addressed to us for one moment, it might lead to the greatest possible abuse in the administration of the law and criminal justice in subordinate Courts. Subordinate criminal Courts must conduct criminal cases in the ordinary way and by the ordinary rules as to the rights of accused persons which have been laid down with clearness and precision: and one essential element in the recognition of such rights is that Courts must see that the criminal cases are conducted with fairness and propriety, and that nothing is done on the trial of an accused person which may reasonably lead to the impression that the accused has not received fair treatment or an impartial and fair trial.

In this case we are reluctantly obliged to hold that the learned Judge, in acting as he did in refusing to allow Banke to be cross-examined on his revised statement, unfortunately committed a grave error which forms a ground for the more or less plausible pretext that possibly the accused did not receive fair and even handed justice at the hands of the learned Sessions Judge.

The third point taken by Mr. Manuk is the omission of the learned Judge to consider and comment on the fact that in the letter written by the Musammat Alakhurpi to the Police Inspector at 11 o'clock on the morning of the 17th there was no mention made of the names of the eye-witnesses who were alleged to have been present and saw Ramu wrongfully confined in the house of accused No. 1.

The learned Counsel contends that the failure of the Court, judging from its judgment to consider this matter, shows a want of appreciation and a fair consideration of the evidence, which amounts to a want of fair trial of the accused.

Possibly this is a matter which may deserve comment at the proper time before a proper tribunal; but we do not think, having regard to our views, with regard to the second argument addressed to us by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of Ramasray Chowdhury, it is necessary to discuss the third argument. For these reasons, therefore, we think it desirable that this case should be retried without any expression of opinion by us with regard to the third argument addressed to us, and although we both have formed an opinion upon the matter, we think that with greater propriety it would be desirable that we should express no opinion with reference to it.

Accordingly we will accede to the application presented on behalf of Ramasray Chowdhury and on behalf of the petitioners in Criminal Revision No. 240, and we will set aside the conviction of the accused before the learned Sessions Judge, and the conviction of the accused by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Samastipur, and we will direct that the case be transferred from the file of the learned Sub-Divisional Officer of Samastipur to the files of a first class Magistrate of Darbhanga to be appointed by the District Magistrate.

Let the fines, if paid by the accused, be refunded.

In Criminal Revision No. 242, the Government Advocate applies to withdraw his application. Leave is accordingly granted.

Conviction set aside;
Retrial ordered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 435, 438—Discharge, order of—Additional Sessions Judge, power of, to set aside order and direct further inquiry.

An Additional Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to examine the records of a case transferred to him by the Sessions Judge in which the accused has been discharged, and to set aside the order of discharge and direct further inquiry. [p. 342, col. 1]

Criminal revision against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated the 15th November 1919.

Mr. C. Dillon, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. C. Mukerjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

KNOX, J.—One Babu Ram Mahajan, on the 7th of July 1919, charged Nazar Husain, Zemindar of Manza Thendera, with having cheated him. In his complaint he said that the accused on the 8th of May 1918 mortgaged to him 3 biswas out of 10 biswas in Manza Thendera on consideration of Rs. 1,500. He stated that he would not have executed this mortgage, if he had known that the accused had on the 15th April 1918 transferred to his wife 6¼ biswas in this village. The complaint was made in the Court of the District Magistrate of Muzaffarnagar. The Magistrate proceeded to hear the complaint but on the 13th of August 1919 discharged the accused under section 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Additional Sessions

Judge of Meerut on going through the record of the Magistrate's Court passed an order to this effect:—

"In my opinion the case is a fit one for further enquiry. I set aside the order of discharge and direct that Nazar Husain be tried afresh according to law for the offence of cheating under section 420."

An application has been made to this Court asking that this order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Meerut be revised. I purposely abstain from commenting any further upon the facts of the case. It would be difficult, if I did, perhaps impossible, to abstain from setting forth my views upon the case as it now stands and prejudicing either Nazar Husain or Babu Ram. I have heard the learned Counsel who appears for Nazar Husain, on the first plea, that the Additional Sessions Judge may be without jurisdiction to order further enquiry. This plea, I think, is not a plea that can prevail The case was one transferred by the Sessions Judge of Meerut to the Additional Sessions Judge, and this in my opinion did confer a jurisdiction upon the Additional Sessions Judge, to examine the record under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code (see section 438, clause 2). I also hold that there are matters which can be enquired into by the District Magistrate, into which the District Magistrate has not enquired and which are necessary to complete a proper decision on the subject-matter of the complaint. Further than that I decline to go. I am not here to suggest to the complainant on the one side or to Nazar Husain on the other, matter that may be for consideration by the District Magistrate. The application for revision to this Court is dismissed. I direct that the order of discharge be set aside and that the Magistrate, after hearing all evidence, oral or documentary, that may be laid before him, proceed to a perfect decision upon the complaint. Let the record be returned.

Application dismissed.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 42, 45, 47, 109—Rules under s. 47, validity of—"Preference," meaning of—Jurisdiction of ordinary Courts in dealing with matters relating to preference—Railway Administration, power of, to reserve accommodation for particular class—Rules, modification of, procedure for obtaining.

A rule lawfully made under section 47 of the Railways Act providing for special accommodation or for the special convenience of a particular individual or of a particular class of individuals and for the general convenience of the travelling public is within the four corners of the Act. [p. 343, col. 2.]

The "preference" forbidden by sections 42 and 43 of the Railways Act refers to goods traffic and rates charged upon traders and does not apply to passengers and, inasmuch as a special tribunal is appointed for the decision of questions thereunder, the ordinary Civil and Criminal Tribunals have no jurisdiction to deal with questions of preference. [p. 343, col. 2.]

A person who enters a compartment of a Railway carriage reserved by a Railway Administration for the use of passengers of a particular class to which he does not belong, and refuses to leave when required to do so by a Railway servant, renders himself liable to the penalty provided by section 109 of the Railways Act. [p. 344, col 2.]

Where a person finds matter for objection in a rule authorising the reservation of a compartment of a particular train for the use of a certain class of passengers only, his remedy is not to commit a deliberate breach of the rule, but through the authorities referred to in Chapter V of the Railways Act. [p. 345, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Muttra, dated the 15th September 1919.

Mr. Bhagwati Shankar, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—I referred this question, which came before me in revision, because it seems to me desirable that it should be decided by a Bench of two Judges which might be convened to dispose of the question once for all so far as this Court was concerned. It seemed to me a question of sufficient public importance and one which might give rise to difficulties of interpretation. The question really dealt with by the Magistrate who decided the case, was whether the Railway Authorities were authorised by law to reserve a compartment for a class of passengers in any train, and it was for the decision of that question that I decided to refer the case to a Bench of two Judges. But that question is not really the question raised by this case. The facts are that on the 29th of July of last year one Birjbasi Lal, travelling on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, wilfully entered a third class compartment in the Up Express, which compartment had been specially reserved by the Railway Authorities for Europeans and Anglo-Indians only. There were passengers in the compartment who protested. The Assistant Station Master was referred to. Eventually the aid of the Police was called in and Birjbasi Lal was removed. No question as to the legality of the removal has been raised, but the Railway Authorities prosecuted the accused for an offence under section 109 of the Railways Act, and he was convicted and fined Rs. 10 or to undergo one week's simple imprisonment in default. Now the sub-section of section 109 under which the charge was made and the penalty inflicted, or rather the material parts of it, run as follows:—"If a passenger having entered a compartment which is reserved by a Railway Administration for the use of another passenger refuses to leave when required to do so by any Railway servant, he shall be punished with fine."

The question, therefore, is whether section 109 provides a penalty for entering a compartment reserved not merely for the use of a particular person or particular named individuals, but for a particular class of persons.

It is not contended that it does not provide a penalty for the breach of a reservation in favour of a particular individual, or particular named individuals. The power of the Railway Authorities to reserve compartments is not and cannot be seriously disputed. Section 109 clearly confers it by implication. Section 64 makes it even compulsory up to a certain point, in the case of females for a journey of a specified length, and other portions of the Act make it perfectly clear.

In addition to these sections our attention has been drawn to a provision in Chapter VI of the Act dealing with the general working of Railways which enables every Railway Company, and in the case of a Railway administered by the Government, an officer appointed for that purpose, to make general rules, consistent with the Act, for amongst other purposes providing for the accommodation and convenience of passengers. A rule under this section is not to take effect until it has received the sanction of the Governor-General in Council and been published in the Gazette of India. And, although no rules in the case of this particular Railway have been put in evidence and, therefore, the question does not arise for decision by us, it cannot be doubted that a rule lawfully made under that section providing for special accommodation or for the special convenience of a particular individual or a particular class of individuals and for the general convenience of the travelling public would be within the four corners of the Act.

The main argument against this conviction which has been pressed upon us is that section 109 is limited to the breach of a reservation in favour of a particular individual or particular named individuals. It is faintly suggested, and appears to have been argued before the Magistrate, that in any case a reservation is a "preference" forbidden by sections 42 and 43 of the Act. In our view this contention is hardly worthy of notice. The sections referred to belong to a chapter of the Act which deals with goods traffic, and rates charged upon traders, and a special tribunal is appointed for the decision of questions thereunder. None of the ordinary Criminal or Civil tribunals have any jurisdiction to deal with questions of preference under that portion of the Act. In our view the contention is untenable and inconsistent with the admitted power of reservation contained in the Act.

The question, therefore, is "Is section 109 limited as suggested by the defendant?" Two difficulties are suggested in the way of holding to the contrary. In the first place, by sub-section 2 of section 109 resistance is by implication allowed in the case of an entry by another passenger, where it is made, into a compartment reserved for the use of the person resisting.

And the question is asked with some force, "Can you say that one person occupying quite haphazard a place in a compartment which might contain, but which does not, five or six other Anglo-Indians, for example, together with himself, is a person for whose use the compartment has been reserved?" In one sense he is. In another sense he is not. He has not obtained any special reservation from the Railway Company in favour of himself as an individual, but he does occupy the compartment which, by the Railway Company's voluntary act, has been reserved for himself amongst others belonging to the description contained in the reservation. But two illustrations have been given in the course of the argument which seem to me conclusive. Take the case of a compartment labelled as reserved for the use of the 2nd Gurkhas and a Civilian entering therein or a compartment labelled as reserved for the use of members of the Bandman Touring Comic Opera Company and a member of the ordinary public entering therein. Could it really be argued that in either of those cases the person so entering was not entering a compartment which had been "reserved for the use of another passenger," the words "another passenger" being converted in order to enforce the contention by virtue of section 13 of the General Clauses Act into the words "other passengers."

The second difficulty is this:—It was really put by my brother in the course of the argument. Section 119 undoubtedly makes special provision in the case of a person committing a breach of the reservation for the protection of females, and the argument is that if section 109 is to be interpreted in the way suggested by the Railway Authorities, provision had already been made in the Act for such a case, and section 119 would be superfluous. This undoubtedly is a formidable argument, I think the answer to it is this, that section 119 is super-imposed upon the provision already made by section 109 for the case of females. It was considered so important to provide, not only a penalty, but an instant preventive measure in the case of a person entering a carriage for females, that not only is an additional penalty provided in the amount of the fine and in the forfeiture of the fare and of the ticket (which means to say that the man is prevented from travelling by that train if the Station Master does not choose to issue another ticket to him) but forcible removal by a Railway servant from the Railway altogether may be used, a provision which is absent from section 109. I think both the difficulties I have mentioned are satisfactorily answered. On the other hand it would be strange indeed if, while there was a general power of reservation vested in a Railway Administration, an obviously necessary power and one which would be almost useless unless elastic, the Legislature should have provided a penalty for a breach of such a reservation in the case of a particular individual or named individual, a penalty for a breach of the reservation in the case of females, and no penalty for a breach of any other reservation at all. I think the language of section 109 is apt to cover a case of a reservation in favour of any number of passengers of a particular class or classes and that a penalty is provided for the case of anybody who seeks to use it other than the particular passenger or kind of passengers for whom it has been reserved.

I would merely observe for my own part that in my opinion this question is not a race question at all. Nor it is a question even in the colloquial sense of the word of "preference" or "oppression". It is merely a case of providing for the general convenience of the travelling public which has been left by the Legislature in India, as it has always been left by the Legislature in England from which this legislation is very largely adopted, to the discretion of experienced Railway Administrators. It operates, as I have pointed out in the course of my judgment, upon Europeans as between themselves. It operates also upon Indians as between themselves. And unless some penalty existed, provisions for such events as special marriage parties, or military or theatrical parties, or large bodies of persons travelling on occasions for special objects, could not be satisfactorily made. In my view the conviction was right and no ground for interference has been shown.

PIGGOTT, J.—Although I was considerably impressed at one stage of the argument by the case in favour of the applicant as based upon the wording of section 109 of the Indian Railways Act (No. IX of 1890), I have come to the conclusion that the conviction on the facts found and admitted before us is valid in law. The point of the offence of which the applicant has been found guilty lies in his refusal to leave a particular compartment when required to do so by a Railway servant. That compartment had been reserved by the Railway Administration for the use of passengers other than the applicant, and this is in my opinion sufficient to bring the case within the purview of section 109 (1). As regards the argument addressed to us based upon the wording of section 42(2) of the same Act, I think it is to be noted that this section occurs in a chapter specially devoted to the question of the duties imposed upon Railway Companies and the nature of the control to be exercised over such companies by the Government of the country. I have no doubt that in framing the regulation which authorises the reservation of one third class compartment of a particular train for the use of European and Anglo-Indian passengers only, the Railway Company believed themselves to be providing for the accommodation and convenience of their passengers generally, taking a broad view of the practical effect of such a reservation. If any citizen of the country finds matter for objection in the rule under which such a reservation is made, his remedy seems to lie through the authority of the Governor-General in Council and the Railway Commission, referred to in Chapter V of the Act, and he has certainly not been left to work out a remedy for himself by a deliberate breach of the rule such as to bring his action within the scope of section 109 (1) of the Act. For these reasons, I concur in the order dismissing the application.

BY THE COURT.—The application is dismissed.

W. H. LOCKLEY—PRISONER—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 235 258, 257, scope of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 414, 420—Receiving stolen property and cheating, joinder of charges of, legality of—Same transaction, meaning of—Re-cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, right of, nature of—Witnesses not further cross-examined, evidence of, admissibility of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 33.

A charge of receiving stolen property may be joined with a charge for cheating, when the facts constituting the offences form part of the same transaction. [p 347, col. 1.]

The true test of acts forming part of the same transaction is that there should be a continuous operation of acts leading to the same end and a common purpose should run through all the acts. [p. 347, col. 1.]

Waiver by the accused's Counsel of the right to re-cross-examine a prosecution witness cannot prejudice the rights of the accused under sections 256 and 257, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 347, col. 2.]

The right referred to in section 256 of the Criminal Procedure Code is absolute and unqualified and is intended to apply only where the witnesses are still before the Court and before they have been discharged from further attendance. [p 348, col. 1; p. 350, col. 2.]

Under section 257, however, there is a discretion vested in the Court to re-summon the prosecution witnesses already examined, and where a witness has been allowed to depart on the representation of the accused that he is not required, any further application to re-cross-examine him must be deemed to fall under section 257. [p. 350, col. 2.]

Zamunia v. Ram Tahal, 27 C. 370; 4 C. W. N. 469; Inder Rai v. Emperor, 5 Ind. Cas. 408; 37 C. 236; 14 C. W. N. 280; 11 C L. J. 418; 11 Cr. L. J. 128; Mulua v. Sheoraj Singh, 11 Ind. Where the right to cross-examine a witness has been exercised, the evidence taken becomes complete for the purpose of being admitted in a later proceeding. The mere fact that the witness could have been subjected to a further cross-examination in the exercise of a further right is no ground for holding the evidence already taken to be inadmissible. [p. 349, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of the Court of the Second Presidency Magistrate, George Town, Madras, in Calendar Case No. 7020 of 1919.

LOCKLEY v. EMPEROR.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Richmond, for the Appellant.—The lower Court acted with material irregularity in clubbing together charges under sections 414 and 420, Indian Penal Code. The charge under section 420 was added after the prosecution closed their case. The accused purchased the articles from the Chief Engineer of the S. S. Ural and negotiations for the purchase were complete, and the accused took delivery of the articles. His subsequent misappropriation of a portion of the money had no connection with the receipt of the articles. The subsequent framing of a distinct charge under section 420 necessarily had the effect of prejudicing the accused.

Secondly, the evidence of Mr. Wilson was inadmissible, because he was not further cross-examined. The evidence was incomplete. The fact that accused's Counsel in the lower Court waived the right of further cross-examination cannot affect accused's rights under sections 256 and 257, Criminal Procedure Code. The right is absolute and unqualified and Courts cannot withhold from him the right. Whether the witnesses are before the Court or have left its precincts, the accused has the right to demand that they shall be re-summoned for cross examination. Iswar Chunder Raut v. Koli Kumar Dass (1), Inder Rai v. Emperor (2). As soon as the charge was framed, the application was made to further cross-examine Mr. Wilson. The Magistrate should have recorded his reasons for refusing to grant the application. He has not done so and the fact that he has recorded his reasons in the final judgment does not cure the defect.

The evidence of Mr. Wilson is wholly inadmissible under section 33 of the Evidence Act, as it is incomplete without the further cross-examination.

Mr. Sydney Smith, Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.—There is no illegality in the joinder of charges under sections 411 or 414 and 420, Indian Penal Code. They are connected together and constitute one transaction. The application to Mr. Wilson for the money was to effect the purchase. The aim and object was to misappropriate Rs. 1,000. The first act was to negotiate for the purchase and the rest was to obtain money for it. There is a common purpose running through both.

Mr. Wilson's evidence is not inadmissible simply because he was not further cross-examined. Whatever may be the value of the evidence, the evidence has been completed, Mr Wilson having once been examined and fully cross-examined. The fact that it is now stated is intended to be elicited in the further cross examination, viz., that Mr. Wilson was a party to the misappropriation, was not even faintly suggested to him while he was in the witness-box. The application cannot be bona fide. Besides, Mr. Wilson having been allowed to leave the Court, section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply. As the accused had entered on the stage of defence, the re-summoning of Mr. Wilson for the purpose of further cross-examination was a matter in the Court's discretion.

The non recording of reasons for refusal to re summon as a separate note is only a trivial irregularity and does not vitiate the case, especially as the reasons have been stated in the judgment.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The accused has been convicted of the offence of cheating. He was employed in Messrs. Oakes & Co. as Works Manager. Mr. Wilson was employed in the same firm in a slightly higher capacity. The case for the prosecution is that the accused received Rs. 3,000 from Mr. Wilson on the representation that the money was required for paying for certain articles purchased for the firm from the Chief Engineer of S. S. Ural, but that he only paid Rs. 2,000 to the Chief Engineer and misappropriated the balance.

The arguments in appeal were mainly devoted to attacking the procedure followed by the Magistrate. Mr. Richmond's first complaint was that there was a misjoinder of charges. The facts on which this contention was based are these:—

(1) 4 C. W. N. 351.
(2) 5 Ind. Cas. 408; 37 C. 236; 14 C. W. N. 280; 11 C. L. J. 418; 11 Cr. L. J. 128.

The original charge against the accused was that he received stolen property from the Chief Engineer. After the prosecution evidence was closed, an alternative charge under section 420, Indian Penal Code, was added. The learned Counsel contended that a charge for receiving stolen property should not have been joined with a charge for cheating. I fail to see the force of this objection. The request to Mr. Wilson for the payment of Rs. 3,000 was in furtherance of the purpose of concluding the purchase from the Chief Engineer. It was said that as the articles were handed over to the accused, the negotiations for the purchase had terminated and that the subsequent receipt of money which was misappropriated had, therefore, no connection with the receipt of the article.

Section 235 speaks of a series of acts forming part of the same transaction. There can be little doubt that in arrranging with the Chief Engineer for the purchase, the accused intended that that purchase should be effectuated by inducing Mr. Wilson to give him money for it. The true test of a series of acts forming the same transaction is that there should be a continuous operation of acts leading to the same end, and a common purpose should run through all the acts. See Emperor v. Sherufalli (3). For misappropriating Rs. 1,000 the first act was to arrange for the bargain and the second act was to obtain the money. Both these are connected together and have the same community of purpose. I must, therefore, reject the contention that there has been a misjoinder of charges.

The next contention related to the refusal of the Presidency Magistrate to adjourn the case to enable the accused to further examine Mr. Wilson. The facts relating to this part of the case are these: Mr. Wilson was examined for the prosecution and was cross-examined at some length by the Counsel for the defence. The witness had made arrangements for leaving India. Thereupon the Magistrate asked Counsel for the defence whether he would insist upon the presence of Mr. Wilson any further. We find this note made by him: "Mr. Grant has given up the re-cross-examination of Mr. Wilson, even in case a charge is to be framed." After this statement by Counsel, Mr. Wilson left India.

It is argued that this waiver by Counsel does not disentitle the accused from claiming that, on the framing of a charge, the witness should be recalled. It was first contended that the waiver, if any, was only with reference to the charges originally framed and not to the alternative charge added. The Counsel who conducted the case before the Presidency Magistrate must have known that evidence as to cheating was being tendered by the prosecution. Mr. Wilson himself gave that evidence and he was subjected to cross-examination upon that matter. Therefore, the suggestion cannot be accepted. I, however, agree that a waiver like this cannot prejudice the right of the accused under sections 256 and 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Vide Kokil Ghose v. Kasimuddi Malita (4).

I shall now see whether, in the circumstances of this case, the right claimed is an absolute one. There has been some conflict of views upon the interpretation of sections 256 and 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Therefore, I shall first of all deal with the language of the sections before dealing with the decided cases.

The procedure prescribed for trial is this: Where an accused is not discharged, a charge is to be framed. Section 255 lays down that the charge shall be read to the accused and that he shall be asked whether he is guilty or has any defence to make. Section 256 says that, if the accused claims to be tried, 'he shall be required to state whether he wishes to cross-examine any, and if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken.' "If he says he does so wish, the witnesses named by him shall be recalled and after cross-examination and re-examination, if any, they shall be discharged." This language seems to indicate that the witnesses are still in Court, because when we come to section 257, there we find mention of processes being issued for compelling the attendance of witnesses to be further examined; there is no such mention in section 256. And the further provision that the witnesses shall be discharged has reference to the ordinary practice in Criminal Courts, of witnesses being bound over to attend Court de die in diem; it is on the framing of the charge and after ascertaining the wishes of the accused, they are ordinarily discharged. There is no injustice done to the accused by such a procedure, because a further right is given him of summoning the witnesses for the prosecution who might have been discharged. Therefore, in my opinion, the right referred to in section 256 which is absolute and unqualified is intended to apply only where the witnesses are still before the Court and before they have been discharged from further attendance. In my opinion, in the present case, the application to further examine Mr. Wilson is not covered by section 256, but comes under section 257. The Calcutta High Court in Iswar Chunder Raut v. Kali Kumar Dass (1) appears to have taken the view that even in cases the witnesses are not before the Court, the accused has the absolute privilege of demanding that they should be summoned. Zamunia v. Ram Tahal (5) takes the same view. Vide, also, Inder Rai v. Emperor (2). The view taken in Allahabad is different. See Mulua v. Sheoraj Singh (6). In this conflict of authorities, I am free to express my opinion upon an examination of the language of the sections, and my conclusion is that in the present instance the privilege claimed by the accused is not an absolute one. I am clear that this will not prejudice the accused. If his legal advisers keep their eyes open, he is not likely to suffer by holding that section 256 only applies to cases of witnesses actually before the Court when the charge is read out. An accused has the right to cross-examine the witnesses before the charge is framed; he has a right of re cross-examining the witnesses present in Court after the charge is framed: he has a further right, subject to certain conditions, of re-summoning the prosecution witnesses after entering upon his defence. These are ample safeguards, and I do not think that to confine section 256 to the category of cases mentioned by me is likely to affect the accused in his defence.

(3) 27 B. 185; 4 Bom. L. R. 930.

The next question relates to the construction of section 257. In the first portion of that section, it is stated: "if the accused, after he has entered upon his defence, applies to the Magistrate to issue any process for compelling the attendance of any witness for the purpose of examination, etc., the Magistrate shall issue such process unless he considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Such ground shall be recorded by him in writing" Some arguments were addressed to us as to whether the stage of entering upon the defence was reached when the Magistrate refused to adjourn the case for further examination of Mr. Wilson. From the record it is clear that after the charge was framed, a list of witnesses was given by the accused and the case was adjourned for the examination of the defence witnesses. No doubt the proper procedure to have adopted was to have asked the accused whether he insisted upon the cross-examination of any of the witnesses for the prosecution who may have been present in Court; but it does not appear that any such witnesses were present or that any such right was claimed. Therefore, I must hold that the accused entered upon his defence by pleading not guilty and by mentioning that he had witnesses to examine. It is true that the application for re-summoning Mr. Wilson was made at once, but that would not show that the stage of entering upon the defence had not been reached when the accused, through his Counsel, informed the Magistrate that he had witnesses to examine.

I have now to see whether the Magistrate has recorded his reasons in writing for refusing to re-summon Mr. Wilson. He has mentioned them in his judgment; the matter itself came before the High Court on an application made to postpone the hearing pending the arrival of Mr. Wilson. The Magistrate should no doubt have put on paper his reasons for the refusal. However, that is an irregularity which does not vitiate the case, having regard specially to the fact that he has given full reasons in his judgment, and the matter has been fully gone into in this Court on a previous occasion.

Another question is whether the refusal to adjourn was justifiable. If I understood Mr. Richmond aright, the facts which were expected to be elicited from the further examination of Mr. Wilson were intended to show that that witness himself was a party to the misappropriation. Mr. Richmond said that it could be elicited from the witness that it is the custom among merchants, at least among the employees of Oakes & Co., to take money from the firm, with a view to profiting personally from the bargain that may be concluded in the name of the firm. The disingenuousness of such a plea is apparent on the face of it. Moreover when Mr. Wilson was in the witness-box, no such question was put to him and no witnesses were summoned from Oakes & Co. or from any other firm to prove such a pernicious practice. It seems to me, therefore, that the object in asking for the adjournment was not really to advance justice but to delay it. I am, therefore, of opinion that the refusal to adjourn the case was justifiable under section 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The last question to be considered is whether the evidence already given by Mr. Wilson is inadmissible because a further opportunity was not given to cross examine him. I agree with the contention of the learned Crown Prosecutor that the evidence is admissible. Under section 33 of the Evidence Act evidence given by a witness in a judicial proceeding is relevant for the purpose of proving in a later stage of the same proceeding the truth of the fact which it states, when the presence of the witness cannot be obtained without an amount of delay or expense which the Court considers unreasonable, provided the adverse party in the first proceeding had a right and opportunity to cross examine. The evidence of Mr. Wilson was given at the earlier stage of the present proceedings. From the statement of the learned Crown Prosecutor as well as of Mr. Richmond, it is not known when and whether Mr. Wilson will come to India. It is also clear that the accused had the opportunity to cross-examine and exercised that right at the first stage. Mr. Richmond suggested that as the accused had a further right under section 257, that until that right was exercised, the evidence could not be admitted. Whatever may be the value to be attached to the evidence, I agree with the contention of the learned Crown Prosecutor that once the opportunity to cross-examine has been exercised, the evidence then taken becomes complete for the purpose of being admitted in a later proceeding. The mere fact that the witness could have been subjected to a further cross-examination in the exercise of the further right is not a ground for holding the evidence to be inadmissible. I am, therefore, of opinion that Mr. Wilson's evidence given before the charge was framed is admissible in the case.

On the merits, Mr. Richmond argued that no criminal intention was proved, as the accused admitted the receipt of money and pleaded that he applied a portion of it for his own use in what he considered to be the usual practice in such matters. I am wholly unable to accept this argument as sound. The Magistrate is right in holding that a clear case of misappropriation has been made out. I confirm the conviction and sentence.

PHILLIPS, J.—As this case raises a question of some importance which has not been decided before in this Court, I think it advisable to deliver a separate though concurring judgment. The accused has been convicted under section 420, Indian Penal Code, by the George Town Presidency Magistrate. The case is that he purchased certain machinery for Messrs. Oakes & Co. for Rs. 2,000, but represented to the Managing Director, Mr. Wilson, that the amount was Rs. 3,000 and consequently obtained a cheque from Mr. Wilson, for the latter amount. No doubt, the accused was not originally charged under section 420. The charge sheet was laid under section 411 or 414, Indian Penal Code, but it is clear from the examination and cross-examination of Mr. Wilson and other witnesses that the possibility of the charge under section 420 was before the mind not only of the Court but also of the accused, and it cannot be said that the accused was in any way taken by surprise by such a charge being framed on the facts laid before the Court. After Mr. Wilson's examination was concluded, the accused's Counsel stated that Mr. Wilson would not be required for re-cross-examination, and apparently on the strength of that, Mr. Wilson was allowed to proceed to England, whence he has not yet returned and it is unknown when he will return. Very soon after the charge was framed, an application was made for re cross-examining Mr. Wilson and the case was adjourned with a view to secure his attendance. After several adjournments, the Magistrate refused to adjourn the case any further, as the attendance of the witness could not be secured, and apparently acting under section 257, Criminal Procedure Code, he proceeded to dispose of the case without hearing any further examination of Mr. Wilson. He has recorded his reasons for doing so in his judgment, and the question we have to decide is whether he was right in acting under section 257, or whether the accused had not an absolute right under section 256 to recall Mr. Wilson before the case was closed.

Under section 256, the accused is given the right of recalling any of the prosecution witnesses as soon as the charge is framed, and after such re-examination, the accused is to be called upon to enter on his defence. It has been held in Allahabad by Knox, J., in Mulun v. Sheoraj Singh (6) that this absolute right of the accused extends only to the recalling of such witnesses as are present in Court. No doubt, it is ordinarily the duty of the Magistrate to retain the prosecution witnesses in Court until the accused has had an opportunity of exercising his right. The Calcutta view is somewhat different. In Iswar Chunder Raut v. Kali Kumar Dass (1) the accused was held to be entitled as a matter of right to re-summon one of the prosecution witnesses. The question as to whether there is any difference between the provisions of sections 256 and 257 or what that difference is, was not discussed. The other two Calcutta cases cited, namely, Zamunia v. Ram Tahal (5) and Inder Rai v. Emperor (2), take the same view, but in the former case it is further laid down that when an accused has entered upon his defence, his right to re-cross-examine witnesses is governed by section 257, Criminal Procedure Code. I, however, think it significant that the word "recall" alone is used in section 256 and that it means a mere calling in of the witnesses who may be present in or about the Court precincts, for, if it also includes the re-summoning of witnesses, the procedure in all cases would be most cumbersome. First of all, a charge will have to be framed, then the prosecution witnesses will have to be re-summoned and further cross examined and then the accused will have to be called upon to enter on his defence and yet another adjournment will be necessary for the defence witnesses. This appears to me to be an undue prolongation of the trial, and as another intepretation of the section is possible and has been adopted in the Allahabad High Court, I think that that interpretation is correct. If the Court has allowed the witnesses to depart without re-cross-examination, then no doubt the Magistrate would not refuse to re-summon under section 257 unless there were some special circumstances to justify the refusal. But if, as in this case, a witness has been allowed to depart on the representation of the accused that he was not required, I think that any further application to re cross-examine him must be deemed to be one under section 257. Under that section, the Magistrate is empowered to refuse the application for grounds given in the section,—one of which is that it would defeat the ends of justice. The Magistrate in this case framed a charge and admittedly the prosecution witnesses were not then present and the accused had, therefore, no opportunity of recalling them. He was, therefore, called upon to enter on his defence and stated that he had witnesses to examine and promised to put in a written statement of his case. That being so, he had entered upon his defence and I think the Magistrate was justified in asking him to do so. The subsequent application to recall Mr. Wilson must, therefore, be deemed to have been under section 257, which gives the Magistrate discretion in the matter. I cannot, therefore, hold that he has acted with any illegality in refusing to adjourn the case for the re examination of Mr. Wilson.

The second question then arises as to whether the Magistrate properly exercised his discretion. It is suggested for the defence that Mr. Wilson, when he gave a cheque for Rs. 3,000, was perfectly aware of the fact that the accused was only going to pay Rs. 2,000 for the goods purchased and acquiesced in his retaining the additional Rs. 1,000 as a sort of 'secret commission', as it is called. What the so-called secret commission really amounts to is a sum obtained from the Company, who employed the accused and Mr. Wilson, by fraud. The Company was made to pay more than the proper price for the goods, the balance going into the pocket of the accused. If, therefore, Mr. Wilson were to admit that he was aware of this secret commission, he would be declaring himself a party to this fraud; and apart from the unlikelihood of his making any such admission, it is very strange that no such question was put to him in his cross-examination which, was fairly detailed and made at a time when the accused must have known that this was one of his defences. In view of the fact that this defence was put forward afterwards, it is impossible to say that the ends of justice require the attendance of Mr. Wilson for further examination. The fraud was not that the accused obtained this money from Mr. Wilson personally, but as Directing Manager of Messrs. Oakes & Co.'s Engineering Works. I, therefore, think that the Presidency Magistrate exercised his discretion properly, and I reject this ground of appeal. As regards the plea of misjoinder, it seems to me that the case is clearly governed by section 235, Criminal Procedure Code. On the evidence on record, the charge under section 420 is clearly made out, and, therefore, the accused's appeal must be dismissed and his conviction and sentence confirmed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Jurisdiction—Criminal jurisdiction along Railway running through Native State—Offence committed in British India—Accused, whether can be arrested at Railway Station in Native State—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 58.

The Gwalior State did not cede to the British Government jurisdiction over the Railway lands in respect of offences not committed on those lands and having no connection with the Railway Administration. Therefore, the arrest of a person at the Gwalior Railway Station on a charge of an offence committed in British India is illegal. [p. 352, col. 2]

Petition, under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Montgomery at Lahore, dated the 24th October 1919, affirming that of the District Magistrate, Montgomery, dated the 24th August 1919.

Mr. S. K. Mukerji, for the Petitioner.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 24th August last the District Magistrate of Montgomery telegraphed to the Sub-Inspector of the Gwalior Railway Police, asking him to arrest the petitioner Radha Kishan (apparently on a charge of an offence under section 161, Indian Penal Code) and stating that a warrant was following. In pursuance of that telegram Radha Kishan was arrested at Gwalior Railway Station on the 26th August. He was taken to Jhansi and released on bail by the Railway Magistrate. He applied to the Sessions Court for revision of the order issued by the District Magistrate of Montgomery for his arrest in Gwalior State, contending that he could not be legally arrested in the Railway lands at Gwalior for a non extraditable offence. His application was rejected by the Sessions Judge, and he has now applied to this Court.

It is urged on behalf of the Crown that as the petitioner has gone back to Gwalior State and has broken his bond he is not entitled to apply to this Court, but I cannot agree that his not surrendering himself deprives him of the right to question the legality of his arrest.

Whether he could be lawfully arrested in the Railway lands at Gwalior by the order of the District Magistrate of Montgomery depends upon the extent to which jurisdiction in those lands has been ceded by the Maharaja Scindia of Gwalior to the British Government. The contention on behalf of the petitioner is that jurisdiction was ceded only for the purpose of the administration of Railways and of civil and criminal justice in connection therewith within the Railway lands. The question could best be settled by the correspondence that passed between the Gwalior State and the Government of India, but that correspondence is not before me and the only material for coming to a decision on the point is paragraph 3 of Government of India Notification No. 534-I. B., dated the 8th February 1907, which runs as follows:—"And whereas the rulers or administrators of the other States mentioned in the second column of the schedule hereto annexed have ceded to the British Government full jurisdiction, or all the jurisdiction they had or the jurisdiction necessary for the administration of Railways and of civil and criminal justice in connection therewith, within the lands which lie within their respective territories, or which lie within the parts of their respective territories mentioned or referred to in the third column of the said schedule and are occupied, or may be hereafter occupied, by the Railways mentioned opposite their names, respectively, in the first column of the said schedule (including the lands occupied by stations and out-buildings and for other purposes connected with the Railway) and whereas the Governor General in Council now has full jurisdiction within those lands."

Muhammad Yusuf-ud-Din v. Queen-Empress (1) was a case where a person had been arrested in the Railway lands of Hyderabad State on a charge of an offense committed in British India, and unconnected with the Railway Administration. The grant of civil and criminal jurisdiction to the British Government contained in the correspondence between the Nizam's Minister and the Resident at Hyderabad was expressed to be "along the line of Railway as is the case on other lines running through Independent States." It was held by the Privy Council that the arrest was illegal notwithstanding the notification of the Government of India, which recited that His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad had granted to the British Government full jurisdiction in the Railway lands.

In the present case, reading the words "full jurisdiction" in the Notification No. 534-I. B. of the 8th February 1907, with the words "or all the jurisdiction they had or the jurisdiction necessary for the administration of Railways and of civil and criminal justice in connection therewith," I think it cannot be said that the Gwalior State ceded jurisdiction over the Railway lands in respect of offences not committed on those lands and having no connection with the Railway Administration, and I hold that the arrest of the petitioner at Gwalior Railway Station was illegal. I accordingly accept the application and set aside the order of the District Magistrate of Montgomery.

A tenant who wishes to dispute his landlord's title, must not only see that the tenancy has come to an end, but that the possession which was in him as a tenant has been surrendered. JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the suit property as owner with mesne profits at Rs. 60 a year and costs of the suit, alleging that the suit property originally belonged to one Vithoba valad Maharoo, his uncle. Vithu died in 1882, leaving a widow Dagoobai. In 1903 she gifted the plaint property to the defendant. The widow died in 1906, and thereafter the plaintiff executed a rent-note in favour of the defendant. The defendant afterwards brought a suit for possession under the rent note and a decree was passed. But it is admitted for the purposes of this suit that the defendant did not get possession under his decree, and the property is now in the possession of the plaintiff's son. Both Courts have held that in the circumstances of the case the plaintiff is estopped from bringing this suit. There can be no doubt that as long as the tenancy continued under the rent-note passed by the plaintiff to the defendant, the plaintiff was debarred from disputing the defendant's title. But it has been argued before us for the appellant that that bar was removed, as soon as a decree was passed for possession in favour of the defendant. If that argument were correct, it would follow that a party who remains in possession of the property rented could bring a suit disputing his landlord's title, in spite of the fact that the landlord had not got possession after the period of the tenancy had come to an end. In Musammat Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1) it was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council that section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act rests on the principle, well established by many English cases, that a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title, however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. That decision is sufficient to destroy the argument which has been raised before us by the appellant's Counsel.

Now that the position of the plaintiff has been realised, an offer has been made, that he should surrender possession to the defendant, and that then the case should be remanded to the lower Court for trial of the issue whether the plaintiff had given his consent to the alienation by the widow. That suggestion might have been adopted if the defendant had consented to the course proposed, but without that consent, we do not think we should allow that indulgence to the plaintiff after four years, and after having the case tried in three Courts. The finding is that he cannot succeed on the plaint as framed. He offered to do what he ought to have done before the suit was filed, that is to say, give possession to the defendant, the possession which was decreed in the defendant's suit. If we allowed that indulgence, we think that would open the door to similar action in other cases. It is necessary to lay down perfectly clearly that a tenant who wishes to dispute his landlord's title, must not only see that the tenancy has come to an end, but that the possession which was in him as a tenant has been surrendered. We cannot allow a tenant to hold over and remain in possession and then use that possession as a lever to support a case in which he denies the landlord's title. I think the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree. The only reason why I add a few words of my own is that it may be thought that we are going outside the meaning of the words of section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act. There is no doubt in this case that the plaintiff became a tenant of the defendant, and was placed in possession of the premises leased by the landlord. That is found as a a fact. At a later period the tenant denied the landlord's title. The landlord was compelled to bring a suit against him and he obtained a decree for possession. It may be said, therefore, that the tenancy then came to an end, and that section 116, as its words describe, only applies during the continuance of the tenancy. However, we have a very clearly expressed opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Musammat Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1). There can be no question but that we must accept and follow the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council. It matters very little whether we regard that judgment as giving an extended meaning to the words "during the continuance of the tenancy" used in section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act, or whether we merely regard the decision of their Lordships as an application of a principle somewhat wider than that which is given expression to, or limited by, the precise words of section 116. In either event we are bound to do what we are doing. If the Privy Council have extended the meaning of certain words in that section, we must do the same. If on the other hand they have merely applied a principle which has a wider application than is given to it by the mere words of section 116, again we must do the same. If I am permitted a preference, I should say that the Privy Council did not extend the meaning of the words, but acted on a principle that is perfectly sound and is well-recognised in equity. We cannot properly depart from that principle, although it has received a somewhat restricted application in section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act. I, therefore, agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 66—Execution of decree—Sale—Mortgage notified—Suit by mortgagee—Auction-purchaser, right of, to contest validity of mortgage.

Where property attached in execution of a decree is advertised for sale and a person sets up a title to the property as mortgagee and asks that the property be sold subject to the mortgage, but the Court directs, under Order XXI, rule 66 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the mortgage be notified, it is not necessary for the purchaser at the execution sale to have the order of the Court notifying the mortgage set aside and he is entitled, in a suit brought by the mortgagee against him for possession of the property, to contest the validity of the mortgage. [p. 355 col. 2.]

Appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Justice Sir George Knox, Kt., dated the 19th December 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. Narayan Parshad Asthana, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gulzarilal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant Kishen Lal. The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows:—The defendant Kishen Lal had a simple money decree against one Salig Ram. On the 20th of January 1910, he purchased the property in dispute in execution of his decree and acquired possession on the 26th of June 1911. While this decree was under execution, the execution Court prepared a proclamation of sale and made the ordinary enquiries which are made under Order XXI, rule 66. One Lakhmi Chand came forward, declaring himself to be a mortgagee of the property and asking that his mortgage might be notified. Kishen Lal objected and an enquiry was made, and the Court finally came to the conclusion that the mortgage was to be notified and accordingly directed that it should be so notified in the proclamation of sale. It was notified. The property was sold but as the certificate of sale shows, it was not sold subject to the mortgage. The mortgage was merely notified. Lakhmi Chand then brought a suit for sale on the basis of his mortgage to which suit, though he was well aware of Kishen Lal's interest, he failed to make Kishen Lal a party. A decree was obtained. The property was put to sale and was purchased by the plaintiff-respondent Rupram on the 20th of March 1915. He was formally put in possession but he was resisted by Kishen Lal and when he sought for mutation of names in the Revenue Court, that Court, finding Kishen Lal in possession, refused his application and referred him to the Civil Court. He accordingly brought the present suit out of which this appeal has arisen, for possession of the property against Kishen Lal. He offered to allow Kishen Lal an opportunity of redeeming the mortgage of Lakhmi Chand. Kishen Lal contested the validity of the mortgage and he also pleaded that the mortgage as against him was time-barred. The lower Appellate Court held that by reason of the previous enquiry made, which we have already mentioned, this property had been sold subject to the mortgage and that it was not open to Kishen Lal to contest the validity of the mortgage. It held that the suit was not time-barred and it accordingly gave Rupram a decree for possession. Kishen Lal came to this Court on second appeal and the learned Judge of this Court who heard that appeal, upheld the decision of the Court below. The present appeal is one under the Letters Patent against the decision of the learned Judge of this Court.

It is obvious to us that the decision of the lower Appellate Court, that the property was sold subject to the mortgage, is erroneous. That is obvious from the fact that the order passed by the Court, on the objection of Kishen Lal to Lakhmi Chand's application, was merely to the effect that the mortgage was to be notified. No order whatsoever was passed under Order XXI, rule 62, that the property was to be sold subject to the mortgage. The only order passed was one under Order XXI, rule 66, that the mortgage was to be notified. It was, therefore, quite unnecessary for Kishen Lal to bring any suit within the period of 12 months to get the miscellaneous order set aside. It was clearly open to him, in the present suit, to contest the validity of the mortgage of Lakhmi Chand, and this case must, therefore, go back in order to give him an opportunity of contesting the validity thereof. This case is on all fours with the case of Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (1). In order, therefore, to enable us to pass a proper decree in this case, we have to remit the following issues to the Court below for decision:—

(1) Was the mortgage in favour of Lakhmi Chand a valid and binding mortgage on the property?

(2) Was it on the date of suit a subsisting mortgage or was it time barred?

The parties will be allowed to give fresh evidence on these two issues. The ordinary period of ten days will be allowed for objections on receipt of the findings.

Issues remitted.

Mr. S. R. Parulekar, for Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case relies upon a deed of gift. He was unable to prove in the trial Court that it was attested according to law. The deed would require to be attested by two witnesses under section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. In Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (1) it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the word 'attested' in section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act meant the witnessing of the actual execution of the document by the person purporting to execute it. It is quite clear that that decision also covers section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, so the appeal must be dismissed, unless we agree to allow it to stand over as suggested by the appellant's Pleader on the chance of Act XXVI of 1917, being extended to this Presidency. We do not think the mere chance that that Act may be extended is any ground for allowing the appeal to stand over It is true that we are told that a representation has been made to Government to extend the Act to this Presidency, but it is impossible to say whether that application will result in the Act being extended. No doubt if the Act is extended, then provision may be made that suits which have been dismissed on the ground that a document has not been properly attested according to the decision in Shamu Patter's case (1) may be restored. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144—Restitution—Statement of Partition Commissioner embodied in final partition decree, whether conclusive evidence of prior possession—Status quo ante, how to be ascertained.

A final decree passed in a partition suit is conclusive as to the allotments actually effected by it, but the statement made by the Partition Commissioners appointed in the suit in their report as to prior possession, even though that report be embodied in the decree, cannot be said to be conclusive evidence, even if admissible, of prior possession as between parties to a proceeding under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure arising out of the partition decree having been finally set aside on appeal The questions arising between the parties must be determined on evidence [p. 358, col 1.]

Per Beachcroft, J.—The object of section 144 is to restore the status quo ante, which in such cases can only be ascertained by taking evidence. [p. 358, col. 2.]

Appeals against the orders of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 28th of July 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 9th of March 1918.

FACTS.—In 1910 a suit was brought by one Ayaraja Howladar against as many as 64 persons for partition of certain agricultural holdings. A preliminary decree for partition was passed by the trial Court in due course. Some of the defendants appealed against the preliminary decree, there was a compromise between the parties and the decree was confirmed by the Appellate Court. Then a Commissioner was appointed for effecting partition of the holdings and upon the report of the Com missioner, a final decree for partition was passed. Against the final decree an appeal was preferred by some of the defendants, making the plaintiff and three other defendants parties to the appeal. During the pendency of the appeal, the final decree for partition was executed upon an application by the plaintiff, and the plots were allotted to the parties according to the report of the Partition Commissioner. While setting aside the final decree, the lower Appellate Court set aside the preliminary decree as well, holding that the preliminary decree was illegally passed. The plaintiff filed an appeal in the High Court against this decision of the lower Appellate Court. At the time of the hearing of the second appeal, the plaintiff was given permission by the High Court to withdraw the original suit.

Thereupon the respondents in the present appeals who were not parties to the appeal against the final decree either in the lower Appellate Court or in the High Court, filed an application under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code for restoration to them of the plots of land which they alleged were in their possession before the execution of the final decree, but were allotted to the appellants in the present appeals in execution of the partition decree. In the trial Court the appellants raised the plea that the plots for which restoration was asked were in their possession even before the execution of the final decree for partition and the report of the Commissioner, stating that the plots were in possession of the applicant at the time of the final decree, was wrong. Both the Courts below allowed the application for restitution, holding that the report of the Commissioner was final in such cases.

Maulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq (with him Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta), in Second Appeal No. 246.—The appellants in this case were not parties in the appeal against the final decree and hence they are not bound by the decree of the lower Appellate Court setting aside the preliminary decree or the order of the Hon'ble High Court allowing the plaintiff to withdraw the suit.

In any case section 144, Civil Procedure Code, contemplates that parties should be placed in the position which they would have occupied but for the decree which has been reversed. Therefore, it was very material for the decision of this case to find out whether the applicants were really dispossessed in execution of the final decree for partition. I submit the report of the Partition Commissioner cannot be final in this case. In this case the Commissioner was not even examined and the parties were not allowed to adduce any evidence. My submission is that the report of the Commissioner is not even admissible in this case, as the Commissioner himself was not examined.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, in Second Appeal No. 251.—I adopt the argument of Maulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq in Second Appeal No. 246.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarty (with him Babu Jyotindra Mohon Chowdhry), for the Respondents.—Section 144, Civil Procedure Code, is the counterpart of section 47 of the Code. No extrinsic evidence is admissible under section 144 to shew the position of the parties before the execution of decree. Section 144, Civil Procedure Code, merely says that the Courts are to undo what they did in execution, whatever that may be. The parties must be relegated to the exact position which they appear on the record to have occupied at the date of the execution of the decree. In this case the Commissioner's report which is a part of the decree shews what the Commissioner did and, therefore, the Court must now undo what appears on the record to have been done by the Commissioner.

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—These two appeals arise out of two applications for restitution made under the provisions of section 144, Civil Procedure Code. It appears that one Ayaraja Howladar brought a suit for partition in which he made 64 persons parties defendants. It is not necessary to trace the history of this suit through all its stages or to consider whether at some of these stages some of the parties defendants were or were not improperly omitted. It is sufficient to say that on the 29th August 1902 the final decree for partition was made, that on appeal to the District Judge the plaintiff's suit was dismissed and that on further appeal to this Court the plaintiff was permitted to withdraw his suit. Meanwhile in proceedings of 1913 in execution of the final decree, which by the order of this Court fell to the ground, in execution taken out at the instance certainly of the plaintiff, possibly of certain of the defendants as well, the possession of the allotments made in their favour was taken through the Court. The decree having been set aside, the defendants Nos. 14 and 37 applied to the Courts below for restitution of the plots which according to them had been taken from their possession, and made over partly to the plaintiff and partly to defendants Nos. 38 and 39. The plaintiff and these defendants resisted the application made by defendants Nos. 14 and 37, on the ground that the possession taken through the Court was purely formal, merely confirmed the pre-existing state of things and did not in fact affect the possession of the several parties. Their contention was not given effect to by the Courts below, on the ground in effect that the statement made by the Partition Commissioners in their report, which was embodied in the final decree of the Court of first instance, was as to the prior possession of the several parties conclusive.

In the view that they have taken we are of opinion that the Courts below have fallen into error. In a partition suit the allotments made in favour of the several co-sharers may be composed either of plots previously in the possession of these sharers or of plots previously in the sole possession of others or partly of plots of both categories. The decree is no doubt conclusive as to the allotments actually effected by it, but the statement made by the Partition Commissioners in their report as to prior possession, even though that report be embodied in the decree, cannot, in our opinion, be said to be conclusive as between the parties, even if admissible in evidence. No doubt if the Commissioner be examined, his evidence or reference to his report will be of value; doubtless also the statement made by the plaintiff in his plaint and application for execution, also of defendants Nos. 38 and 39 in their written statements and in their application for execution, if any, will be of value. But the questions that arise between the parties, questions which can hardly arise in other than partition suits, are questions which in our opinion must be determined on evidence.

We, therefore, decree these appeals, set aside the orders of the Courts below and remand the cases to the Court of first instance to be heard and determined on evidence.

Costs of this hearing will be costs in the case. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs in each appeal.

The appeals having been decided, the connected Rules Nos. 461 and 462 of 1919 are discharged. We make no order as to costs in the Rules.

Let the record be sent down without delay. We express the hope that the cases will now be heard and decided with all possible expedition.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree. The object of section 144, Civil Procedure Code, is to restore the status quo ante, and when there are allegations, such as we have in this case, that can obviously only be ascertained by taking evidence.

Appeals decreed;
Rules discharged;
Case remanded.

THE COLLECTOR OF NASIK—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X Bom. of 1876), s. 4 (a)—Suit for declaration that plaintiffs are hereditary vatandar kulkarnis, maintainability of.

A suit against the Secretary of State for a declaration that the plaintiffs are the hereditary vatandar kulkarnis of a village and are entitled to the vahivat thereof, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the enjoyment thereof by the plaintiffs, is barred by the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act [p 359, col. 2.]

First appeals from the decision of the District Judge, Nasik, in Suits Nos. 1 to 5, 10, 14, 19, 20, 24 to 27 of 1917 and 1 to 5 of 1918.

DAMODOR KRISHNA v. COLLECTOR OF NASIK.

Mr. Patvardhan (with him Mr. Y. N. Nadkarni for Mr. B. V. Desai), for the Appellants.

Mr. Dhurandhar (with him Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader), for the Secretary of State.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was filed by the plaintiffs alleging that they were the hereditary Kulkarni Vatandars, plaintiff No. 1 holding eight annas share and plaintiff No. 2 holding two-annas eight pies share in the villages of Pimpalgaon, Baswant and Dehed of the Nasik District; that the Vahivat of the said Vatan had been carried on in their family hereditarily for a long time since the time of their ancestors; hence the plaintiffs had the right of carrying on the Vahivat; but notwithstanding this the Revenue Officers of the defendant, without taking into consideration plaintiffs' legal rights and after using undue influence and coercion had compelled the plaintiffs, to give consent to a commutation of their Vatans against the plaintiffs' will; that according to the provisions of the Vatan Act no such transaction could take place, any such act, if done, was illegal, and, therefore, the plaintiffs were not bound by the said consent, nor were their rights affected thereby. The plaintiffs prayed that they be declared hereditary Vatandar Kulkarnis of the villages of Pimpalgaon, Baswant and Dehed, and that it might be declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to be Vatandars and entitled to the Vahivat of the said Vatan hereditarily as before; and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the Vahivat and enjoyment of the Vatan by the plaintiffs.

Notice had been given under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code to the defendant. The period of the notice expired on the 30th September 1917. Therefore, the cause of action arose on the 30th September 1917, when the period of notice expired.

The plaint was rejected by the District Judge on the ground that the suit was barred under section 4 (a) of the Bomby Revenue Jurisdiction Act of 1876, and on reading the prayers of the plaint, it would be perfectly clear that the suit did come within section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. But it has been represented to us in first appeal that the plaintiffs were really claiming that the arrangement between them and the Revenue Officers should be set aside on the ground of undue influence and coercion. It was pointed out to the appellants' Counsel that there was no prayer in the plaint asking to set aside the agreement, and so long as the agreement stood, it would be impossible for the plaintiffs to obtain the declaration they ask for in paragraphs (a) and (b) of the prayers. It would not be possible to amend the plaint, because the plaint must correspond to the notice given under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, the object of that notice being that the Secretary of State may have knowledge of the claim made against him.

It was admitted during the argument on other companion appeals that the pleadings were somewhat different, and that the agreement arrived at between the Government and the Kulkarnis is dated the 7th July 1914. Whether the period of limitation is one year under Article 14, or three years under Article 91, it was quite clear that if the plaintiffs had sued to set aside the agreement, the suit would have been barred by limitation, unless some plea had been raised in the plaint to avoid the bar. As regards this appeal and the companion appeals in which the plaintiffs pray merely for a declaration that they are hereditary Vatandar Kulkarnis, and that they were entitled to be Vatandars and entitled to the Vahivat of the said Vatan hereditarily as before, we are of opinion that the District Judge was right in rejecting the plaint. The appeals must be dismissed with costs.

In First Appeal No. 75 of 1918, Suit No. 3 of 1917, it appears from the notice given to the defendant, and from the plaint, that the agreement which the plaintiffs complain of was not made by the plaintiffs but by the plaintiffs' grandfather. They merely state in the plaint that they do not agree with the terms, but they are not able to allege that undue influence or coercion was employed in order to get their grandfather to sign the agreement. In any event they would be suing to set aside an order which was made on the agreement made by their grandfather, and it would not be open to them to set aside the agreement. Therefore, the suit would come within section 4 (a) of the Bombay SEPARJAN v. RAMDEB RAI.

Revenue Jurisdiction Act. Even if that Act did not apply, the suit again would be barred by limitation.

First Appeals Nos. 76 and 77 stand on a different footing. In both these cases the agreements which the plaintiffs object to were made between the plaintiffs themselves and the Government, and it was alleged that there was misrepresentation, undue influence and coercion, and that was alleged in the notice served under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code on the defendant. Apart from any other questions these plaints do not observe the rule of pleading laid down in Order VI, rule 4, which enacts that "in all cases in which the party pleading relies on any misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default, or undue influence, and in all other cases in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms aforesaid, particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleading." That was enacted in order to prevent parties seeking to rely in their plaint on very vague allegations of misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default or undue influence. Then again it has to be admitted by the plaintiffs that the agreement which they seek to set aside was made on the 7th July 1914, whereas the plaints were presented on the 30th September 1917. Therefore, it would be no use for us to set aside the order of the District Judge rejecting the plaint on the ground that the suit was barred under section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act of 1876, as if the plaints were again presented, they would have to be rejected on the ground that on the facts set up in the pleadings and on the face of the plaints they were presented beyond the time prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act. All the appeals will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession. The plaintiff is a co-sharer landlord. Defendant No. 4 Basiruddin was the original tenant of 10 kanis and 18 gandas, consisting of a homestead and culturable land. He sold 2 kanis to defendant No. 1 in 1310 and gave possession. He was apparently very heavily indebted. He appears to have sold the rest of the land to his wife and then both of them joined in selling the same land to Hussan Ali and Rajjab Ali his wife's brother and brother's son. Then Hussan Ali and Rajjab Ali executed kabuliyats in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Munsif held that the sale by Basiruddin, defendant No. 4, of the lands in Schedule 2 to his relations Hussan Ali and Rajjab Ali was a sham transaction made with the object of protecting the property from Basiruddin's creditors, that Basiruddin, although he purported to surrender the holding in Chaitra 1318 B. S., was still in possession of the lands of Schedule 2. He was, therefore, of opinion that Basiruddin defendant No. 4 had not sold or abandoned his entire holding, being still in possession of the land comprised in Schedule 2, and so the plaintiff was not entitled to khas possession.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the finding. He held that Basiruddin had parted with the entire jote. He would seem to hold that the sale by defendant No. 4 to Rajjab Ali and Hussan Ali was a genuine transaction and a real sale and that, therefore, defendant No. 4 had parted with his entire holding. He was of opinion that possibly defendant No. 4 was in possession under a korfa settlement of a portion of the land and homestead. He says: "it might be that under the korfa settlement defendant No. 4 is still in possession of some portion of the land and homestead, but inasmuch as Basiruddin parted with his entire interest in the disputed jote, that fact would not constitute his possession as a tenant under the plaintiff who is, therefore, entitled to the khass possession of the land, when admittedly there is no custom in favour of the transfer of occupancy holdings." We, therefore, think it necessary to refer him to the following cases.

It has been held in this Court in Madar Mondal v. Mohima Chandra Mazumdar (1) that where a tenant having a non-transferable right of occupancy sells such right to a third person and having obtained a sub-lease from the purchaser remains in possession of the land and cultivates it, the landlord is not entitled to recover possession inasmuch as it does not amount to abandonment. This view has not been dissented from in Rajani Kanta Biswas v. Ekkowri Das (2), where it was held that when the original tenant after obtaining a sub-lease remained in possession, but repudiated his relationship as tenant to the landlord and sought to re-occupy the land as such tenant, he was not entitled to hold the land against the landlord. We also call attention to Kalim Sheikh v. Mocham Mandal (3), where it has been held that the sale of a portion of an occupancy holding does not cause a forfeiture of the tenancy and if the original tenant after parting with a portion of the holding remains in actual possession of it as an under-raiyat from the purchaser, there is no abandonment of the holding and the landlord is not entitled to khas possession.

The learned Subordinate Judge's finding about the possession of defendant No. 4 is very indefinite and having regard to what was distinctly and clearly found by the learned Munsif, we think this is a fit case for remand. The learned Subordinate Judge should find as to whether defendant No. 4 is in possession and still cultivating the land. He will also consider whether he has in any way repudiated his relationship with the landlord or abandoned the holding.

We find also that there was a distinct issue raised as to the extent of the share of the plaintiff, whether it was 12 annas or $12\frac{1}{2}$ annas. The learned Subordinate Judge has arrived at no distinct finding about it, and in respect of the mesne profits, he has left the matter to be determined in execution by the lower Court. We think he ought to come to definite findings with regard to the matters also. The appeal is, therefore, allowed. We set aside his decree and direct a remand that all the necessary facts may be ascertained and the appeal heard and disposed of in accordance with law. Costs will abide the final result.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Widow, below age of puberty, whether can adopt—Objection, failure to raise, effect of.

MURGEPPA BASAPPA v. KALAVA GOLAPPA.

An adoption by a Hindu widow who has not reached puberty is invalid ab initio, and the mere fact that the adopting mother when she grows older raises no objection to the adoption, would not validate it.

In order to be able to make a valid adoption, the adopting widow must have reached such an age of discretion that she must be able to realise the importance of her act, to make up her own mind as to the person she ought to adopt.

Per Heaton, J.—A person making an adoption must be capable of volition of his or her own.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Bijapur, in Appeal No. 107 of 1916, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Bagalkot, in Civil Suit No. 302 of 1914.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaonkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The only question in this appeal is whether a girl, a Hindu widow, of the age of twelve who has not reached puberty could make a valid adoption. Both Courts have held that the adoption in those circumstances was invalid. As an authority paragraph 117 of Mr. Mayne's work, 8th Edition, has been cited. There Mr. Mayne says: "In Western India it is stated that a widow under the age of puberty cannot adopt." (The authority for that is Steele, page 48; West and Buhler, page 998.) The author continues:—"I suppose the reason for the difference is that there the adoption is the act of the widow, for which no authority, or consent, is required." It seems to us that considering the importance of the act of adoption, it should be necessary that the adopting widow must have reached such an age of discretion that she must be able to realise the importance of her act, to make up her own mind as to the person she ought to adopt. There may be circumstances which will enable the Court to consider whether the widow has reached the age of discretion. That she has attained to puberty may be one circumstance but in this country not necessarily the only one. The actual age of the widow may be another test and probably the most important one. In this case I think both the tender age of the widow, and the fact that she has not reached the age of puberty, make it perfectly clear that she was not competent to know what she was doing. If we were to hold that such a person could adopt, we should open the door to all sorts of intrigue, so that the elder members of the family might be able to induce widows of tender age to make adoptions in the interests of those persons. If the adoption is invalid, as I think it is, in this case from the commencement, then the mere fact that afterwards when the adopting mother grew older she raised no objection to the adoption, cannot in any way validate what was invalid ab initio. Therefore, I agree with the opinion which has been expressed by the lower Courts, and think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Since this judgment was delivered, my attention has been drawn to the case of Basappa v. Shidramappa (1) and the cases therein cited, which are in accord with the conclusion at which we arrived.

HEATON, J.—I am of the same opinion. In our Courts we deal with adoptions, not as matters of religion, but as they affect property. If an adoption were a matter of religion and nothing more, it may be that a child would be capable of performing the adoption validly as soon as she was big enough and strong enough to take the adopted child in her lap. But if we come to look upon adoptions, as we do, not merely as matters of religion, but as matters affecting property, then we must consider, as my Lord the Chief Justice has said, whether a person making an adoption is capable of volition of his or her own. Certainly no ordinary child of twelve years of age is capable of volition of the kind here required, unless he or she is a very exceptional person. There is nothing in this case to suggest that the young girl involved possessed such exceptional powers as that. I think, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

The effect of section 145, Civil Procedure Code, is that the surety may be made a party to the execution proceedings against the principal debtor, and an order against the surety is in effect a decree upon his separate contract against him for the payment of money. The surety is not a party to the suit or to the decree made therein, nor does he become a party to execution proceedings until application is made for an order against him. He is not a party to the suit within the meaning of section 47 of the Code and section 145 only makes him a party for a limited purpose, namely, for appeal. [p. 365, col. 2.]

A surety, therefore, who wishes to get the surety bond cancelled on the ground of fraud should proceed by way of a regular suit, and not by an application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 365, col. 2.]

FACTS.—Suit to cancel a security bond for the due performance of a decree on the ground of undue influence by the judgment-debtor to the knowledge of the decree-holder. The question arose whether the suit was maintainable.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao (with him Mr. S. R. Muthuswamy Aiyar), for the Appellant.—The suit is maintainable. Where a surety undertakes personal liability, the original decree can be executed against him. But when immoveable property is given as security, it can be enforced only by a suit. Amir v. Mahadeo Prasad (1). Where the judgment-debtor furnishes the security, the case is not one under section 145, but between parties to the suit under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. That is the case in Subramania Chettiar v. Rajeswara Sethupathi (2). Motilal v. Chandrasangji (3) holds that a suit lies.

The mere fact that there are other remedies open to the plaintiff will not bar a suit. Wyatt v. Palmer (4), Sundar Singh v. Ghasi (5). Compare also section 39 of the Press Act.

Mr. A. Narasimhachariar for Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act, which provides for cancellation of instruments, leaves the question to the Court's discretion. Discretion ought not to be interfered with in second appeal.

Subramania Chettiar v. Rajeswara Sethupathi (2) is conclusive. The security is given to the Court. It would be mischievous law to require a separate suit. The surety becomes a party to the suit and he ought to proceed by application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.—In execution of the decree in Civil Suit No. 34 of 1912 in the High Court, one Sayyed Mahomed Rowther was arrested. On 29th September 1914 the judgment-debtor and the present appellant as surety on behalf of the judgment-debtor executed a security bond for Rs. 4,443 2-0 in favour of the District Court of Ramnad in which Court the execution proceedings were pending, and the judgment-debtor was released. The bond provides for the payment of the amount either jointly or severally by the executants. bond and from the other properties of the surety. The properties hypothecated are, it appears, situate in the Madura District. On the 8th February 1915 the appellant filed a suit (Original Suit No. 19 of 1915) in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Madura against the plaintiffs in Civil Suit No. 34 of 1912 and their judgment-debtor, for a declaration that the security bond had been fraudulently obtained by the defendants and was void and not binding on the appellant's properties and for cancellation of the security bond. It was alleged in the plaint that the appellant was a person of weak intellect and that the bond had been executed owing to undue influence, fraud and coercion practised upon him by certain persons acting in collusion with the defendants. A preliminary objection was taken by defendants (respondents) that the suit was barred by section 47, Code of Civil Procedure. The Temporary Subordinate Judge held that the appellant had alternative remedies: (1) in execution proceedings in the Ramnad District Court and (2) by way of suit. He further decided that, as the appellant had a remedy in execution proceedings, the Court should not in the exercise of its discretion grant the declaratory relief sought for and in the result, dismissed the suit. In appeal the District Judge took the same view and held "that as the party had a remedy in execution and also an appeal," the declaratory relief asked for was rightly refused.

Mr. Sitarama Rao for the appellant contended (1) that the lower Appellate Court ought to have held that no relief such as is claimed in the plaint could be granted in execution, (2) that the suit being for the substantial relief of cancellation of the document on the ground of undue influence and fraud which the executing Court could not grant, the lower Appellate Court erred in holding that it had a discretion in relief, and that, in any view of the case, the discretion had been improperly and illegally exercised.

The question raised in this appeal, viz., whether a third party who has given security on behalf of a judgment-debtor for the due performance of a decree has an independent right of application under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and can apply to the executing Court to cancel the security bond on the ground that it was obtained by fraud, or whether his only remedy is by way of suit, is a novel one and not free from difficulty. No decision directly bearing on the question has been cited before us. Section 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which corresponds to section 253 of the Code of 1882, is in these terms: 'Where any person has become liable as surety (a) for the performance of any decree or any part thereof, or (b) for the restitution of any property taken in execution of a decree, or (c) for the payment of any money, or for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person, under an order of the Court in any suit or any proceeding consequent thereon, the decree or order may be executed against him, to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable, in the manner herein provided for the execution of decrees, and such person shall, for the purposes of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of section 47: Provided that such notice as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety." The section provides a summary remedy in execution and dispenses with the necessity for a separate suit to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable. Motilal v. Chandrasangji (3) and Amir v. Mahadeo Prasad (1), which were relied on by the learned Vakil for the appellant, have no direct bearing on the question which we have to decide. In Motilal's case (3) it was held that where a bond is passed by third parties as security for restitution in the event of the decree being reversed in appeal, the obligee may file a suit upon the contract contained in the bond. In Amir v. Mahadeo Prasad (1) the learned Judges held that, if the surety takes upon himself more than the personal liability and hypothecates immoveable property, such hypothecation can only be enforced against the property by means of a regular suit.

The learned Vakil for the respondents has referred us to the decision in Subramania Chettiar v. Rajeswara Sethupathi (2). In that case the question was whether, when immoveable property has been given by the judgment-debtor as security for the due performance of a decree pursuant to an order made under Order XLI, rule 5 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, that property can be realised by a decree-holder in execution or can only be realised by a separate suit. The learned Judges (Wallis, C. J., and Kumaraswami Sastri, J.) were of opinion that the matter being one relating to execution under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure a separate suit did not lie, and that the fact that the bond was given to the Court did not make it a question arising between the judgment-debtor and a third party so as to take it out of the section. At page 333* of the report the learned Chief Justice observed that it was unnecessary to deal with cases of security given by third parties under section 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The point for decision in this appeal is whether the surety can be regarded as a party to the suit, so as to entitle him to present an application to the Court executing the decree. In Linga Reddi v. Hussain Reddy (6) it was held, on the authority of Thirumalai v. Ramayyar (7), Shek Suleman v. Shivram (8) and other cases with reference to section 253 of the Code of 1882 that the surety should be treated as a party to the suit and cannot bring a suit for a declaration that he is not liable under the surety bond Section 145, Civil Procedure Code, differs in some respects from the old section. Section 145 says that the surety "shall for the purpose of appeal be deemed to be a party within the meaning of section 47." We think that the words "shall for the purpose of appeal be deemed to be a party," which were apparently introduced in order to give effect to certain rulings under the old Code [Akhoot Ramanah v. Ahmed Eusoofjee (9,] only mean that if an order is made in execution against a surety, the surety may appeal against the order as if he were a party to the suit in which the decree or order sought to be executed was passed and that the reference to section 47 does not in other respects import into section 145 the provision contained in section 47 which bars a separate suit. If it were not for the provisions of section 145, the liability of the surety would have to be enforced by a separate suit, because it does not arise under the decree but subsequently and under a separate contract with the Court. The effect of the section is that the surety may be made a party to the execution proceedings against the principal debtor, and an order against the surety is in effect a decree upon his separate contract against him for the payment of money. The surety is not a party to the suit or to the decree made therein, nor does he become a party to execution proceedings until application is made for an order against him. He is not a party to the suit within section 47, and section 145 only makes him a party for a limited purpose, namely, for appeal.

It is doubtful whether the question in this case relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, since it relates to the surety bond and not to the decree and to the enforcement of the liability incurred thereunder and not under the decree. We doubt whether the surety, if he be not made a party to execution proceedings, can intervene in a matter in which he has no interest.

We are unable, therefore, to agree with the conclusion arrived at by the lower Courts that the surety has a right to apply under section 47 to have the security bond cancelled.

The lower Courts have refused the declaratory relief sought for, on the ground that it was a discretionary relief and as the appellant had a separate remedy by way of suit. We think that the lower Courts were wrong, and that the suit should have been tried on the merits. We accordingly allow the appeal with costs in this Court and reverse the decrees of the lower Courts. The Temporary Subordinate Judge is directed to restore the suit to his file and dispose of it according to law. Costs in the lower Courts will abide the result. The appellant is entitled to a refund of the Court-fee of the second appeal.

Alluvion and diluvion—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Dhardura, custom of, proof of—Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI of 1825), s. 4—'Gradual,' meaning of—Appeal, second—Misconstruction of document, whether ground for second appeal.

The bare statement in a wajib-ul-arz that alluvion and diluvion occur in a village does not imply that where they do occur the custom of 'dhardhura' will apply. [p. 368, col. 1.]

The word 'gradual' in section 4 of the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation means slow and imperceptible. [p. 369, col. 1.]

A wrong construction of a document coupled with a wrong inference from certain facts constitutes an error of law, where there is no other evidence accepted by the Court, and furnishes a ground for second appeal. [p. 369, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Gorakhpur.

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya (with him Mr. Radha Kant Malaviya), for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal by the plaintiff in a suit which he brought for a declaration that he was the owner and in possession of certain lands. In the alternative he prayed for possession and any other relief to which he might be found entitled.

He is the owner of a -/13/3 share and the mortgagee in possession of a -/2/9 share in Mauza Dhanaura. The defendants are the owners of Mauza Bhad, the adjoining village to the east of Dhanaura. At the time of the last Settlement (1887—1888) the river Ban Ganga formed the boundary between the two villages, its course being a deep curve.

The plaintiff's case was that in the rainy seasons of 1307 and 1308 Fasli (1900 A. D.) owing to excessive floods a nullah was partly scoured out which tended to straighten the river. The nullah was entirely in the Dhanaura lands. The river, however, retained its old bed until the year 1312 F., when another flood occurred. As a result the river suddenly changed its course and flowed through the nullah, leaving a large area of the Dhanaura village on its eastern bank. The area in dispute is 186 bighas, 1 biswa, i. e, just over 100 acres.

According to the plaintiff he remained in possession of the lands. The defendants, however, by fraudulent proceedings in the Revenue Court procured entries in the revenue papers of Mauza Bhad, to the effect that the lands were within the boundary of Mauza Bhad, and having secured these entries, had begun to interfere with the tenants. This was in October 1914 and the plaintiff then became aware of what had been done. Hence his present claim for a declaration or in the alternative for possession.

Various defences were raised, but for the purposes of this appeal it is necessary to mention only three.

The defendants pleaded (1) that they had held adverse possession for over twelve years; (2) that there had been no sudden diversion of the course of the river but that on the contrary it had slowly and gradually cut away the land of Mauza Dhanaura and had added to it Mauza Bhad and that, therefore, they had legally become the owners thereof; (3) that in any case there was a general custom in force in all the villages lying on the banks of this stream (and also in the two villages in question) that no matter how the river behaved, the deep stream was always the boundary, land taken from one village and added to another becoming the property of the owners of the latter.

On the first point both the Courts below have held against the defendants, that they have not been in adverse possession for over twelve years. The other two contentions were embodied by the first Court in a somewhat complex issue which ran as follows:—"Whether the land in dispute went from the plaintiff's side to the defendants' side by slow and gradual shifting of the river or, as the plaintiff says, in 1312 (owing to the river piercing its way through the alleged kharroh) all of a sudden? Who is legally the owner of the land in dispute? Does any special custom govern the parties' rights?"

The Court found that there had been a gradual transfer of the land from one side to the other and that the plaintiff's story of a sudden diversion was untrue.

It also found (to quote the words of the judgment) that:—" No custom had been proved that the owner of the opposite bank will be, by virtue of it, the owner of land gone over to his side, not by graual accretion but by the jumping course of the river, i.e., by the river suddenly ceasing to flow through its channel and piercing a new channel through, transferring the land en bloc from one bank of it to the other."

In view of its decision on the first part of the issue, it dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff appealed.

Naturally he took no exception to the finding on the point of custom. He urged, among other pleas, (1) that the land in dispute had not been slowly and gradually cut away and added to the other side within the meaning of Regulation XI of 1825; and that even if it had, the Regulation did not apply in the case of so small a stream as the Ban Ganga. (2) That on the evidence it was proved that the river had suddenly changed its course. The lower Appellate Court in its judgment set forth four points for determination. We are not now concerned with the first three, one of which related to the title claimed on the basis of prescription.

The fourth was " whether the defendants have acquired title to the land in suit by the custom of Dhardhura or by means of its accretion to their land or the plaintiff is still the owner thereof.

It held that there had been no sudden change in 1312F., as alleged by the plaintiff, but that there had been a gradual diluvion year by year since 1887, upto the year 1307F. (1900), that as the total area cut away was 185 bighas, 15 biswas, 8 dhurs, the accretion to the defendants' land, though gradual, had been neither slow nor imperceptible, amounting to an annual average of 15 bighas odd, and that this class of accretion gave the defendants no title.

But it held on the evidence that the custom of Dhardhura alleged by the defendants had been established, under which the deep stream was the boundary.

It accordingly dismissed the appeal. Before us, the plaintiff urges that the question of the custom was not raised or discussed in the Court below and ought not to have been decided against him; and that the decision of the Court is incorrect and ought to be set aside, inasmuch as the Court has misconstrued the documents on which it has relied and has drawn wrong inferences, and the evidence as it stands is not sufficient to establish the alleged custom.

On behalf of the respondents it is urged that the question of custom must have been urged and discussed in the Court below; that that Court's finding on the point is a finding of fact which is binding on us in second appeal and we cannot go behind it.

It is further attempted to support the decree of the Court below on the point decided by that Court against the respondents, i.e, it is urged that as the accretion to the respondents' village was gradual and not sudden, the respondents have acquired title under Regulation XI of 1825, even if no custom has been established. As to whether or not the question of custom was urged or discussed in the Court below, the appellant has caused an affidavit to be filed by one of the Pleaders who appeared in that Court and who from his memory, refreshed by his notes, has stated that the point was not discussed. This statement is now made, some three years after the appeal was heard in the Court below, and we find it difficult to believe that the point was not touched. It is, however, unnecessary to come to any decision on this, seeing that in our opinion the lower Court's decision on the question of custom is not supported by the evidence on which that decision is based and we propose to set it aside.

Coming now to the alleged custom, we note that it is the custom which is mentioned as an example in section 2 of Regulation XI of 1825, i. e., that the main channel of the river dividing the estates shall be the constant boundary between them whatever changes may take place in the course of the river by encroachment on one side, and accession on the other. The vernacular word "Dhardhura" exactly expresses this and is employed by the defendants in their written statement and the lower Court in its judgment.

The first Court's judgment in respect to the alleged custom was brief and did not discuss the evidence. The lower Appellate Court discussed the matter at considerable length. The defendants produced both oral and documentary evidence. As to the former, the Court below remarked that it was very meagre and unsatisfactory and it based its decision solely on the documentary evidence. This consists of (a) copies of extracts from the wajib ul-arzes of the two villages prepared at the Settlement of 1863; (b) the Settlement maps of 1833, 1863 and 1887-88 of these two villages, and some copies of village papers.

Clause 16 of each wajib-ul-arz contains an entry relating to diluvion and alluvion (Gang Shikast and Gang Barar). The clause in the document relating to Mauza Dhanaura sets forth that the village is on the banks of the Ban Ganga and that if by chance alluvion occurs and the accession amounts to more than 10 per cent. of the entire area of the village, whatever revenue the Collector assesses with the sanction of his superior authorities, the owners will pay.

The clause in the case of Mauza Bhad is similarly worded.

The learned Additional District Judge in respect to these two entries remarks:—"This is not amounting to an express record of any custom of Dhardhura but implies it." We agree that there is no record here of the custom of "Dhardhura." We cannot possibly agree that it implies any such custom. The bare statement that alluvion and diluvion occur does not imply that when they do occur the custom of "Dhardhura" will apply. There is not the slightest suggestion of any such custom or of any custom at all in the language of these two documents.

The learned Judge, however, goes on to say that the copies of the village papers show that whatever land had been actually separated by the action of the river between the Settlement of 1863 and that of 1887 from one side of the river to the other, had gone to the village Bhad and in the Settlement of 1887 it was so recorded, evidently without objection by the proprietors of Mauza Dhanaura. He then adds:—"This may have been done owing to a custom that the river Ban Ganga was the settled boundary between the two villages." It is only necessary to point out that it might equally have been done under the operation of the ordinary rule laid down by Regulation XI of 1825 without the existence of any special custom at all. There is nothing to show what actually happened between the years 1863 and 1887, except that in the course of that period (24 years) some area was transferred from one village to the other by reason of the river shifting its position.

The Court below then, comparing the maps of the three Settlements of 1833, 1863 and 1887, points out that in 1863 the river had moved to the west as compared with 1833 and that a further similar move had occurred by 1887 and as in both 1863 and 1887 the river was accepted as the boundary, draws the inference that this must have been done because the custom of "Dhardhura" was in existence. If this custom was the only possible explanation the inference might legitimately have been drawn, but it is not the only possible explanation. The same result might have occurred by reason of that gradual transfer contemplated in Regulation XI of 1825. The areas transferred are not given.

The Additional District Judge remarks:—"It appears that the parties did not press this matter of custom before the Court of first instance and that the plaintiff evaded entering into the custom and did not attempt to produce any evidence to the contrary," but the burden of proving the custom was on the defendants who alleged it and if they did not press it, there could be only one decision on the point.

From the fact that the words "Gangshikast" and "Gang Barar" (diluvion and alluvion) are used in the wajib ul-arzes mentioned above, the Judge infers that the custom was referred to in those documents. These words, he says, imply that what was taken from one village was always added to the other village and this is also the meaning of the custom of Dhardhura. He has lost sight of the different ways in which the river might take land from one side and throw it upon the other.

It is to us clear that the Court below has read into these documents something that is not there and has drawn an unjustifiable inference from the maps.

It is urged that we cannot go behind his finding as it is a finding of fact, but with this we cannot agree. A wrong construction of a document, coupled with a wrong inference from certain facts, constitutes an error of law, where there is no other evidence accepted by the Court.

It is urged that the first Court's judgment shows that it was admitted that the midstream had always been the boundary between the two estates. No attempt has been made to show us any such admission, nor could there have been any such for it would have sufficed for the decision of the case without proceeding any further. The first Court has used the word "admittedly" in a somewhat loose manner and has remarked "now admittedly the midstream of the river Ban Ganga" "is (not has always been) the boundary line."

There remains the plea that as the lower Court has found that the accretion to the defendants' estate was "gradual," it ought to have held that title in the land had passed to the defendants. It is urged that section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 does not use the words "slow and imperceptible." The meaning of the word gradual as used in section 4 of the Regulation has, it is admitted, been explained by their Lordships of the Privy Council and that meaning has been applied by the Courts in India over a long course of decisions, and we can see no reason to give way to the plea now raised.

The lower Appellate Court has shown that on the average the annual accretion to the respondents' estate was considerable. In twelve years more than 100 acres was thus transferred and we agree that the accretion was not slow and certainly not imperceptible. The plaintiff, in our opinion, is entitled to succeed and as possession has been found to be in the defendants' hands, he is entitled to a decree for possession.

There is no claim for mesne profits. We, therefore, allow the appeal. The plaintiff's suit for possession of the lands mentioned and described in the plaint is decreed together with costs in all Courts.

Appeal decreed.

Hindu Law—Widow—Acceleration of estate—Transfer for consideration, whether acceleration or alienation.

In order that an acceleration by a Hindu widow of her life-estate should be valid, it is essentially necessary that the widow should withdraw her own life-estate, so that the whole estate should get vested at once in the grantee. [p. 370, col. 1.]

If there is any consideration for the gift by the widow of her life-estate, that must prevent it taking effect as an acceleration, and must turn the transaction into an alienation. [p. 370, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge at Dharwar, in Appeal No. 37 of 1917, reversing the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Dharwar, in Civil Suit No. 58 of 1915.

Mr. V. V. Bhadkamkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the plaint property with past mesne profits for the year 1914—15, with future mesne profits and costs from the defendants. The land in suit belonged originally to one Shiddava, who had a life-estate. On the 3rd of August 1911, she made a gift of her property to her daughter Laxmava. Laxmava died on the 29th January 1914, leaving a daughter who died on the 31st January 1914, leaving her husband, the plaintiff in this case, her surviving. The 1st defendant is the husband of Laxmava and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are his sons. The plaintiff's case is that Shiddava's gift to his wife and her daughter Laxmava operated as a valid acceleration of Laxmava's interest as the nearest reversioner at the time, and that, therefore, the property went to Laxmava's daughter and from the daughter to the plaintiff, even if that daughter was married.

The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim. It found on the 3rd issue, whether the gift to Laxmava by Shiddava was an acceleration of Shiddava's estate, in the negative. The learned Judge said: "In the end the donor makes it a condition precedent for her maintenance till death to the said bequest. The learned Pleader for the plaintiff concedes (sic) that the disposition can be a valid gift under Hindu Law. The only point then is whether it amounts to an acceleration of Shiddava's estate. The simple test to be applied in the present case is whether the donor could or could not maintain successfully an action on the deed of gift in case she were not maintained by the donee. I hold that she could. It, therefore, follows that Shiddava by no means disposed of her entire life-estate by the execution of the deed."

The decree dismissing the plaintiff's claim was set aside by the lower Appellate Court, which held that the acceleration under the gift of Shiddava to Laxmava was valid. The learned Judge seemed to consider that the widow who gave away her life-estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, with a condition attached that the donee should maintain her, could succeed in a suit for maintenance even although the acceleration were upheld. I do not think that this argument is sound. In order that an acceleration by a Hindu widow of her life estate should be valid, it was laid down in Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (1) that it was essentially necessary that the widow should withdraw her own life estate, so that the whole estate should get vested at once in the grantee. The necessity of the removal of the obstacle of the life estate was a practical check on the frequency of such conveyances. In Moti Raiji v. Laldas Jibhai (2) Mr. Justice Beaman explained the difference between an alienation by a widow, and acceleration by her which had the effect of putting an end to her life estate and vesting the estate in the nearest reversioner. In that case it was arranged that one third of the property should come back to the widow and on that ground it was held that the acceleration was invalid. Mr. Justice Heaton in his judgment cited the case which I have just referred to, viz, Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (1). He went on to say: "That clearly brings out the idea that for an acceleration there must be an absolute annihilation of the widow's interest, as complete as if she were dead."

But that case does not touch the exact question which we have before us in this case. I agree with what was said in Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (3). There the widow gave the property to the nearest reversioner on certain conditions. Under it the donee had not only to provide for the maintenance of the transferor, but had also during her lifetime to pay annually to one of her dependents Rs. 84, and to maintain a charity for all time at an annual expense of Rs. 50. Further, on her death, he had to make payment on different accounts aggregating Rs. 2,400. The Judges said:—

"Of course, Raghavalu would not have been subject to any of the obligations cast upon him by the deed of gift, were the property to devolve on him by inheritance in the usual course. The transaction was thus essentially an onerous gift, and, therefore, an alienation by her, the validity or invalidity of which was determinable with reference to the rules of Hindu Law, governing transfers by qualified female proprietors."

It seems to me that if there is any consideration for the gift by the widow of her life estate, that must prevent it taking effect as an acceleration, and must turn the transaction into an alienation. That seems to me a sound logical principle to act upon, because if we were to enter into a discussion as to whether this consideration was so small that we should overlook it, then that would open the door to all sorts of discussions in later cases as to the quantum of consideration. It seems preferable to say at once that any consideration is sufficient to change the nature of the transaction from an acceleration to an alienation.

It has been urged before us that the donee in this case took the property with an obligation under Hindu Law to maintain the donor. But it seems to me that there is a fallacy underlying that argument, because the donor Shiddava in this case had a life estate, and it would not follow that because she got rid of that life estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, that there was any obligation under Hindu Law on that nearest reversioner to maintain Shiddava. For these reasons, in my opinion, the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside and the decree of the trial Court made good, so that the appeal will be allowed with costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree.

Decree set aside.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Guntur, in Appeal Suit No 257 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tenali, in Original Suit No. 245 of 1915 (Original Suit No. 52 of 1915), on the file of the Principal District Munsif's Court, Tenali.

FACTS.—A adopted B. A's wife then died and thereupon A decided to marry again. B's father then asked A to make provision for B, and an award was made by certain arbitrators and B was placed in possession of certain properties. A then took a second wife and had a son C. The present suit was by A and C against B and his son to recover, on the ground that B was entitled only to a one fourth share according to Hindu Law.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and T. M. Ramaswamy Aiyar, for the Defendants-Appellants, submitted that there was no finding on the award by the lower Appellate Court and that the case should be sent down.

Messrs. P. Narayana Moorthy and K. Kamanna, for the Respondents.—The award was not put forward. The plea was given up. It ought not to be raised here. Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Bhashyakarlu Naidu (1).

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar.—That case applies only to an issue of fact. (The Court disallowed the plea).

An adopted son stands in law on the same footing as a natural born son and the question is whether there is any special text restricting his rights. Nagindas Bhugwandas v. Bachoo Hurkissondas (2). The position assigned by Mann to an adopted son is inapplicable to the present times.

Gungadhar Bogla v. Hira Lal Bogla (3). A special text forming an exception to a general text ought to be restricted to cases falling strictly within it. See also Pratapsing Shivsing v. Agarsinghji Raisinghji (4).

I submit that there is no special text governing the present case, as the adoptive father is alive. Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 11, omits any mention of the father's share, refers to funeral ceremonies and purports to state the "rule of succession." The text, therefore, clearly refers to partition after the father's death. Dattaka Chandrika (Setlur's translation, page 444), placita 17, 18, says: "In default of him (Aurasaputra), he (Dattakaputra) is entitled to the whole." See also Dattaka Mimamsa, section 5, placitum 42.

Mr. P. Narayanamoorthi, for the Respondents.—The chapter of the Mitakshara proceeds to state the rule of distribution (* * ) of property ( ) and first deals with unobstructed ( * ) property. The other kind of property ( * *) is dealt with in the next chapter. The first chapter is only a declaration of rights, and section 11 deals with the rights inter se among collaterals. There is neither reason nor principle to restrict its application to cases where the father is dead. The sections are general.

The reason of the rule in the present case is the superior religious benefit that can be derived from an Aurasa son. Manu, therefore, gives the whole estate to him and awards only maintenance to the Dattaka son. Chapter IX, Sloka 163. Though the rule is obsolete, the reason subsists. To the same effect is Dattaka Mimamsa, section 5, placitum 42. Mitra in his book on Joint Property and Partition, Tagore Law Lectures, makes it clear at pages 355, 357, 359. See also the texts of Katyayana, Vasishta, and Budhayana cited in the Smriti Chandrika. See also Sirkar on 'Adoption,' page 401.

The principle of the reduced share has been approved and adopted in Appeal No. 104 of 1914 (unreported); Karuturi Gopalan v. Karuturi Venkata Raghavulu (5). The property in question in Gungadhar Bogla v. Hira Lal Bolga (3) was Stridhan. Nagindas Bhugwandas v. Bachoo Hurkissondas (2) is a case of competition re collateral succession. Pratapsing Shivsing v. Agarsinghji Raisinghji (4) follows the same rule. See also Narasimhappa v. Chinna Kenchappa (6).

Mr. T. M. Ramaswami Aiyar, in reply.—Narasimhappa v. Chinna Kenchappa (6) and Appeal Suit No. 104 of 1914 do not at all discuss the point. Pratapsing Shivsing v. Agarsinghji Raisinghji (4) is in point. It is not a case of collateral succession. There can be no question of principle in the construing of express texts of Hindu Law.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for partition. The 1st plaintiff is the father and the 2nd plaintiff is his natural born son. The 1st defendant is his adopted son and the 2nd defendant is the son of the adopted son. The question for consideration is, what is the share to which the 1st defendant, the adopted son, is entitled when a suit is brought for partition and the father is a party to that suit. A question was raised which is referred to in the written statement that, as before the birth of a second son, there was an award of arbitrators settling the disputes between the 1st plaintiff and the 1st defendant, a decree should be passed in pursuance of that award. The first issue related to that contention. The facts relating to that issue are these. The adoption of the 1st defendant was made in 1887 when the 1st plaintiff's first wife was alive. She died in 1888. First plaintiff contemplated marrying a second wife. Thereupon the natural father of the 1st defendant raised disputes and asked that before the 2nd marriage was performed, the share of the 1st defendant should be set apart. It is said that, in consequence of this objection by the natural father of the 1st defendant, the arbitrators settled the shares of the 1st plaintiff and the 1st defendant. The District Munsif was of opinion that, as the award was not made a decree of Court and as it was not registered, it was not receivable in evidence; but he gave to the two plaintiffs and the 1st defendant a third share each in the property. He relied upon the decision in Raja v. Subbaraya (7), which has since been overruled by Karuturi Gopalan v. Karuturi Venkata Raghavulu (5). The Munsif also stated in his judgment that the genuineness of the award was not admitted by the plaintiffs. Against the decree of the Munsif there was an appeal to the Subordinate Judge. A memorandum of objections was also filed by the defendants. In that memorandum there is no claim that they should be given a half share under the award. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the share to which the 1st defendant was entitled was 1/9th of the property. Against this finding this second appeal has been preferred by the defendants. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyer argued that the conclusion come to by the lower Courts that the award is not receivable in evidence was wrong and that his clients were entitled to a finding whether the award was genuine or not, and to a decree in pursuance of that award. He considered that the appellants could not claim one-half of that property as there was no memorandum of objections in the lower Appellate Court, but argued that he is entitled to rely upon the award for the purpose of securing the decree of the District Munsif. We have come to the conclusion that it is not open to the appellants to rely upon that award. The genuineness was disputed. There was no attempt made in the lower Appellate Court to base any claim upon the award. We have no affidavit before us by the appellants or by their Pleader that this question was argued in the lower Appellate Court. Under the circumstances we are of opinion that the defendants gave up their right under the first issue. As was held by the Judicial Committee in Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Bhasyakarlu Naidu (1), on a question of disputed facts it is within the competence of the Pleader or parties to the give up an issue, that is what seems to have happened in the lower Court. We are not prepared to remit the issue for a finding as to whether this award was genuine or not.

Now we come to the main question in the case and that is, what is the share to which the 1st defendant is entitled where a suit is brought during the lifetime of his adoptive father for settling the shares. There can be no doubt that if Manu's Text in Chapter IX, Sloka 163, is to be applied literally, the 1st defendant will be entitled to nothing more than maintenance. But Vignaneswara, in commenting upon Yagnavalkya's text, points out that this rule must be restricted to cases where the adopted son is not a good man. Since that time three Smrithi writers at least have laid down the rules as regards the shares of the adopted son, Vasistha, Katyayana and Budhayana. All of them say that the adopted son, if a son is born to the adoptive father after the adoption, is entitled to ¼th share. In this Court it has been consistently held that the meaning of that text is that the property should be divided into five shares, four of which will be taken by the Aurasa son and one will be taken by the adopted son. The contention of Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer was that this rule, being a restriction upon the natural rights of a son, should be confined to cases where there is a partition between the brothers—between the adopted son and the natural born son, and should not be applied to cases where a suit is brought by the father to divide the property. He relied for this contention upon the latest pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in Pratapsing Shivsing v. Agarsinghji Raisinghji (4), where their Lordships point out that the adopted son, ordinarily speaking, is in the same position as a natural born son. That observation was made regarding the right of maintenance; it was held that the fact that a person is adopted will not deprive him of the right. The learned Vakil also relied upon two other cases. Nagindas Bhugwandas v. Bachoo Hurkissondas (2) was a case where the question was, what was the share to which the adopted son was entitled to in cases of collateral succession. The adopted son and the natural born son were the only two heirs who were alive when the succession opened, and it was held that the text of Vasistha was not applicable to such a case and that both the sons were entitled to the inheritance in equal moieties In Gangahar Bagla v. Hira Lal Bagla (3) which related to the Stridhanam of a step-mother, both Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ., point out that the exception should be confined within proper limits and should not be extended to cases of Stridhana succession. From these observations Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer contended that the injunction of Vasistha should be confined to cases where the suit is brought by a natural born son against the adopted son or vice versa and should not be extended to cases where the suit is instituted in the lifetime of the father. On principle there is no reason why such a limited application should be given to the text of Vasistha or Bodhayana or Katyayana. In two cases of this Court the matter seems to have been taken for granted that even if such a suit is brought during the lifetime of the father, the text of Vasistha will be applicable, Narasimhappa v. Chinna Kenchappa (6) and Appeal No. 104 of 1914. But in those cases there was no discussion upon this point. And naturally the learned Vakil for the appellants contended that the decision is not binding upon him. We have, therefore, considered the text of the Hindu Law with some care and we are glad to say that our conclusion is in accordance with the decision come to in the two cases already cited. As was pointed out by Mr. Narayanamurthi for the respondents, in this portion of Mitakshara in section 1 the whole discussion begins with a definition of Daya. The author says that properties are of two kinds, obstructed property and unobstructed property. First of all he deals with the unobstructed property and then deals with obstructed property. The rules relating to partition are all contained in the sections dealing with unobstructed property. Here again, we must observe that the sections are not to be found in Vignaneswara's commentary, but they were imported by Mr. Colebrooke who has very carefully analysed the commentary and has given headings which he thought were appropriate for the subject matter discussed. In the 1st clause of section 2 the rules relating to partition during the lifetime of the father are considered. In section 3 the rules relating to partition after the death of the father are considered and the other sections 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 deal with matters which would be applicable to both classes of partition—partition during the lifetime of the father and partition after his death. Section 11, in which the question as to the right of the adopted son when he is in competition with a natural born son is dealt with, must also be regarded as belonging to the same category as sections 4 to 10, which have all a general application without reference either to the question of partition after the death of the father or partition before his death. There is no reason for saying that the text applies only to cases of partition after the death of the father. No doubt the language in Sanskrit, to which Mr. Ramasawmi Iyer drew our attention in reply, suggests that the commentator contemplated a state of things existing after the death of the father. But that would not show that this text is solely to be applied to cases where partition takes place after the death of the father and not during his lifetime. After dealing with this portion of Yagnavalkya's Text, Vignaneswara begins the next head of discussion, viz., obstructed properties. What has been laid down in the two cases decided by the Judicial Committee and by the Calcutta High Court relates to the second head of discussion, obstructed property. It was held in these cases that there is no reason for applying section 11 to subjects covered by Chapter 2. In our opinion we will be doing no violence to the canon of interpretation suggested by the Judicial Committee and by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court by applying the rule in section 11 to cases of partition during the lifetime of the father, because section 11 is germane to the discussion relating to unobstructed property. In the Dattaka Chandrika, the Dattaka Mimamsa and the Saraswathi Vilasa, the rule of Vasistha is quoted as of general application to all cases of partition. The principle underlying the texts is that in the partition of the patrimony inter se between the members of the family the adopted son is only entitled to a limited share. In the case of collateral succession, his share is as extended as that of a natural born son. According to Bodhayana Sutram the adopted child has to give and provide at the time of adoption that he would not claim more than a fourth share of his father's property if a natural son is born. For these reasons we are of opinion that the lower Courts were right in holding that Vasistha's text is applicable to the present case. Applying that rule, the father and the natural son would between them be entitled to eight shares and the adopted son to one share in the property.

(7) 7 M. 253.

We dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 22nd of June 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Satkania, dated the 28th April 1917.

FACTS apear from the judgment.

Babu Poresh Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant The apeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract, viz, to renew the lease, on its expiry, on the former terms. The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that as the price of paddy has increased, the plaintiff can have the lease renewed only at an enhanced rate of rent. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, holding upon a construction of the lease that the plaintiff was entitled to a renewal on the paddy rent only and not on its price. The stipulation in the lease was that the plaintiff would, on the expiry of the term, be entitled to take re-settlement of the land. My contention is that I am entitled to a renewal on the same terms in the absence of a covenant stating the terms of the renewal. Refers to Secretary of State for India v. Digambar Nanda (1), Secretary of State for India v. Siba Prosad Jana (2), Secretary of State for India v. Forbes (3).

Babu Charu Chandra Sen (with him Babu Dhirendranath Bagchi), for the Respondents.—My preliminary objection is that the appeal is infructuous as there were two suits one by the plaintiff and the other by the defendant-landlord for ejectment of the plaintiff tenant. The Court of Appeal below decreed the latter suit also. Farther the lower Appellate Court in decreeing the plaintiff's suit also directed him to deposit rent in arrears within a certain time, which the plaintiff has failed to do. He has merely deposited rent for one year and has afterwards filed this appeal.

As regards the merits I submit the landlord has proved a distinct contract, viz., that the plaintiff would be entitled to take re-settlement according to the prevailing rate of rent. My point is that I can accept the paddy rent or its price as it obtains at present in the market. The price of paddy could not be fixed in perpetuity as the lease was for nine years. My second point is that the appellant, having failed to comply with the Subordinate Judge's order, is not entitled to apreal to this Court. He has not objected to that portion of the order at all. His appeal mainly relates to the question of the price of paddy.

(2) 45 Ind. Cas. 983; 27 C. L. J. 447.
(3) 17 Ind. Cas. 180; 16 C. L. J. 217.

Babu Poresh Chandra Sen, in reply.—As regards the ejectment suit, it was decreed by the first Court but dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. As regards the learned Subordinate Judge's direction in the decree, I would contend that when I have paid rent for the last two years, it is to be presumed that I have also paid rent for the first year out of Court. I submit my right of appeal to this Court cannot be lost on that ground inasmuch as I have appealed against the decision of the lower Appellate Court as a whole.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is the plaintiff. He brought a suit for specific performance of a contract for renewal of a sub-lease under the defendant. The plaintiff originally took a lease for nine years running from the 15th of Bysakh 1268 M. E. On the expiry of that lease a question arose as to the renewal of the lease. The Munsif held that the plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance, the plaintiff's claim being for renewal at the original rent. On appeal the Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit for specific performance subject to certain conditions, but on terms which were not altogether to the liking of the plaintiff; and he has appealed against the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The original lease took a form often to be found in old leases. It set out that the rental was to be 200 aris of paddy or Rs. 48, and as regards the renewal there was a clause that on the expiry of the term, the tenant would get a re-settlement of the land. Leases of this class have often been before this Court where questions have been raised as to the meaning of the lease, namely, whether the rent payable is the money value set out in the lease as the equivalent of the produce rent or whether the produce rent is the starting point and the money value is to be fixed from time to time according to the value of the produce at the time of the suit, and the views taken by the Court have not always been identical. What is the exact meaning of the lease in the present instance is not, however, material and I don't propose to offer any opinion upon it although the lower Appellate Court seems to have been led to do so, because in the present suit, in which the question simply is what are to be the terms on which the lease should be renewed, the question which arises is whether the terms of the original lease are to be introduced, and not what is the meaning of those terms when they are introduced. If there is any dispute as to whether the rent payable is to be 200 aris of paddy or Rs. 48 in the alternative, that is a matter which can only arise in some other suit. The present question is merely what are the terms on which the lease is to be renewed. The case has been somewhat complicated by the procedure followed in the course of it in the lower Courts. A question was raised before the Munsif as to there having been a contemporaneous oral agreement not inconsistant with the terms of the lease, by which it was agreed between the parties that on the expiry of the lease, the lease must be renewed at the rent prevailing as regards such leases. The Munsif found that such an agreement had been made by the parties. When the matter went in appeal before the Subordinate Judge, no reference appears to have been made to this contemporaneous agreement at all, but the learned Judge referred to an offer which the landlord made, namely, that he was prepared to renew the lease at the rate of 200 aris of paddy. The tenant was apparently prepared to accept this, provided the alternative price of Rs. 48 was also added in the lease. That the landlord would not agree to, and the learned Subordinate Judge remarked that it was inequitable that the original price of paddy in 1268 should be reproduced in the lease and he ordered a renewal of the lease on the terms of 200 aris without giving the value of the paddy in the alternative. The practical result is that the learned Judge insisted in effect, though not in form, on the tenant's accepting the offer of the landlord which, in fact, he never did accept, because he only accepted 200 aris of paddy as rent subject to the value of Rs. 48 also being entered in the lease. This would have raised considerable difficulty and would probably have compelled a remand to the lower Appellate Court to express an opinion on the truth of the allegation that there was a contemporaneous oral agreement but for a certain ground of appeal raised in the lower Appellate Court, in which the plaintiff took up a line inconsistent with the line which he now follows. In the memorandum of appeal in the lower Appellate Court one of the grounds taken by him was that the Court ought to have fixed a proper rate and ordered a renewal of the lease. Now he takes a ground which is entirely different and says that the Court was bound to reproduce the whole of the terms of the lease as they originally stood in 1268. It is well known that in the absence of other facts if there is a stipulation for the renewal of a lease, the tenant is entitled to a renewal of the lease on the original condition, and, in ordinary circumstances, in the absence of other considerations, the tenant would have been entitled to a renewal of all the terms of the lease on that principle, but in view of the line which was taken in the grounds of appeal in the lower Appellate Court I do not think he can now be allowed to take a line which is quite inconsistent with the line then taken, when he suggested that the Court ought to have renewed the lease on reasonable terms. That being so, I think the order made by the learned Subordinate Judge must stand, for it cannot be said that it was unreasonable to fix the rent at the original paddy rate.

A point was raised by way of preliminary objection that the appellant had not carried out certain conditions which were attached to the Court's decree and that a failure to observe those conditions resulted according to the Court's order in a dismissal of the claims and in giving khas possession to the respondent. The conditions imposed were that the rent up to the year 1279 M. E. was to be paid; and it is alleged that although the tenant-appellant has paid the rent of 1279, the rent for the previous years remains due. It seems to me that this preliminary objection must not be allowed to stand, whether it be a fact or not that the appellant has not paid the rent previous to 1279. The conditions are in these terms: "In case the appellant fails to make the deposit and to agree to take a sub-lease on the above terms, his claim for specific performance of the lease will stand dismissed and the respondent will get khas possession." The appellant had his right of appeal against the terms imposed by the Court in the case. The lower Appellate Court ordered that his claim would be dismissed if he failed to do two things, viz., make the deposit and agree to take a sub-lease on certain terms. As he had a right of appeal against part of the conditions, namely, the agreeing to take a sub-lease on certain terms, I do not see how he can be bound by the lower Courts' order even if it be a fact that he did fail to make the deposit. The appeal is accordingly dismissed and the condition which was imposed by the learned lower Appellate Court will be reproduced in the decree of this Court, allowing the appellant a month's time to make the payment if not already made to date from the date of the receipt of this Court's order in the lower Appellate Court. The respondent is entitled to his costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 217 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 234 of 1917, District Court, Kistna), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Masulipatam, in Original Suit No. 27 of 1915.

FACTS.—A decree was passed in favour of a minor. The executors under the Will of the minor's father purchased certain properties from the judgment-debtors. The deed was not registered. On the minor's attaining age, after a lapse of about ten years, he brought the present suit for getting the deed registered. The suit was decreed by the lower Appellate Court, reversing the decision of the trial Court.

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Appellants.—This is a suit for specific performance. The plaintiff was not a party to the contract nor is he the representative-in-interest nor the principal of any party thereto, as required by section 23 of the Specific Relief Act. So the suit does not lie. Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (1). It is not within the competence, either of the manager of the minor's estate or of the guardian of the minor, to bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property. See also Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa Raghava Chariar (2), Krishna Aiyar v. Shamanna (3).

Further there has been no legally constituted guardian in the present case. The Will has made them executors and nothing more. The mere fact that they represented the minor in the suit is not sufficient. Even if sufficient, sanction of Court should have been taken.

The suit is time-barred under Article 113 of the Limitation Act, as it is brought more than three years from the time when the right accrued.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondent.—The suit is not one for specific performance but for getting a document registered. See the distinction given by rules 32 and 34 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. So no question of mutuality arises. Even otherwise the minor is the principal for the party to the contract. And so, section 23 of the Specific Relief Act is satisfied. Further, possession has been with me and everything has been done to complete my title except the formality of a registered deed. So the question of mutuality which turns upon the assumption of contract of sale does not apply. See Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa Raghava Chariar (2).

Further I submit that the executors were legally constituted guardians under the Will as rightly construed. That was also recognised by the Courts subsequently. Sanction of Court is not necessary for a purchase which is for the benefit of the minor. The rule is intended only for the protection of the minor.

See Hebiluddin Mia's Wife v. Janaki Nath Sircar (4), Babu Ram v. Saidunnissa (5), Hem Chandra Sarkar v. Lalit Mohan Kar (6), Nur Bakhsh v. Rukum Singh (7).

See also Bannerjea on Specific Relief, page 252.

The test is whether mutuality is essential to the validity of the transaction. I submit that it is not in the present case. Muttia Konan v. Perumal Konan (8).

Article 113 of the Limitation Act requires a demand and refusal. The demand and refusal were within three years of suit. The suit is, therefore, in time.

JUDGMENT.

undivided family sold certain lands to the testamentary guardians of the plaintiff, who was then a minor, the consideration being the discharge of a certain mortgage debt then due by the defendants' family under a mortgage deed executed in favour of the plaintiff's adoptive father. In accordance with the agreement of sale possession was then given of the property and the plaintiff claims to have held possession ever since. A sale deed was also drawn up but not registered on account of some verbal defects. A suit to enforce registration would now be long out of time if brought under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act (Act XVI of 1908). This suit was instituted in January 1915 for specific performance, the prayer in the plaint being that the defendants be directed to execute a proper registered sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the immoveable property mentioned in the schedule and to pay the plaintiff's costs of the suit.

Before the institution of this suit the plaintiff attained his majority. The defences to the suit inter alia were that specific performance could not be enforced against the defendants for want of mutuality and that the suit was time-barred. The District Munsif found for the defendants on these two points and dismissed the suit. On appeal the Temporary Subordinate Judge reversed the District Munsif's decision and entered judgment for the plaintiff.

On the first point I think that the Privy Council decision in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (1) is applicable to the facts of this case and decisive. Their Lordships observed at page 237 * that it was not within the competence of a guardian of a minor to bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property and they were further of opinion that as the minor in that case was not bound by the contract, there was no mutuality, and that the minor, who had at the time of the suit reached his majority, could not obtain specific performance.

Section 23 of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877, declares who may obtain specific performance of a contract and includes in the list any party to the contract and the representative-in-interest or the principal of any party thereto. The plaintiff in this case was not a party to the contract for purchase, nor is he the representative-in-interest of his guardians, nor can they be strictly called his agents because agency implies contracting power in the principal, and the plaintiff, being a minor, was incompetent to contract at the time the contract was made by his guardians.

An attempt has been made in this Court to distinguish Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (1) on the grounds (1) that the guardian in that case was the de facto guardian of a Muhammadan, and (2) that the performance that is sought to be enforced in the present case is the performance of a statutory duty under section 55 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) rather than the terms of any particular contract. The answer to this is that the want of mutuality between the parties to the suit and not any want of validity in the guardian's appointment was the ground of Lord Macnaghten's decision, and secondly, although certain liabilities are imposed by Statute upon buyers and sellers, these are obligations that flow from the contractual relations between the parties and do not exist independently of their contract. These provisions are intended by the Legislature to be terms implied in every contract of this description, unless there is anything stated to the contrary. The case of Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (1) has been considered in a decision of this Court in Krishna Aiyar v. Shamanna (3) With due respect, I confess I am unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Judges who decided that case. I do not consider that any analogy can be drawn between a contract made by the guardian of a minor and one made by the manager of a joint family, who has the power in case of family necessity to convey away the interests of himself and other members of the family. A contract made by the manager of a joint family may be specifically enforced against him and he may be compelled to exercise his power of conveyance without the other members of the family being parties to the contract or to the conveyance. A completed contract in a minor's favour stands on a different footing. A minor may enforce a sale or a mortgage executed in his favour. see: Bhaggabhor Mondal (Hari Mohan Mondal) v. Mohini Mohan Banerjee (9) and Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa Raghava Chariar (2), although as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, the minor may not be entitled to sue the mortgagor on the personal covenant to pay. That a minor's guardian cannotlimpose a personal liability on his ward by contract was again emphasised in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in Batchu Ramajogayya v. Vajula Jagannadham (10) and there can be no doubt that the covenants, the specific enforcement of which is intended in the Specific Relief Act, are all personal. In the present case the Subordinate Judge was undoubtedly wrong in treating the transfer as complete even before the execution of a registered document. He said it was "completed for all practical purposes" by the payment of the price and delivery of possession. The provision in the second paragraph of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) cannot be so easily avoided. On the above ground alone I think that the present suit must fail and I do not think it necessary to express an opinion on the question of limitation. I have only to observe that section 55 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act makes it the duty of the buyer to first tender to the seller a proper conveyance for execution at a proper time and place and on the findings of fact which are before us in second appeal, it is impossible to say that this has ever been done. The appeal must be allowed and the decree of the District Munsif restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

There is no custom in force in South Malabar entitling a landlord, in cases of Karamkari and Adimayavana tenures, to resume the holding on alienation thereof by the grantee. [p. 400, col. 1; p. 401, col. 1.]

The Sudder Court proceedings of 1856 and judicial decisions generally, howsoever they are entitled to respect, are not conclusive on the legal incidents of a tenure and should not be given undue weight in the face of evidence as to custom. [p. 399, col. 2; p. 401, col. 2.]

Venkatagiri Pattar v. Manavikrama, 40 Ind. Cas. 769; (1917) M. W. N. 419; 6 L. W. 114, doubted.

Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair, 12 Ind. Cas. 1007; 36 M. 380; 22 M. L. J. 118; 10 M. L. T. 521. (1911) 2 M. W. N. 529 and Theyyan Nair v. Zamorin of Calicut, 27 M. 202, distinguished.

Per Krishnan, J—The ignorance of a grantee's assignees as to the inalienability and liability to forfeiture of a tenure, for which the landlord is not responsible, cannot raise any estoppel against him nor can the fact that he did not enforce his right of forfeiture at any prior period bar his right or raise any estoppel against him. [p. 382, col. 1.]

The inference of prima facie inalienability from the right of reversion in the landlord is not a necessary or valid inference at all, nor does a permanent right of cultivation imply inalienability. [p. 383, col. 1.]

The only safe method to find out if any particular right is a customary incident of a tenure is to take evidence of custom, in the absence of authoritative rulings or statements about it. [p. 384, col. 1.]

Where inalienability and liability to forfeiture are set up as incidents of a tenure, it is for the landlord to prove them, as prima facie all property should be taken as alienable. [p. 384, col. 2.]

Prima facie, alienation of any portion of a holding would offend against the rule of inalienability, if there is one; and, unless it can be shown that under the very custom which imposes the rule of inalienability the rule does not apply to partial alienations, it must be held that a partial alienation will be sufficient to work a forfeiture. [p. 385, col. 1.]

Dasserathy Huri Chunder Mahapattra v. Ramakrishna Jana, 9 C. 526; 13 C. L. R. 114, Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Bhubaneswari, 15 Ind. Cas. 620; 39 C. 903 and Rai Kamaleswari Persad Singh v. Maharaja Harbullabh Narain Singh, 2 C. L. J. 369, distinguished.

Actual knowledge, as distinguished from means of knowledge, is necessary to infer waiver or implied contract, as in such cases the intention of the party whose act is said to constitute the waiver or the implied contract has to be looked to. [p. 385, col. 1.]

Under Article 143 of the Limitation Act, the forfeiture itself is the starting point for limitation, not the lessor's knowledge of the forfeiture. [p. 395, col. 2.]

The existence or non-existence of an alleged custom is a mixed question of law and fact and a finding about it is revisable by the High Court in second appeal. [p. 400, col. 2.]

There is a distinction between inalienability and resumability. The one does not follow from the other, the right of resumption and re-entry on alienation must be expressly given, it cannot be inferred from inalienability alone. [p. 401, col. 2.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suits Nos. 313, 314, 315, 316 and 317 of 1916 respectively, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Alattur, in Original Suits Nos. 437, 353, 472, 371 and 370 of 1914 respectively.

FACTS.—The Zamorin of Calicut had granted lands under what is termed Karamkari or Adimayavana tenure, supposed to be permanent and inalienable. The tenants having made alienations, a suit was filed to avoid the tenures on the ground that the tenants had on account of alienation forfeited them under a custom of South Malabar.

Findings were called for as to (a) whether there was waiver by acceptance of rent, (b) whether the custom existed. Waiver as to some items and custom were found.

Mr. A. Sundaram, for the Appellants.—There can be no waiver without knowledge of the alienation. Deb Narain Dutt v. Baidya Nath Modak(1), Digbijoy Roy v. Ata Rahaman (2), Rasamoy Purkait v. Srinath Moyra (3), Baroda Churn Dutt v. Hemlata Dosi (4).

The custom is found.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents —There is waiver by acceptance of rent. The alienees have been paying the Government revenue. See section 112, Transfer of Property Act. Three Karasthans (or agents) accepted rents from the alienees with knowledge of the alienation. Hence the presumption under section 229 of the Indian Contract Act applies. The principle is laid down in Matthews v. Smallwood (5).

There is no direct evidence as to custom. The evidence is that various alienations have taken place without question. The Sudder Decisions of 1856 ought not to be followed at the present day. See Moore's Malabar Law, page 309. Bona fide purchasers ought to be protected. The decision in Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (6) requires re-consideration.

Mr. Sundaram, in reply.—The Sudder Decisions are based on elaborate evidence.

[AYLING, J.—But they are not decisive on the question.]

The custom is recognised without exception. See also the Malabar Gazetteer and Graeme's Glossary.

ZAMORIN RAJA AVERGAL OF CALICUT v. UNIKAT KARUAVAN SAMU NAIR.

JUDGMENT.

KRISHNAN, J.—These five second appeals arise from five suits filed by the Zamorin Raja of Calicut through the Estate Collector, Mr. Thorne, I. C. S., to recover possession of a large number of items of properties belonging in Janm to the estate, with arrears of rent and future rent, from the persons in possession of them, on payment of the value of improvements and in one case, viz., 1081 of 1917, the amount of a Veppu or usufructuary mortgage as well. In two of these cases, Second Appeals Nos. 1079 and 1080 of 1917, the properties had been granted on what is known as "Adimayavana" tenure, by a former Zamorin and in the three others they were similarly granted on "Karamkari" tenure. These tenures are admittedly permanent tenures but the plaintiff claimed to avoid them on two grounds, viz., that they were in their inception invalid as having been granted by a person who, as a Stani, had no power to grant them, and, secondly, that the grantees having alienated the properties they had forfeited under the custom of South Malabar the permanent tenures which they held.

The lower Courts have held that even if the original grants were beyond the powers of the Stani who made them, they had become validated by adverse possession of the grantees for many years, and this finding has not been questioned before us. The findings of the lower Courts on the 2nd ground taken are in the landlord's favour, but his suits have been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the tenants who now hold the properties are all bona fide purchasers for value from ostensible owners and that they are entitled to protection on the principle of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act though the section does not in terms apply. It is not possible to support this view and the learned Counsel for the respondents did not seriously attempt to do so. The deeds of grant in the various cases all expressly state the holding to be either Adimayavana or Karamkari and what was purchased by the defendants was also one or the other of these rights. There is, therefore, no question of ostensible ownership here at all. If the defendants are right in their contention that no forfeiture was caused by the alienations in their favour, a point which I shall deal with presently, the landlord's suits must fail on that ground and no question of estoppel will arise. Even on the footing that a forfeiture does result on alienation, I am of opinion that no estoppel arises against the landlord on the facts stated by the Sub Judge. He considers that because no express mention of forfeiture is made in the deeds of grant and the law on the point was uncertain till recently and because the Zamorin did not seek to enforce forfeiture prior to these suits though there were several alienations previously, an estoppel arises against him in favour of the defendants who purchased the properties for full value. Neither ground stated is a proper basis for raising an estoppel. The ignorance of the defendants as to the legal incidents of the tenures in question, assuming that inalienability and forfeitability are such incidents, for which ignorance the landlord was in no way responsible, cannot raise any estoppel against him, nor can the fact that he did not exercise his right of enforcing forfeiture prior to these suits bar him from doing so now or raise any estoppel against him; see observation in Parameshri v. Vittappa Shanbaga (7). If the tenures the defendants purchased are forfeitable ones, they must take the consequence and cannot complain even if they paid full value. In any case, therefore, the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the question of estoppel is erroneous and must be set aside.

This, however, does not dispose of these second appeals, as the learned Counsel for the respondents has claimed to support the decrees of the lower Appellate Court on several points which have been decided against his clients but which, he contends, were so decided wrongly. He is entitled to do so and we must, therefore, consider the points raised by him.

The first question he raises is that the finding that the tenures in question here are forfeitable on alienation is incorrect and is not supported by the custom of South Malabar. The Subordinate Judge considered that he was bound by the authority of Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (6) to hold that Karamkari tenure was so forfeitable, though he says the law seems uncertain except for the decision and refers to several circumstances which are rather against its correctness. He further held that Theyyan Nair v. Zamorin of Calicut (8) was an implied authority for holding that the same rule applied to Adimayavana tenure. The learned Vakil for the appellant has supplemented these authorities by referring us to the case in Venkatagiri Pattar v. Manavikrama (9), which was one of an Adimayavana tenure. In the view the Sub-Judge took he did not consider a large volume of evidence which the defendants had given to show that alienability was an ordinary incident of these tenures.

It is necessary to examine these authorities, to see if we can accept them as settling the question at issue. The earliest case cited, Theyyan Nair v. Zamorin of Calicut (8), was one of an Adimayavana tenure but no question of forfeiture on alienation arose in it. The main question there was whether it was a permanent tenure, and it was held that it was. An argument was raised in it that the tenure was a service tenure and as such resumable. This was overruled on the ground that it was not shown to have been granted for future services. This case seems to have no bearing on the present case, as no question of resumption on failure to perform service has been raised here. It is only useful to show that this Court cited and considered the Sudder Court proceedings of the 5th August 1856.

The next case cited, Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (6), seems to be more in point. The learned Judges there, after citing the observations in the Sudder Court Proceedings of 1856, say: "It will be observed that a Karamkari holder in North Malabar has no heritable right at all and with respect to South Malabar the right of reversion in the landlord prima facie supports the appellant's contention that the tenure is inalienable," They then point out that the word Karamkari means a permanent right of cultivation and finally relying on the language of the instrument in that case, which in terms prohibited alienation, hold that the tenure was inalienable and, therefore, the alienation put an end to the tenure itself. There is no clear and express decision in their judgment that the condition of inalienablity is attached to the Karamkari tenure by custom taken by itself. That is the argument in the present cases, as there is nothing in any of the deeds of grant before us in any way prohibiting alienation. On this point the present cases are in a way distinguishable from that case. But it must be conceded that to hold, as they did, that a clause of re-entry was unnecessary, distinguishing the case before them from the cases cited in Parameshri v. Vittappa Shanbaga (7) and Netrapal Singh v. Kalyan Das (10), their decision must be taken to involve the view that the custom made the continuance of possession in the Karamkari holder a condition precedent for the continuance of the tenure itself. With all respect to the learned Judges I am unable to follow the reasoning adopted by them. Assuming that the Sudder proceedings should be treated as authoritative in the absence of anything to the contrary, they do not seem to justify a conclusion as to inalienability. It will be noted that there is nothing stated in them as to inalienability or forfeiture on alienation. The inference of prima facie inalienability from the right of reversion in the landlord does not seem to me, with all respect to the learned Judges, to be a necessary or valid inference at all. In fact, according to the ruling in Secretary of State v. Hosangadi Shivaramappa (11), the same incident of revertibility exists in the case of the Mulgeni lease of South Kanara to which this tenure is stated to be similar in Graeme's Glossary, a work of equal if not of higher authority than the Sudder proceedings on the point, but it has never been suggested that it is by custom an inalienable right. The terms of this tenure are described in the Glossary under the title Jenmam Kozhu, which seems to be only another name for it. A permanent right of cultivation of course does not imply inalienability. There is thus no valid basis for an inference of inalienability by custom in the case of these tenures. Moreover, the method of inferring the existence of new incidents for a tenure as the supposed logical result of its known incidents seems to me to be quite an unsafe method to adopt. To find out if any particular right is a customary incident of a tenure such as the one we have before us, the only safe method is to take evidence of the custom, in the absence of authoritative rulings or statements about it. I am unable to accept Achutha Menon's case (6) as settling the question; no authoritative statements on the point have been brought to my notice with regard to the Karamkari tenure in South Malabar.

As regards the Adimayavana tenure the only case cited which is in point is Venkatagiri Pattar v. Manavikrama (9). That decision treats Adimayavana as similar in all respects to Anubhavam and following the ruling in Ukkandath v. Puliyakot Kunhi Kuttan (12) which was one of Anubhavam, applies the rule of inalienability to the Adimayavana tenure also. Now as pointed out by the learned Counsel for the respondents the Sudder Court proceedings as well as Graeme's Glossary seem to treat them, as also the Karamkari or Jenmam Kozhu tenure, as having different incidents and probably different origin, though they are all of them similar as regards permanency of tenure. It seems to me, therefore, very doubtful whether it is right to apply what is stated about inalienability regarding the Anubhavam tenure in the Sudder proceedings to Adimayavana. In fact the description given of the latter in Graeme's Glossary would seem to suggest that inalienability was not one of its conditions; for it says with regard to the lands that "the tenant could not be dispossessed and the land descended to his heirs and only reverted to the Jenmi on failure of heirs." With regard to Parambas or gardens it is more explicit, for it says "the garden reverts to the proprietor on failure of heirs on the part of the Adiyan and if the Adiyan takes a part with the enemies of his patron, the latter may resume the property. Under any other circumstances the Adiyan cannot be dispossessed and he has a right of burial within the garden." There is no discussion of the terms of the Adimayavana tenure in Venkatagiri Pattar's case (9) and I am, with all respect, inclined to think that the question as to what are its proper terms should also be settled by taking evidence of custom.

In Chapter XIII of Moore's Malabar Law and Custom it is stated that all the above mentioned tenures, i. e., Karamkari, Adimayavana and Anubhavam, appear to be inalienable (page 309), but the learned author also remarks that there is a singular absence of judicial authority in respect of those grants and that at all events the grantor's representatives would be required to prove clearly that the grant was inalienable and resumable.

In these circumstances before deciding the point, I would call for a finding on evidence as to the custom about it. There is already a considerable body of evidence on the defendants' behalf on record to prove alienability. The burden is, however, on the landlord to prove the custom of inalienability and forfeitability as alleged by him, as prima facie all property should be taken to be alienable. As the plaintiff, apparently relying on the rulings above considered, adduced no evidence on the point, I think it is proper to allow him a fresh opportunity to do so and of course the defendants must also be allowed to adduce any further evidence they may want to in their favour. The Court may also call Court witnesses if it thinks fit to do so.

Before leaving this part of the case, a special argument raised by the respondents in Second Appeal No. 1081 of 1917 must be mentioned. They contended that as the Tarwads of the original grantees were themselves in possession of most of the properties included in the grant and only a few had been alienated to defendants Nos. 21 to 23, no forfeiture of the whole holding should be taken to have been worked even if a custom prohibiting alienation generally is established. Their learned Counsel relied on the cases in Dassorathy Huri Chunder Mahapattra v. Ramakrishna Jana (13), Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Bhubaneswari (14) and Rai Kamaleswari Persad

Singh v. Maharaja Harbullabh Narain Singh (15) in support of this argument. These cases are not in point, as they were under the Bengal Tenancy Act where under section 25 the question is what will amount to an abandonment of the holding It was held that an alienation of a part will not be an abandonment of the whole and a forfeiture incurred by a part owner will not bind his co sharers. The question raised here is entirely different. Prima facie, alienation of any portion of a holding would offend against the rule of inalienability, if there is one; and unless it can be shown that under the very custom which imposes the rule of inalienability, the rule does not apply to partial alienations it must be held that a partial alienation will be sufficient to work a forfeiture. The point about partial alienation has not been taken in the lower Courts, and we cannot allow it to be raised now and give leave to the defendants to adduce fresh evidence about it. This point must, therefore, be overruled.

The next point taken for the respondents is that even assuming that alienation would work a forfeiture of the tenure in question, the plaintiff cannot rely on the plaint alienations for the purpose, as he has waived such forfeiture and recognized the validity of the transfers to the defendants and treated them as his tenants by accepting rent from them through his agents and allowed them to pay revenue to Government out of the rents fixed as provided in the deeds of grant. This is a question which has to be considered on the evidence in each case and with regard to each forfeiture relied on, separately. The Munsif upheld the plea in all cases on the facts. But the Subordinate Judge had disallowed them, on the common ground that there is no direct evidence to show that the plaintiff had knowledge that the forfeiture had been incurred when the rents were received from and the revenue was allowed to be paid by the alienees. No doubt actual knowledge, as distinguished from means of knowledge, is necessary to infer waiver or implied contract, as we have to deal in such cases with the intention of the person whose act is said to constitute the waiver or the implied contract. See Foa on Landlord and Tenant, 5th Edition, page 634, and the case of Matthews v. Smallwood (5) there cited, as also Jugmohandas v. Pallonjee (16).

The Subordinate Judge, however, is in error in thinking that the lessor should have been given actual notice of the forfeiture. Knowledge may be inferred from circumstances; and it is not necessary to have direct evidence of it always. The Subordinate Judge has not dealt with the evidence on this point, nor has he considered the effect of the non production of the plaintiff's accounts though he was summoned to produce them. His finding, therefore, cannot be accepted as satisfactory and a revised finding on the evidence on record with reference to each case must be called for.

It may be observed that the payments pleaded were to the landlord's agent and not to the landlord direct. It will, therefore, be a question for the Subordinate Judge to consider whether those agents had actual knowledge and if so, whether under section 229 of the Contract Act, they could not be held to have communicated the information they got to their principal and further whether they themselves had not authority to waive the forfeiture and continue the permanent lease in favour of the transferees so as to bind the principal. These questions were argued before us, but cannot be disposed of by us at present as the facts have not been found yet.

The next point argued is one of limitation. The Subordinate Judge's view that time begins to run under Article 143 of the Limitation Act only when the landlord comes to know of the forfeiture cannot be supported. The article makes the forfeiture itself the starting point; there is nothing in it about the lessor's knowledge. Nevertheless the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the suits are not barred seems to be correct, because the forfeitures relied on in the various cases were all within 12 years from the dates of the suits. The fact that there were previous alienations which the landlord could have, but did not take advantage of is not material, as the Munsif seems to have considered, for it was open to him to waive such forfeitures: see Parmeshri v. Vittappa Shanbaga (7), already cited. He must be taken to have waived such forfeiture as he has not relied on them. The question whether any particular transferee has obtained by adverse possession for over 12 years an independent and separate Karamkari or Adimayavana right in the properties in his possession, which is not affected by forfeiture caused by others, has not been raised and argued and it cannot, therefore, be considered.

Finally it was argued as a special point in Second Appeal 1081 of 1917 that the terms of the demise sued on had not been proved. The terms were set out in the plaint and the contesting defendants in their written statements admitted the demise sued on. That being so, it was not necessary to prove those terms and we need not, therefore, consider whether Exhibit A was properly admitted in evidence or not and the special point taken fails.

In the result, I would call for findings on the following 2 issues, allowing fresh evidence on the first issue but on the evidence on record on the 2nd issue.

1. Are Karamkari and Adimayavana tenures inalienable by custom in South Malabar and is the Jenmi entitled to forfeit them on alienation?

2. Has the forfeiture relied on by the plaintiff in any of the five suits been waived?

Findings in 3 months, objections 10 days.

AYLING, J.—I was content in Venkatagiri Pattar v. Manavikrama (9) to follow earlier authority as to the incidents attached to Adimayavana tenure: but in the light of the more elaborate argument now addressed to us, and in view of my learned brother's expression of opinion, I agree to call for findings on the issues proposed by him while reserving any expression of opinion.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Subordinate Judge of Palghat submitted the following

FINDINGS.—In these appeals findings are called for on the following issues:—

(1) Are the Karamkari and Adimayavana tenures inalienable by custom in South Malabar and is the Jenmi entitled to forfeit them on alienation?

(2) Has the forfeiture relied on by the plaintiff in any of the five suits been waived?

2. Additional evidence has been permitted to be adduced on the first issue. The second issue is to be decided on the evidence already on record. I shall deal with the second issue first. The subject of waiver depends on the facts of each case and the finding being one of fact, as has been held in Osman Shaha v. Mahomed Amar Sirkar (17) by the Calcutta High Court and by the Bombay High Court in Sakharam v. Sadashiv Balshet Lodha (18) as also by the Madras High Court in Karunakaran Nair v. Krishna Menon (19), my conclusion, if accepted, may obviate the necessity for making the decision of all the appeals turn on the larger question of custom.

3. The District Munsif has come to the conclusion in all the five suits that the plaintiff must be deemed to have waived any forfeiture of the respective tenures that may have been incurred by the several alienations in question. He regards the payments of Michavaram or revenue by the assignees as having been made with the knowledge of or with notice to the Jenmi and that as such acts were allowed to continue, an inference of waiver arises.

4. I have gone through the evidence in the light of the arguments advanced at the Bar and I am in substantial agreement with the District Munsif as regards four out of the five cases. In the fifth, viz., Original Suit No. 371 of 1914, all that appears is that the transferee made payments towards the revenue on a few occasions (vide Exhibit XIV series). As regards these, as the payments were made to the Adhikari direct and there is no evidence connecting the Jenmi with such payments and it being admitted that the revenue was payable by the tenant himself direct, it appears to me that it would not be proper to impute knowledge of the payments to the plaintiff. The District Munsif relies for his finding in Original Suit No. 371 of 1914 on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Sadai Naik v. Serai Naik (20). But a perusal of the report shows that the facts there are entirely different. The ruling, therefore, is easily distinguishable.

5. With regard to the other four cases, I do not think the question presents much difficulty. In all these suits the transferees have been paying Michavaram direct to the Jenmi's agents under circumstances which in my opinion make it legitimate to conclude that the agents must have known the right under which payments were made. Exhibits VI series and Exhibits XXXIX (b)—XXXIX (c) in Original Suit No. 437, Exhibit IX series, XVIII series and XIX in Original Suit No. 472, Exhibits V series in Original Suit No. 353, Exhibits IV and IV (a) in Original Suit No. 370 are the receipts showing the payments and they support the defendants. In these the registered tenant's name is shown and so also is the name of the person making the payment. That being so, even taking the receipts as they are, I think it is not easy to believe that the plaintiff's agents who granted them would have been unaware of the character of the persons dealing with them.

6. It was conceded that the plaintiff has got agents acting on his behalf in each locality whose business is to make collections, to note arrears, and generally to attend to the rent roll for that area. I think it cannot be seriously contended that these agents would not be personally acquainted with the several occupiers of the lands belonging to their employer or of the nature of their rights. All the probabilities are in favour of so holding.

7. To take one instance, the receipts in Original Suit No. 472 make it clear to my mind that the agents' eyes must have been opened to the nature of the payments made. The defendants Nos. 21—23 who are the assignees under Exhibits XVI and XVII make the payments in question, their documents providing for a particular apportionment of the Michavaram due. These directions have been followed, with the result that for one and the same Jama two sets of payments have been made and two different sets of receipts obtained. Then there is Exhibit V (e), a deposition of the plaintiff's then agent, which taken with Exhibits V—V (d) points to the same conclusion. Exhibit IV (a) is another document which goes to strengthen the view. The assignee in Original Suit No. 370 has paid to the Jenmi's agent revenue which had been paid by the Jenmi himself in the first instance. All these payments must surely have put the plaintiff's agents on enquiry even if they had not already been acquainted with the facts, and the result of such an enquiry could not have failed to elicit that the persons making the several payments were holding the lands as alienees.

8. The defendants' Vakil contended that the principles as to waiver enunciated in section 112 of the Transfer of Propery Act apply. The position taken up by Mr. P. A. Krishna Menon, who argued the question of waiver for the plaintiff, was that the tenures here being excepted from the rules of the Transfer of Property Act by reasen of section 117 of the Act, the point raised by the defendants must be decided on general principles of estoppel and that there is no evidence that the Jenmi did anything to induce the defendants to change their position to their detriment. A subsidiary argument was that even if section 112 applied, it must be shown that the plaintiff had actual knowledge that a forfeiture had been incurred and that he deliberately gave up his rights by accepting rent. It is true that section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act does not in terms cover these cases. But there is a roll of cases in the Madras High Court in connection with leases not falling within the Act, in which it has been held that the principles enacted by the Legislature in Chapter V are equally worthy of application to other classes of leases as such principles are founded upon justice, equity and good conscience. See Parameshri v. Vittappa Shanbaga (7), Vadapalli Narasimham v. Dronamraju Seetharamamurthy (21), Vasudevan Nambudripad v. Valia Chathu Achan (22), Gangamma v. Bommayka (23), Kullappa Goundan v. Abdul Rahim (24), Krishna Shetti v. Gilbert Pinto (25), Kandasami Pillai v. Ramasami Mannadi (26), per Abdur Rahim, J.

9. The real point in the arguments for the plaintiff is whether he was affected with knowledge of the forfeiture when he accepted rent. Dr Gour in his Law of Transfer in British India (Volume III, section 2723) says that the acceptance of rent by the landlord from an occupier of land, ordinarily, raises the presumption that the occupier will thenceforward be treated as a tenant of the land in respect of which he has accepted the rent and hence that where on forfeiture being incurred the landlord accepts rent, it is evidence of waiver of the forfeiture. He then goes on to point out that acceptance of rent, even under protest or subject to a qualification, is no less an acceptance and would operate as a waiver and he cites in support of his proposition Kali Krishna Togore v Fuzle Ali (27), which follows an English case of Davenport v. Reg. (28). See also Modhu Sudan Singh v. Rooke (29). I also find that in Madavan v. Athi Nangiyar (30) the fact that rent was accepted for several years after the alleged alienation in that case was regarded as precluding the landlord from enforcing the forfeiture set up by him.

10. The really important question is, therefore, whether the plaintiff accepted rent after he knew or ought to have known that forfeiture had occurred. Here, again, the plaintiff's Vakil relied on certain observations in Mookerji's book on Ejectment that there must be proof of actual knowledge. But as pointed out by their Lordships in the remanding order, "knowledge may be inferred from circumstances, and it is not necessary to have direct evidence of it always." The circumstances here show that the plaintiff's agents must have had knowledge of the claims of the alienee-defendants when the rent payments were accepted. And this leads to the further question whether such knowledge should not be deemed to be that of the principal under section 229 of the Contract Act.

11. In this connection the account books maintained by the plaintiff and which were called for by the defendants become important. As mentioned by the District Munsif, these books were not produced in proper time. I do not appreciate the argument that the plaintiff could not get at the accounts owing to confusion of records. That the Estate has been using printed forms of a certain kind and has been maintaining account books at the several centres of collection go a long way in raising a presumption that the Estate affairs were being conducted on a regular and systematic basis. It should not at all have been difficult, in my opinion, for the Estate Collector to have got at the account books and placed them before the Court. However this may be, the fact remains that the account books of the plaintiff have not been put in evidence. The plaintiff's Vakil urged that no adverse inference should be drawn from their non-production because the entries in the accounts would merely be a duplication of those to be found in the receipts produced by the defendants. I do not think so. So far as the fact of the actual payments go, it may doubtless be the case that the account entries will be similar to the entries in the receipts. But the value of the account books as evidence in connection with the question under consideration does not rest on the entries alone. All account books (especially the ledgers) will contain headings showing particulars with respect to the entries that follow under such headings. The headings may, therefore, be expected to throw light on the question of the Jama or of any lesser interest under the Jama or the transfer of the Jama interest to a third party. I concur with the District Munsif in thinking that the absence of the account books is not without its significance.

12. I shall briefly review the evidence on this point. The documentary evidence has been referred to in paragraph 5. At the trial held in this Court, one of the witnesses for the defendants (1 th defendant in Original Suit No. 437) swears that he directly informed the plaintiff's agent of the fact of the alienation in his favour, and I am inclined to think that he has spoken the truth on this matter. The 3th witness for the defence swears that the Jenmi knew of his rights. So says the 11th witness, Erat Govindan Nair, who actually produced his document and gave evidence in a suit between the Zamorin and the Kuthiravattath Nair. Similarly, the defendants' 5th witness in Original Suit No. 371 deposes that the plaintiff's local Kariastans are fully aware of assignments taken by the tenants. Then there is the admission of plaintiff's own 1st witness in Original Suit No. 370 that Karamkari lands are assigned and that the assignees pay rents. This shows that plaintiff's men are aware of the fact that rents are being paid by alienees of such tenures. Lastly, there is a piece of evidence which cannot be ignored or met by the plaintiff. The defendants' 4th witness in Original Suit No. 353 swears that plaintiff sued for 3 years' Michavaram and obtained a decree against the assignee under Exhibit XVIII, though the assignee had got no renewal. This concludes Original Suit No. 353 and is cogent evidence for the other suits. No effort has been made on the plaintiff's side to meet this body of evidence.

13. I have little doubt but that the plaintiff's agents must certainly have known of the character in which the alienees made the payments. Being residents of the locality, they must at least have known that the lands were occupied by persons other than members of the grantees' families and such possession I consider, under the circumstances, to affect the agents with constructive, if not actual, notice of the occupiers' rights. Such notice would be notice to the principals also. In Pollock and Mulla's commentary on the Contract Act the following observations will be found :—"Now an agent's constructive as well as his actual notice may be imputed to the principal in any transaction where constructive notice has to be considered at all. On the whole, then, a man may have notice either by himself or by his agent, and that notice may be either actual or (in an appropriate case) constructive."

14. My finding on the 2nd issue is that the plaintiff must be deemed to have waived the forfeiture, if any, in respect of the alienations in the four suits other than Original Suit No. 371 of 1914 and that as regards this latter suit a negative conclusion must be recorded.

15. As a result of the above finding the question of custom raised by the 1st issue calls for answer only in respect of one of the cases, viz. Original Suit No. 371 of 1914. But in view of the remand order and the fact that the supplementary evidence taken in this Court has been, by consent of parties, admitted in Original Suit No. 437 of 1914, I proceed to consider the subject with reference to the evidence in all the cases as a whole.

16. Subsequent to the remand, eleven new witnesses were called and examined by the plaintiff. The defendants on their side recalled their 5th witness in Original Suit No. 437 and their 10th witness in Original Suit No. 353 and examined them with reference to the first issue. In addition to these, six fresh witnesses were also put into the witness-box by them. The additional documentary evidence for the plaintiff comprises Exhibits K—ZZZZ, while the defendants have produced Exhibits XLIII—CLI. Acting on the suggestion contained in the remand order regarding Court witnesses, summonses were issued to five persons who by reason of their position and knowledge of the District were considered to be likely to throw light on the subject of the enquiry. These were: (1) Mr. K. C. Manavedan Raja, retired District Judge; (2) Mr. K. Imbichunni Nair, who acted as District Judge of South Malabar before he retired from service; (3) Mr. V. Kelu Eradi, who was District Munsif and Subordinate Judge in the British service and was latterly the Chief Justice of the Cochin State before he retired and whose total service of about 20 years (minus some months) was spent in Malabar; (4) Mr. P. Karunakara Menon, a pensioned Deputy Collector; (5) Mr. V. Karunakara Menon, a respectable Vakil of the Calicut Bar. Of these, Mr. Manavedan Raja was unable to give evidence owing to ill health and besides, he also intimated that by reason of his service having been outside Malabar his testimony could not prove of value. Mr. P. Karunakara Menon also, who lives at Mahe, could not attend on account of illness. The other three gentlemen have given evidence in the case.

17. Before analysing the nature of the evidence on both sides, it is necessary to advert to certain arguments advanced on behalf of the plaintiff. Mr. Kalianakrishna

Ayyar, the learned Vakil for the plaintiff who argued the question relating to custom with great acumen and ability, contended in the first place that even although the onus has been cast on his client to establish that Karamkari and Adimayavana tenures are inalienable by custom, such burden must be deemed to have shifted on to the defendants by reason of certain considerations which he proceeded to elaborate. In view of the reservation of opinion by his Lordship Mr. Justice Ayling, Mr. Kalianakrishna Iyer was anxious that his arguments should be noticed by me as the plaintiff's legal advisers intend to press the point, notwithstanding the remand proceedings, when these appeals come up again before the High Court for final decision.

18. The arguments covered a very wide field of property law, involving a survey of feudal tenures both in the east and the west, and the citations included a large number of books among which may be mentioned Blackstone's Commentaries and Sir Henry Sumner Maine's works on Ancient Law and Custom. The gist of the arguments amounted to this, that the tenures under consideration, like some others, were of ancient origin, having their roots in the system of military and feudal services then obtaining in the Kerala country, which included the present District of Malabar as well as the Hindu Kingdoms of Cochin and Travancore. Then by reference to books like Logan's Manual of the Malabar District, Sundararaja Ayyangar's Land Tenures in the Madras Presidency, etc., Mr. Kalianakrishna Ayyar sought to prove that all such grants were due to the personal relations that subsisted between the grantor and the grantee and that the system of reversion to the grantor was equally prevalent in Malabar as in Europe during the feudal ages. From these premises the statements of the legal incidents attaching to these tenures contained in the Sudder Court Proceedings of 1856 were sought to be fortified with special reference to Sir Charles Turner's well-known Minute on Malabar Land Tenures; the Cochin State Manual (page 502): and the Manual of the Travancore State (page 332).

19. If the point had not been concluded for present purposes by the views expressed by his Lordship Mr. Justice Krishnan, I should say that the arguments of the plaintiff's Vakil would go a great way in inclining me to hold that as a matter of law and custom of the district (and apart from the evidence in this case) these tenures are inalienable. A perusal of the works referred to by Mr. Kalianakrishna Ayyar deepens one's former ideas of the authoritative nature of the definitions contained in the Sudder Court's Proceedings of 1856. In Moore's Malabar Law and Custom an extract alone is given. But the Minute of Sir Charles Turner gives the whole history of the matter (vide Appendices XV and XVI). With regard to the value to be attached to the definitions of these tenures by the Sadr Adalat, I append below the opinion held of it by that eminent Judge: "It can hardly be said that the Court spared any effort to obtain accurate information respecting the existing custom." (Sir Charles Turner's Minute, Chapter I, paragraph 21.)

20. With regard to Græme's Glossary, the plaintiff's Vakil pointed out that the circumstances under which the Glossary came to be compiled cannot be traced and that it must be presumed that the Glossary, being the production of a revenue official, should be taken to have been prepared mostly to supply information useful from a revenue point of view and that it cannot be expected to have been drawn up with an eye to the requirements of a Court of Law. A further criticism was directed against the Glossary on the ground that Logan's Manual contains observations showing that Mr. Graeme's enquiries as Special Commissioner must have been of an imperfect nature. Against these infirmities of the Glossary was contrasted the careful and elaborate judicial procedure adopted by the Sadr Adalat before drawing up its Circular Proceedings. Again, according to the plaintiff's Vakil, Graeme's Glossary must have been prepared not later than 1823, whereas the Sadr Court's enquiry took place 30 years later and being more recent, as well as conducted with a view to judicial requirements, its authority over the Glossary is manifestly indisputable. It was further pointed out that considering that the Sadr Adalat was induced to take action at the instance of the Board of Revenue when every one must have been well-acquainted with the Glossary, it must have been recognized that the Glossary was either imperfect or did not correctly describe the incidents of the several tenures and that it was necessary to pass agrarian legislation on correct materials ascertained from authentic records and that the Sadr Court Circular was the result and, as such, it has superseded Graeme's Glossary in respect of the matters dealt with by the Sadr Adalat.

21. Lastly, it was argued that even taking the language of Graeme's Glossary as it is, the statement that the tenant can only exercise a right of enjoyment, and that the land reverts to the grantor on extinction of the grantee's family, raises by necessary implication the proposition that anything done by the grantee to defeat the right of reversion, such as by way of alienation, will be repugnant to the grant and will be a fraud on the reversion which Courts ought not to allow. Mr. Kalianakrishna Ayyar's position was that if such grants are determinable by extinction of the grantee's family, how is the grantor's right of reversion to be protected if the grantee or his heirs can alienate the property and the alienee is to do the same, and so on, and thus create a perpetual succession by successive alienations ?

22. I turn to the evidence relating to the matter of alienability and forfeiture raised by the 1st issue. So far as the present cases are concerned, I think the result cannot admit of much doubt. The title-deeds in all five suits, it is conceded, contain no covenant against alienation. The plaintiff further concedes that he rests his case of forfeiture on the customary law of the District. The law requires that the essentials recognised by it as constituting a valid custom have to be proved. It must be shown that the rule of inalienability has been uniformly and consciously observed as a rule of conduct by the people of the District from ancient times down to this day. As defined pithily in Superunddhwaja Prasad v. Garuradhwaja Prasad (32), the series of acts by which a custom is to be established, besides being ancient and certain, must also be plural, uniform and constant. None of these factors can be claimed for the plaintiff on a consideration of the evidence adduced on his behalf. On the other hand, there are numerous documents exhibited by the defendants which prove clearly that in regard to the tenants of this particular Cherikal there have been a very large number of alienations of properties held on these special tenures both by way of outright transfers and by way of possessory mortgages. In several of these cases it is shown that the Jenmi, instead of enforcing his right to forfeit the tenure, granted renewals on practically the same terms as before. These documents are too voluminous for detailed reference, but their tenor, as I have stated, has not been denied at the Bar. Thus, if the evidence in this case shows anything at all, it is that the features of plurality, uniformity and constancy are present not in favour of the alleged custom but in proof of the violation of it.

23. Mr. Kalianakrishna Ayyar prefaced his treatment of the evidence by the observation that the grants in these cases being very old, they have to be construed not according to modern notions of property but by what was regarded in those times to be the rights of the parties. This proposition is incontrovertible and is supported by the decisions cited by him. Sreemutty Rabutty Dossee v. Sibchunder Mullick (32) and Nemai Chandra Bose v. Mahomed Bassir (33). But in its application to the present body of evidence the argument is open to criticism. It is merely begging the question to ask that a particular construction be put upon ancient documents, when the documents contain no intrinsic indications to that effect and when such a construction is itself a matter to be proved by the party. The contention will no doubt be valid, if the law in the sense laid down by the Sadr Court Proceedings were to be accepted and made the basis of enquiry. But the issue being what it is, the plaintiff cannot evade the task of affirmatively establishing by numerous uniform and convincing instances that the tenures are inalienable by custom. Durga Charan Mahto v. Raghunath Mahto (34).

24. The next part of the argument was that the evidence, such as it is, is sufficient to prove the custom contended for by the plaintiff. The documents have been grouped by the plaintiff's Vakil under three classes. Under the 1st class come Exhibit V in Original Suit No. 370, Exhibit XI in Original Suit No. 472, Exhibits XV (d), XVIII, XVI, XIX and XIX (a) in Original Suit No. 353, Exhibits XXIX, XXX, XXXI, XXXII, XXXVII (a), XXXVIII, XXXVIII (a), XL, LXIV, XCIII, CII, CIX, CX, CX II, CXIV, CXV, CXXII, CXXIV, and CXXXI in Original Suit No. 437. These, it is argued, evidence the consciousness of the several alienees that the Jenmi's consent is required to render their documents valid. Under the 2nd division come such documents as Exhibits X (b), XI, XII, XII (a), XIII (b) and XIV in Original Suit No. 353, Exhibits V, IX and XIII in Original Suit No. 371, Exhibits XXXIV, XXXVIII (e), XL (b), XLI, LXXX X, CXIII, CXV, CXXX. Q, DD, HH, JJ, CC, BB, MM, UU, VV, WW, XX, YY, ZZ, AAA, EEE ——SSSS in Original Suit No. 437, Exhibits I and II in Original Suit No. 370. These are said to be instances of assignees going to the Jenmi for confirmation of their title. In the third category are placed documents like Exhibits K, L, M, N, O, P, R, S, T, U, W, Y, Z, AA, EE, FF, JJ, KK, NN ——SS, WWWW, XXXX, YYYY, and ZZZZ. This last set of documents has been relied on as showing instances in which forfeiture has been enforced.

25. The first two classes of documents can be dealt with in a few words.

26. The assignment deeds, which are said to indicate the consciousness of the parties to them that the Jenmi's consent was material, do not, when examined, bear out the claim made for them. All that these documents say is that the assignor has no objection to the assignee obtaining a renewal from the Jenmi. This provision is evidently meant for the convenience of the assignee and cannot, I think, be viewed as importing a condition into the transaction that it was obligatory on the assignee to secure the Jenmi's consent. That the view presented on behalf of the plaintiff is not correct will be seen from the admitted fact that in a great many cases of alienation the alienees have been enjoying the lands for long periods without attorning to the Jenmi or obtaining a renewal. It will suffice to refer to the evidence of the defendants' witnesses Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 in regard to Exhibits XLIV, XLIX, LI, LIII, LIV, LVI, LVIII and LXX.

27. With regard to the second class of documents it appears to me the inference from them is precisely the opposite of that contended for by Mr. Kalianakrishna Ayyar. It is singular that in these cases the Jenmi should have been content to recognise the assignment and grant renewals on more or less the same terms as of old. Not only so but in almost all instances the old tenure is continued 'as before.' This conduct on the part of the Jenmi is remarkable. If the custom set up exists at the present day, the Jenmi would have been only too eager to seize the opportunity afforded by the alienation and resume the property by enforcing the forfeiture. Such a course would have profited him immensely. But what he is found doing is to put the assignees in the shoes of the original grantees. There is evidence that some amount is paid as consideration for the renewal, but even so the Jemmi would be a heavy loser. Human nature being what it is, it is impossible to think that the Jenmi would have acted in such a way if he was sure that he could invoke a custom of inalienability.

28. One pertinent question suggests itself. According to the plaintiff the tenures in question are inalienable by the grantees' families. The moment the property is transferred, the tenure comes to an end and it reverts to the Jenmi. Assuming that the plaintiff's Vakil is right in his contention that the renewals before the Court are all cases where the Jenmi had condoned the alienation and consented to recognise the alienee, the explanation does not meet the necessities of the situation. One may well understand a landlord waiving a forfeiture or two. But the instances here are too numerous for that. Even if the argument based on consent is sound, it might be expected that in the renewal deeds at least the Jenmi would have taken care to insert an express prohibition against any future alienation of the tenure. As a matter of fact, one of the plaintiff's own witnesses (Mr. Koru Nair, a Vakil of Ootapalam) states that in most of the documents creating Anubhavom and Karamkari that he had come across there was an express provision prohibiting alienation. There should have been no difficulty whatever for the Jenmi to have introduced a covenant against alienation in all cases of renewals by him to the assigneess whose rights he thought fit to acknowledge. Exhibits DD and QQQQ contain stipulations providing for forfeiture and surrender of the property on default by the tenant to pay Purapad and Government revenue. Mr. L. A. Subrama Ayyar for the defendants very properly asks, why should not the Jenmi have covenanted in all his documents similary in respect of alienations by the tenant? Mr. Kalianakrishna Ayyar's answer that it was unnecessary to do so, because the rule of non-transferability was so well understood that it was needless to make it an express term of the contract between the parties again begs the question.

29. The documents relied on as evidencing the enforcement of the forfeiture of the tenure on account of alienation do not sustain a close scrutiny. These documents relate to properties held by the Guruvayur Devaswom, the Kavalappara Estate, Kuthiravattam House, the plaintiff's Estate, Thiruvilwamala Devaswom, Thriprayar Devaswom and Thiruvanchikulam Devaswom.

30. Guruvayur Devaswom.—The documents are Exhibits K, L, M, N, O, P and UUUU. Of these Exhibits N relates to lands granted for future service. Naturally its transfer by the grantee made it resumable, a point admitted on all hands. With regard to the remaining documents, the assignees appear to have held other lands also under the same Jenmi and the fear of losing them was doubtless the inducement for their consenting to hold the land in question under a different right. At any rate it is not clear in regard to these latter documents whether they were of the same character as Exhibit N and if not, what were the circumstances under which the assignees executed them. The plaintiff's 2nd witness Mr. Konthi Menon (although he swears that alienations of Adimayavana and Karamkari tenures are invalid) is made to admit that the Devaswom itself has taken two assignments of possessory mortgages in regard to two different properties held on Santhathi Brahmaswom tenure which, as the evidence shows, is regarded as indistinguishable from the other tenures as regards the particular question under consideration. Exhibits O and P were taken after the present dispute arose.

31. Kavalappara Estate.—Exhibits R, T, U, W and AA represent transactions relating to the lands in this estate. None of these documents deals with Karamkari and Adimayavana property. The executants of Exhibits R and T were in possession of some other properties and evidently with a view to retain these they executed the above documents. As regards Exhibit W, the executant got a new right in exchange for the right given by his assignment. Exhibit U was executed by a Panayom holder after the mortgagor's Tarwad had become extinct. As regards Exhibit AA the executant was a retainer of the Kavalappara Estate and would naturally have done whatever his master wanted him to do.

32. Kuthiravattam documents.—These are Exhibits EE, FF, JJ, KK. These are Pravarthi (service) Anubhavom documents and, according to all the authorities, as well as the admissions on both sides, such tenures are inalienable. These documents throw no light on the subject under discussion.

33. The Zamorin's Estate.—The documents said to evidence instances of forfeiture are Exhibits NN—QQ, SS and TT. Of these Exhibit NN was taken in 1918 and Exhibits OO and SS as late as January and February of this year. As such, I do not think any value can be attached to these even if they are not distinguishable otherwise. Exhibit TT represents the result of a compromise in a suit (vide Exhibit XLVIII) and is of no evidentiary value. Shimbhu Nath v. Gayan Chand (35). The other documents show that the lands were held for performance of future services.

34. Thiruvilwamala Devaswom.—The only document connected with the Devaswom is Exhibit WWWW. It recites that the executant had obtained an assignment of Anubhavom right in regard to the land and he executes a Verumpattam lease. The Anubhavom might only have been of rent and not of the land itself and, if so, there is nothing significant in the transferee executing a lease. The original grant has not been produced.

(35) 16 A. 379; A. W. N. (1894) 123.

35. Thriprayar Devaswom.—The document relied on is Exhibit XXXX; but it came into existence only in 1917.

36. Thiruvanchikulam Devaswom.—Exhibits YYYY and ZZZZ which are relied on are also long after the suit. It is curious that Exhibit YYYY is the one solitary instance among all the documents which expressly mentions forfeiture on account of alienation. It is inexplicable why the same thing was not done in all the earlier documents of a similar nature.

37. Speaking generally, of the documents referred to as supporting the plaintiff's case, many of them are Anubhavom grants of a portion of the rent and not of the land itself. It is clear that in such cases the assignees would readily resort to the Jenmi for renewals. See Vythilingam Pillay v. Kuthiravattath Nair (36), Puthur Tarwad Karnavan v. Muthiyallur Kumaran Karichan (37). Other documents again are grants for services to be rendered and as such are non-transferable. Here also the transferees would be anxious to obtain the Jenmi's consent. Instances of the former are Exhibits Q, DD, EE, FF, GG, HH, JJ, KK, LL, XX, YY, ZZZ, HHHH, MMMM—QQQQ. As examples of the second class may be mentioned Exhibits N, PP, QQ. Another batch of documents are subsequent to this litigation and as such possess little or no value on the principle indicated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ekradeshwar Singh v. Janeshwari Bahuasin (38). Such recent documents are Exhibits O, P, Q, GG, MM, NN, OO, SS, HHHH, XXXX, YYYY, ZZZZ.

38. The respondents' Vakil has called my attention to some documents which are damaging to the plaintiff's case. Of these the most prominent are Exhibits LXXXIX, CCC, XXXVIII, XXXVIII (a), XXXVIII (e), XII, I—V, XXVIII, VI series.

39. Exhibit LXXXIX is an assignment of Karamkari rights and it contains an express condition that the assignee can sell or alienate the property at his pleasure. Exhibit CCC is the renewal granted by the Zamorin in regard to the above assignment as well as another evidenced by Exhibit XCV. The Jenmi must be held to have had knowledge of the terms of Exhibit LXXXIX when he granted the renewal, as Exhibit CCC specifically refers to Exhibit LXXXIX by its registration number. Similarly Exhibits XXXVIII and XXXVIII (a) are two successive assignments in which the assignee is empowered to deal with the land as he pleases. The assignee's right is recognised by the Jenmi under Exhibit XXXVIII (e). These documents show that there have been instances where the original grantees' heirs have transferred the property purporting to confer an absolute interest in the assignees and nevertheless the Jenmi has granted renewals without a murmur.

40. Exhibit XII is a partition deed in the family of one of the grantees. Paragraph 39 of the document expressly states that each sharer could sell and alienate his share at his pleasure. In pursuance of this the sharers subsequently made alienations to strangers (vide Exhibits I—V and XXVIII). The assignees have paid Michavaram to the Jenmi as appears from Exhibit VI series. Now in his plaint (in Original Suit No. 437) the plaintiff admits the receipt of Michavaram up to 1088. Exhibit XII was in 1089. The probabilities, I think, point to the Jenmi's knowledge through his agents of the nature of the rights held by the assignees who paid the Michavaram. It was argued that Exhibit XII was among the members of the same family. But this argument has been forgotten when referring to renewals granted in some cases to divided members of the same family, as to which the contention was that the transactions indicated the consciousness that a partition of Adimayavana and Karamkari property even in the grantee's family was invalid and required the Jenmi's consent.

41. Summarising the documentary evidence, I find a certain number of documents which render the plaintiff's case

(36) 29 M. 501; 16 M. L. J. 359; 1 M. L. T. 290.
(37) 43 Ind. Cas. 379.
(38) 25 Ind. Cas. 417; 42 C. 582; 18 C. W. N. 1249; 21 C. L. J. 9; 27 M. L. J. 373; (1914) M. W. N. 807; 16 M. L. T. 382; 1 L. W. 863; 12 A. L. J. 1217; 41 I. A. 275; 17 Bom. L. R. 18 (P. C.).

arguable but which are at the best of an inconclusive character. On the other hand, the defendants have produced numerous documents going to show that the custom, if it existed, has become lax. There are more than ninety assignments, exclusive of five sales in Court auction. Of these, in more than eighty documents the assignor empowers the assignee to deal with the property absolutely. Then there are about sixty other documents in the nature of mortgages, which are nonetheless alienations. That in Malabar a mortgage with possession is considered to be an alienation will be seen from the common phrase 'Vaikathayum Vilkathayum' found in all documents where the object is to prevent the transferee or lessee dealing with the property by way of sale or mortgage. Then again there are some documents in which the Jenmi covenants for a charge on the land in respect of arrears of rent. If his object had been to forfeit the holding for non-payment of rent, he would have covenanted for a right of re entry. The fact that he takes a charge shows that the tenant is regarded as having a saleable interest in the tenures.

42. Thus it is seen that the instances relied on by the plaintiff, far from proving the custom of non-transferability, show on the contrary the practice of numerous alienations, many of which were either winked at or acknowledged by the Jenmi. The latter's conduct also in connection with these transactions has been such as to throw serious doubt on the notion of a continuing custom at the present day so far as the Manhallur Cherikkal is concerned.

43. The oral evidence does not add very much to what can be gathered from the books. One thing, however, is established by it and that is that the legal distinctions deducible from the definitions given in Graeme's Glossary and the Sadr Court's Proceedings seem to have got blurred. The witnesses speak with one voice that as regards their legal incidents the several tenures known as Adimayavana, Karamkari, Anubhavom, and Santhathi Brahmaswam are identical in their nature. Strangely enough, some of the documents also indicate the obliteration of all distinctions. Exhibits V and CXXX refer to the respective lands as held on 'Karamkari—Adimayavana—Anubhavom' right. Exhibits XVI, XIX (a), XXXII, XXXIII, LXIV, XCIII, CII, CXIII, refer to 'Adimayavana—Anubhavom' right. Exhibit XIV is even stronger. It shows that an Adimayavana grant of 1065 was regranted to a Brahmin as Santhathi Brahmaswom but with no alteration of incidents. This practice will be seen also from Mana Vikraman v. Sundaran Pattar (39).

44. Turning to the witnesses, several of those on the defendants' side make the statement that the tenures are transferable and that such transfers are admitted by the Jenmi. The documents produced by them support their allegation more or less.

45. Of the witnesses examined in this Court after the remand, Mr. Konthi Menon, a pensioned Sub-Magistrate (plaintiff's 2nd witness), and plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 7, 11 and 12 who are Vakils and the three witnsses examined specially by the Court deserve notice.

46. The plaintiff's 7th witness Mr. K. S. Venkiteswara Ayyar of the Palghat Bar speaks to having taken an assignment and then executed the document Exhibit BB, giving up his right under the assignment as the Jenmi demanded surrender of the land on the ground of forfeiture. This witness' testimony shows—what indeed is the impression produced on my mind by the evidence of the others—that the question whether alienation of these special tenures is valid or not is considered to be unsettled even by lawyers. So far as Exhibit BB is concerned, it is enough to say that the Vakil's executing it is not of value one way or the other, as it was the result of negotiation and settlement between him and the Jenmi through the mediation of Mr. Kalianakrishna Ayyar.

47. The other witnesses make statements regarding the legal incidents of the several tenures. But on being pressed, their knowledge is shown to be virtually derived from the books on Malabar Law and Custom by Messrs. Wigram & Moore and Ramachandra Ayyar. When the opinion of a person on a disputed question of custom is expressed, its value, I need hardly point out, entirely depends on the number of instances which have come directly under his observation. See Bai Baiji v Bai Santok (40). Tested by this principle, I cannot say that any of the witnesses whose education and status qualify them to be trained observers has been in a position to obtain knowledge at first hand. Further, their statements are somewhat discrepant with regard to the incidents of the tenures spoken to by them and cannot be easily harmonized.

48. Mr. Konthi Menon, examined as the plaintiff's 2nd witness, states that the tenures called Karamkari, Adimayavana and Santhathi Brahmaswom are inalienable and that he knows of some instances of such invalid transactions. He adds that the same tenure is variously called by the above names according to the locality and the grantee's caste. But he admits in cross-examination that his experience is confined to documents relating to Anubhavom tenures. Now, as there are two kinds of Anubhavom one of which, that for future service, is inalienable, I do not think Mr. Konthi Menon's evidence goes to elucidate the question at issue, especially as he admits that he cannot recall any document in which the tenure is described as Karamkari or Adimayavana.

49. The plaintiff's 11th witness is a Vakil. He states that he was practising before at Walluvanad and Ponnani and that in all he has 37 years' experience. According to him Adimayavana tenure cannot be alienated and is forfeitable on transfer, and that with regard to Anubhavom and Karamkari tenures the question will depend on the conditions of the grant and that in the absence of an express prohibition against alienation nothing short of denial of the landlord's title will entail forfeiture. The same witness says that he has seen cases of alienations of Adimayavana rights in which the Jenmis have successfully enforced the forfeiture by suits and that he himself has conducted such suits and got the properties surrendered both in the Ottapalam and the Ponnani Munsif's Courts. But the effect of all this is destroyed by the admission that those cases related to 'Pravarthi' or service tenures, the documents in which did not contain the term Adimayavana. Further, he also admits that Adimayavana is practically confined to the Palghat Taluk and that he has very little acquaintance with that Taluk.

50. Mr. T. V. Venkiteswara Ayyar, the plaintiff's 12th witness, has been a practising Vakil for the last forty years and states his opinion that the incidents of Adimayavana, Karamkari and Santhathi Brahmaswom tenures is the same. He mentions his 'impression' that these are inalienable and that the statements made about them in the books are correct. But in his long experience he has not come across a single case of a suit by the Jenmi on account of any such alienation.

51. Mr. Imbichunni Nair states that his knowledge of the tenures is derived from published books and from his personal knowledge of a single case in his own family. As to the latter, it was a case that arose in North Malabar, where admittedly the incidents are different. Moreover the terms denoting the several tenures as used in South Malabar, do not obtain in North Malabar, where the word 'Saswatom' is used for all such grants. In his opinion Karamkari and Anubhavom are both of two kinds, one partaking of the nature of an ordinary permanent lease on favourable terms and the other in consideration of future services. The former can be alienated but not the latter. As regards Adimayavana there can be no alienation. But as I have pointed out, the witness has no personal knowledge derived from any incidents in South Malabar.

52. Mr. Kelu Eradi gives only one instance drawn from personal knowledge, and that is not serviceable either way. In other respects his evidence is to the effect that nothing that has occurred in all these years has made him think that the observations contained in the Sadr Court Proceedings or the Cochin Manual are not correct. His evidence is valuable in one respect. He states that he attaches great value to the statements in the books, as he knows that there were full and elaborate enquiries made about the customs and usages and that the result was sent to the Sadr Court "to be made," as he puts it, "a sort of law" by means of the Circular Proceedings.

53. The last witness is Mr. V. Karunakara Menon, a Vakil of the Calicut Bar, He also states that his information about these tenures is chiefly obtained from books such as Wigram and Moore's Malabar Law. On the question of alienability or otherwise of the tenures the witness can only recall one instance which was in his own family. But his evidence shows that there is a consciousness that such alienations are of doubtful validity.

(40) 20 B. 53.

54. There are only two cases of judicial sales of these tenures. The first is Exhibit XLIII, which is a sale certificate of 1882 in respect of Karamkari land. The second is Exhibit XLIX of the year 1884 in respect of Adimayavana. But the circumstances do not appear and it cannot be said on the materials on record that the Jenmi had notice of the sale.

55. Although the evidence produced in this case shows that during recent times no distinction appears to have been kept in view between the several tenures, their incidents as described in the Sadr Court's Proceedings indicate some points of difference. In regard to Adimayavana it is stated that where the land is bestowed as a mark of favour, it can never be resumed; but that where it is granted for remuneration for certain services to be performed, the non-performance of such services, involving the performance of them by others, will give the landlord power to recover the land. The body of the definition contemplates two kinds of Adimayavana grants, of which the second kind (which is a future service grant) is statedly resumable. But the other kind would appear to be alienable. The marginal note, however, is that the tenure is inalienable. The question of alienability would appear to have been decided in previous cases by reference to the marginal note. As regards Anubhavom grants the Sadr Court's definition expressly includes inalienability as one of the main features. As regards Karamkari the element of inalienability, as pointed out in Achuta Menon v. Sankaran (7), arises by necessary implication. It is rather curious that the description in the Sadr Court Proceedings should expressly mention inalienability in regard to Anubhavom tenures alone and indicate the fact only in the marginal note as regards Adimayavana, while leaving it to be inferred as regards Karamkari grants. Now, according to the settled rules of interpretation as laid down by the Judicial Committee in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Singh (41), marginal notes cannot be referred to in construing a section. [See also Aiyalam Kesava Chetty v. Secretary of State (42).] If, therefore, the definition of Adimayavana grant as given in the Sadr Court's Proceedings were to be treated like any ordinary Statute, the marginal note must be ignored and on the language of the definition itself it might be said that Adimayavana grants would be inalienable only as regards future service grants, but that the ordinary rule of transferability would apply to grants made as a mark of favour and which the landlord is said to be incapable of resuming. But I doubt if the principles of legal interpretation should be applied with strictness to the definitions in the Sadr Court's Proceedings which were obviously meant to afford to the Court's information as to the nature of the several grants. In this view I would regard the marginal note as part of the definition. This accords with the statement in Moore's Malabar Law (page 309) that these tenures appear to be inalienable and with the view adopted in Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (6).

56. On the best consideration I could bestow on a review of the oral and documentary evidence in the case and after referring to all the authorities dealing with the subject, my conclusions may be stated as follows:—

(1) That the custom of South Malabar; as it existed in 1856 in regard to the incidents of Karamkari and Adimayavana grants, is correctly stated in the Sadr Court's Proceedings.

(2) That by the custom of the district both tenures were inalienable and that alienation worked a forfeiture.

(3) That the custom must be taken to have continued up to 1896, up to which time there have not been sufficient instances to the contrary (vide section 114, Illustration (d), of the Evidence Act and Soorendronath Roy v. Heeramonee Burmoneah (43)].

That subsequent to 1896, in Manhalur Cherikal area there have been a number of instances of alienation, evidencing the growth of a usage which has effected a breach in the wall of custom and that so far as this Cherikal is concerned, one of the prime requisites of custom, viz., continuity and concordance, is not established in this case by the plaintiff.

57. The plaintiff's Vakil stated that he could have produced convincing evidence in proof of his case if he had had sufficient time and that he might be prejudiced if the High Court's decision went against him. As regards the question of time, the remand order gave the plaintiff a period of three months which ended on 3rd April. This was extended till the 20th idem on his application. The transfer of this Court from Calicut to Ottapalam on 1st March might have led to some inconvenience, but I cannot say that the plaintiff had not sufficient time to let in his evidence. He had no less than six weeks at his disposal in January and February and if he had been diligent enough to make the best use of the interval, I think he could have marshalled his evidence. Assuming, however, that his complaint is well-founded, I cannot see how any amount of further evidence on his part could redress the balance in the face of the great body of documentary evidence on the defendants' side. As regards the apprehension that the final decision in this case will be a bar in plaintiff's way in respect of other similar suits contemplated by him, I think his fears are groundless. This is the very first time that evidence as to custom in respect of these tenures has been called for, and the decision in this case will not finally settle the question of custom for, as observed in Thayoth Puthia Purayil Seethi v. Mangotill Ryrath Ummayya (44), one such decided case cannot be taken judicial notice of as concluding the issue as to custom. See also the observations of Channell, J., in Moult v. Halliday (45). The plaintiff, therefore, will have several more opportunities of fighting out the question.

58. My answer to the 1st issue is that with regard to Karamkari and Adimayavana tenures there was a custom of inalienability (involving forfeiture on alienation) up to 1896 and that since then there have been inroads into the custom so as to shake its continuity and uniformity and that the process is going on. On the 2nd issue my finding is in the affirmative as regards Original Suits Nos. 353, 370, 437 and 472 of 1914, and in the negative as regards Original Suit No. 371 of 1914.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing on 28th of November 1919, after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—We are now in possession of the findings of the Subordinate Judge on the two issues referred to him: and in the light of the recorded evidence, the Subordinate Judge's discussion of the same, and the arguments addressed to us both at this and the previous hearing, I have little difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that the plaintiff-appellant has failed to establish his right to resume the grants on alienation by the grantees.

The Subordinate Judge's finding is so cautiously worded as to be not altogether easy of interpretation. It runs thus:—"My answer to the 1st issue is that with regard to Karamkari and Adimayavana tenures there was a custom of inalienability (involving forfeiture on alienation) upto 1896 and that since then there have been inroads into the custom so as to shake its continuity and uniformity and that the process is going on. On the 2nd issue my finding is in the affirmative as regards Original Suits Nos. 353, 370 and 472 of 1914, and in the negative as regards Original Suit No. 371 of 1914."

Each party claims that the finding on the first issue is in effect a decision in its favour: but as it is on a question of mixed fact and law, and, therefore, not entirely binding on us, it is unnecessary to devote time to its interpretation—more particularly as I entirely agree in the Subordinate Judge's appreciation of the actual evidence adduced and his conclusion as to the facts established. For the last 20 years or so, for which period alone evidence is available, the balance is entirely against the plaintiff's contention. Out of the very large number of assignments by sale and mortgage by the grantees which are in evidence (vide paragraph 41 of the Subordinate Judge's finding), no instance is shown of resumption on alienation in case of the tenures with which we are concerned (Adimayavana and Karamkari): while on the other hand, there are many in which the alienations have been acknowledged by the Jenmi, and the tenure renewed in favour of the alienee. Exhibits 89 and 100 and Exhibits 38, 38-a and 38-E are particularly striking instances of this. The learned Counsel for appellants invited our attention to Exhibit 93 as indicating a consciousness on the part of the grantee that he could make no valid alienation without the grantor Jenmi's consent. But, in my opinion, nothing of the kind appears from a perusal of the document. The document purports to absolutely assign all the grantee's interest in the property and adds that the grantee has no objection to the assignee enjoying them on the original tenure and to his obtaining a direct demise from the Jenmi on production before him of the assignment deed. The latter clause is clearly intended to facilitate the assignee's obtaining an independent title-deed from the Jenmi—an object naturally desired by the assignee in order to place his rights beyond the possibility of question. But I see nothing in the document to suggest that this was other than a formality which would be granted without demur on production of the transfer deed: and it is one which, as shown by the Subordinate Judge, was frequently dispensed with.

The oral evidence has been rightly appreciated by the Subordinate Judge and on a survey of the evidence as to custom, oral and documentary, the conclusion is irresistible that for the period to which it relates no legally enforcible custom of forfeiture on alienation has been proved.

The Subordinate Judge has, however, held that upto 1896 there was a custom of inalienability involving forfeiture on alienation, though the custom has since fallen in desuetude. If this were so, the decision of the question before us would no doubt be difficult: but when the grounds of the Subordinate Judge's finding as to the custom in earlier times are examined, they seem to me to be unsound. It is based on no evidence, but rather on the authority of the expressions of opinion in the Sudder Court Proceedings of 1856 and in Sir Charles Turner's Minute of 1885. In regard to both we have to consider not only what the opinions exactly amount to, but also what degree of authority they should be deemed to carry.

Appellant is no doubt able to point to previous decisions of this Court in which the proceedings of the Sudder Court have been referred to as authoritative, to one of which [Venkatagiri Pattar v. Manavikrama (9) I was myself a party, and in which we were content to follow it. Undoubtedly any statements contained in the proceedings command great respect, but where as in the present case, we are practically asked to treat them as conclusive of the existence of a legal incident of a tenure, and that too in face of evidence as to the actual existing custom—then I think, speaking with all respect, we must be careful not to give it undue weight. It must be remembered that it is not a judicial pronouncement arrived at on a consideration of legally recorded evidence and of arguments on both sides, but merely embodies the general effect of decrees previously passed by the Civil Judges and of opinions of exprienced persons respecting the mutual rights of landlords and tenants. The proceedings were issued for the guidance of Subordinate Courts in the decision of future cases: but constituted, of course, no sort of legal enactment: and I see no reason to doubt that the Sudder Court itself would have allowed the correctness of any point therein laid down to be questioned and argued out, if it had arisen in any case that subsequently came before it.

The same remarks apply with even greater force to the observations of Sir Charles Turner. They are contained in a minute prepared by that eminent Chief Justice apparently for the consideration of Government in connection with a draft Bill relating to Malabar Land Tenures which was under consideration. I do not think any higher weight can be claimed for them than if they were contained in a legal treatise as an exposition of the learned author's views on the subject under consideration.

Apart from their authority, what do these dicta amount to? In the case of the Sudder Court Proceedings all that appellant can point to is a marginal note in which Adima Jenmam (but not Karamkari) is defined as "permanent but inalienable right." There is no suggestion of inalienability in the text regarding either tenure; though in the case of Anubhavam tenure which is dealt with in an intervening paragraph, there is a statement that the tenant cannot alienate his title. I think, it would be most dangerous in such circumstances to attach much weight to the marginal note.

Sir Charles Turner in his minute says that Adima grants "are not alienable except with the consent of the landlord." Whether he meant to imply that the landlord possessed a right of resumption on alienation is not clear; it does not necessarily follow, and it is curious that the very sentence from which these words are quoted concludes thus: "and on failure of heirs revert to him" (i. e., the landlord). He does not say "on failure of heirs or on alienation."

As regards "Karamkari" tenures he says nothing about inalienability.

Now that the authority and purport of these pronouncements have been directly challenged, the only conclusion I can come to is that as the basis of a finding of the existence of a custom, unsupported by other good evidence, they are altogether inadequate.

The other authorities to which our attention has been drawn, Graeme's Glossary, Moore's Malabar Law and the District Manual, all seem to be against appellant's contention: and my conclusion is that while the evidence of custom in the last 20 years is strongly against the existence of the right of forfeiture, there is no reliable evidence of its existence at any earlier period.

This disposes of the appeals: and it is unnecessary to consider whether, if the right of forfeiture exists, it was waived by the appellant, in any of the cases with which we have to deal. I may merely record that I see no reason why the Sub-Judge's finding on this point should not be accepted. As a result I would dismiss these second appeals with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—The learned Subordinate Judge has now submitted findings on the 2 issues remitted to him. Both sides have filed objections to them. It is, however, sufficient to consider the finding on the 1st issue as to custom for the disposal of these second appeals.

The Subordinate Judge found on that issue that a custom entitling the landlord to resume the holding on alienation thereof by the grantee existed prior to 1896 but had since then fallen into desuetude. The existence or non existence of an alleged custom is a mixed question of fact and law, and it has now been settled by the Full Bench in Kumarappa Reddi v. Manavala Goundan (46) that a finding about it is revisable by the High Court in second appeal. We must, therefore, see how far the accepted evidence in the case and the authorities relied on by the Subordinate Judge support his finding or are against it.

The Subordinate Judge has very properly made an elaborate enquiry into the existence of this alleged custom, including the examination of several Court witnesses. The effect of that evidence, both oral and documentary, has been in my opinion very correctly stated by him, when he says that it does not establish the existence of the alleged custom, but on the other hand it disproves it The documents relating to Pravarthi Anubhavom grants, which are grants for the performance of future services, were rightly discarded by him as the resumption of such grants arises under the general law itself and not from any special custom. The numerous documents filed by the defendants including, as the Subordinate Judge says, many assignments, mortgages and Court sales of holdings under Karamkari and Adimayavana and similar tenures, without having worked any forfeiture in fact are, in my opinion, strong evidence on their side. I agree with the (46) 44 Ind Cas. 699; 41 M. 374; 23 M. L. T. 44; 34 M. L. J. 104; 7 L. W. 243; (1918) M. W. N. 350.

Subordinate Judge that on the other hand the documents filed on the plaintiff's side seem to lead to no inference of a conclusive character and they are entitled to little weight as against the evidence of the defendants. I am not discussing the documentary and oral evidence in detail, as the Subordinate Judge has done so and I agree with his observations regarding it.

The complaint that the plaintiff was handicapped by not being given sufficient time to adduce his evidence seems to me to be entirely baseless. If he really wanted further time, he should have applied to this Court for it; but he did not do so As it is, I observe that he has adduced in evidence documents belonging to several big Jenmis in South Malabar, such as those of Guruvayoor Devaswom, Kavalappara Estate, Kuthiravattam Estate, Thiruvilwamala Devaswom, Thriprayar Devaswom and Thiruvanchikulam Devaswom besides those belonging to his own Zamorin's Estate.

I accept the Subordinate Judge's finding so far as it is in favour of the non-existence of the alleged custom on the evidence in the case. But in agreement with my learned brother. I am of opinion that he is wrong in his finding that such a custom existed prior to 1·96. Though the evidence now given does not go back further than 1896, there is no indication in it of any break or change in the custom at that date. It will, therefore, be a perfectly legitimate inference to hold that it indicates that the same state of affairs existed even prior to 1896. But the Subordinate Judge thinks that the statement about the incidents of the tenures in question in the Sudder Proceedings of 1856 and the opinion of Sir Charles Turner, C. J., in his well known minute on the draft Bill relating to Malabar Land Tenures justify the inference that the alleged custom existed in 1895 and later.

The Sudder proceedings were brought to our notice at the former hearing and were given their due weight by us before we called for findings. There is nothing express in them in favour of the plaintiff's contention. As regards Karamkari tenures, it is not stated in them that they are even inalienable, much less that they are resumable on alienation. I have already pointed out in my remand order that it is entirely illogical to infer a right of forfeiture of a holding on alienation and even inalienability of it from the mere existence of a right of escheat in the landlord on failure of the grantee's heirs. An estate terminable on the happening of an event does not thereby become inalienable. As I pointed out to the learned Counsel for the plaintiff at the time of this hearing, a life estate is such an estate; but nobody ever contended that it was, therefore, inalienable. We have in the Mulgeni tenure in South Kanara an exact case of a permanent tenure where the right of escheat exists coupled with unrestricted alienability. As regards the Adimayavana tenure, the text of the proceedings expressly says the land is not resumable except where it is given for performance of future services. That of course is not the case in the present suits. To rely upon a marginal note to say that such land is irresumable, in such a case and to infer further from it that it is also resumable on alienation, as the Subordinate Judge has done, seems to me to be unsupportable The Subordinate Judge also seems to have failed to keep in view the distinction between inalienability and resumability. The one does not follow from the other; the right of resumption and reentry on alienation must be expressly given: see Parameshri v. Vittanpi Shanbaga (7) and Netapal Singh v. Kalyan Das (10) it cannot be inferred from inalienability alone.

The Sudder proceedings do not thus, in my opinion, give any support to the Subordinate Judge's view. Even if it were otherwise, I would have no difficulty in agreeing with my learned brother that we should not give them undue weight and treat them as conclusive. My learned brother has also dealt with the opinion of the learned Chief Justice in his minute and I fully agree with his view and have nothing further to add regarding it. The other authorities, as observed by him, are not in plaintiff's favour and I have already considered in my remand order the reported cases cited as bearing on the question before us.

In this state of the authorities, considering the evidence now adduced the only proper conclusion to come to in my opinion is to hold that plaintiff has failed to prove the existence at any time of a custom entitling the landlord to resume, on alienation, lands granted by him on Karamkari or Adimayavana tenure where they are not proved to have been granted for performance of future services. In conclusion I would observe that it is to be regretted that the Subordinate Judge did not pay more attention to the observations in the remand order.

On the above view no decision on the question of waiver is necessary. I agree to the order proposed by my learned brother.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss 148 A, 158 B—Rent decree—Execution of decree—Sale of tenure without notice to co-sharer landlords, effect of.

Where a tenure is sold in execution of a decree for rent obtained in a suit framed under section 148 A of the Bengal Tenancy Act without serving a notice under section 158B of the Act upon the co-sharer landlords, the sale is not a nullity but has the effect of a sale under a money decree. [p. 403, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Khulna, dated the 6th of November 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 28th July 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Surendra Nath Bose), for the Respondents.—I take a preliminary objection that this appeal before your Lordships is incompetent for two reasons:—(1) As this appeal arises out of an application to set aside an execution sale under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Code of Civil Procedure, no second appeal lies, and (2) the tenant respondent having died more than six months ago and his heirs not having been substituted within the period allowed by law, this appeal has abated.

Babu Provash Chandra Mitter (with him Babu Sudhangsu Sekhar Mukerjee), for the Appellant.—Although the application to set aside the sale was treated as an application under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the statements in the petition will convince your Lordships that it was really an application under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal may abate as against the deceased respondent whose heirs are not substituted. But that will not cause the whole appeal to abate.

Even if the preliminary objection of my learned friend prevails, I am entitled to come to your Lordships under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and I shall be able to satisfy your Lordships that the lower Appellate Court has failed to exercise its jurisdiction in the matter.

As to the merits I submit that the effect of an omission to serve notice upon the co sharer landlords under section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to make the sale invalid. Refers to Ahamad Biswas v. Benoy Bhusan Gupta (1). The sale is, therefore, a nullity.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—If the sale is a nullity, it need not be set aside.]

I would refer your Lordships to the circumstances under which the present application was made. Reads Khagendra Bhusan Roy v. Jatindra Nath Roy (2). I submit that the lower Appellate Court has failed to follow the judgment of their Lordships in Khagendra Bhusan Roy v. Jatindra Nath Roy (2).

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Respondents.—I submit that my learned friend as co-sharer landlord has no locus standi to make an application under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code. In Ahamad Biswas v. Benoy Bhusan Gupta (1) your Lordships did not say that the sale was a nullity. What your Lordships laid down was that the omission to serve notice under section 158B will render the execution sale a sale under a money decree. It will not be a rent sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Provash Chndraa Mitter briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application to set aside the sale of a gunti tenure purporting to be held under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The application was treated as being one under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, but the statements in the petition go to show that it was an application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The Courts below have come to the conclusion that there were no material irregularities and that it was not proved that the price of the property was inadequate.

The main contention raised before us is that the sale was void because although the suit was framed under section 148-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, notice of the sale had not been served upon the co sharer landlords, who are the appellants before us, before the tenure was put up to sale, as directed by section 158-B of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The learned District Judge held that the omission to serve the notice did not nullify the sale and that it "reduced the sale to the status of a money sale."

It is contended before us that the sale is an absolute nullity. We do not think that that is the correct view of the section.

We had to consider this question in another case [see Ahamad Biswas v. Benoy Bhusan Gupta (1)]. There we held that if a co-sharer landlord wants to have the sale of a tenure or holding, the provision of sub-section (2) of section 158B, which is mandatory, must be complied with. We meant that in order that the tenure or holding itself might pass by the sale, the provision of section 158B, sub-section (2), must be complied with. In the case of Sarip Hochan v. Tilattama Debi (3), referred to at page 933, 23 Calcutta Weekly Notes [Aahmad Biswas v. Benoy Bhusan Gupta (1)], Fletcher and Newbould, JJ., held that the failure of the Court to serve such notice renders the sale invalid.

(3) 43 Ind. Cas. & 31 C. L. J. 73.

The learned Vakil for the respondent has argued that the sale is a perfectly valid sale. We are not inclined to accept that view.

As observed in the case of Ahamad Biswas v. Benoy Bhusan Gupta (1) the position of a purchaser at such a sale is that of a purchaser under an ordinary money decree and that such a sale is inoperative as against the co-sharer landlords.

In the above view, a sale cannot be set aside on the ground that it was a nullity: and indeed if it was a nullity, it need not be set aside at all. We think, however, that the sale is not a nullity but that such a sale has the effect of a sale under the money decree.

That being so, and having regard to the finding arrived at by both the Courts below that the appellants have failed to prove that there was a substantial injury by reason of the sale, the appeal must be dismissed.

It ought to be mentioned that the tenant respondent Basanta Kumar Ghose died more than six months ago and no substitution of his heirs was made. The appeal, therefore, has abated so far as that respondent is concerned.

As against the other respondents, the appeal is dismissed with costs—one gold mohur.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XXXIX, r 2 (1)—"Injury", meaning of—Inherent power of Court to do substantial justice—Discretionary relief, grant of, principles governing—Temporary injunction, when can be granted.

FIRM OF MANOHAR LAL MAHABIR PERSHAD v. FIRM OF JAI NARAIN BABU LAL.

The word "injury" in rule 2 (1) of Order XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code, means an act which is contrary to law. [p. 404, col. 2.]

The Code of Civil Procedure is not exhaustive and the Court possesses inherent powers to act ex debito justitiæ in order to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone it exists [p. 405, col. .]

A person asking the Court to exercise its discretionary jurisdiction must make out a strong case and must show that there is no other remedy open to him by which he can protect himself from the consequences of the injury complained of. [p. 405, col. .]

To justify a temporary injunction the plaintiff must show not only that an injunction is the appropriate relief, but that unless the defendant is restrained forthwith by a temporary injunction, irreparable injury or inconvenience may result to the plaintiff before the suit is decided on the merits. [p. 406, col. 1.]

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the order passed by Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, in Civil Appeal No. 2013 of 1919, dated the 23rd December 1919 and printed as 54 Ind. Cas. 546.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law raised on this appeal is one of some importance to the commercial community. The plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, entered into a contract with the defendant for the purchase of certain piece goods which were to be imported from Europe and to be delivered at Delhi. The indent, which embodied the terms of the contract, contains a clause providing for a reference to the arbitration of two European merchants at Karachi of any dispute arising under the contract.

It appears that the defendant offered to deliver goods to the plaintiff which the latter declined to receive, with the result that the former sold the goods in the market at the plaintiff's risk and then after nominating an arbitrator called upon the plaintiff to appoint a second arbitrator in accordance with the terms of the contract. The plaintiff, however, declined to comply with the request, and the defendant thereupon nominated also the second arbitrator in exercise of the authority conferred upon him by the arbitration clause.

The plaintiff has brought the action, which has given rise to this appeal, for a declaration that he is not bound by the alleged contract, and also for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from proceeding with the arbitration proceedings. The grounds, upon which the plaintiff seeks to impeach the contract, are:—

(1) That the offer made by the plaintiff was accepted by the defendant subject to a condition, which condition was never assented to by the plaintiff. The acceptance being a qualified one, no complete contract came into existence.

(2) That the plaintiff's consent to the contract was induced by a representation that the goods would be imported from Europe, which representation was false to the knowledge of the defendant.

After instituting the suit as described above, the plaintiff made an application for the grant of a temporary injunction restraining the arbitration proceedings pending the decision of the suit. The trial Court granted the prayer subject to the plaintiff furnishing security to the extent of the damages claimed by the defendant for the breach of the contract, but its order granting the injunction has been discharged by Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof sitting in Chambers.

We have before us an appeal under the Letters Patent from the judgment of the learned Judge, and the question for determination is whether in the circumstances narrated above an interim injunction restraining arbitration proceedings should be granted.

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that the jurisdiction of the Court to issue a temporary injunction is circumscribed by the terms of rules 1 and 2 of Order XXXIX: and there can be no doubt that, if this contention is correct, the appellant has absolutely no case. Ex concesso rule 1 has no bearing, and rule 2 postulates that there must be before the Court a suit for restraining the defendant from committing a breach of contract or other injury of any kind. The word "injury" means an act which is contrary to law, and we cannot hold that the defendant, in invoking the assistance of the arbitrators to settle the dispute, is committing any act which is contrary to law.

The view taken by Russell, J., in the Bombay case of Jairamdas Ganeshdas v. Zamonlal Kissorilal (1) favours the contention of the respondent, but this view was not accepted in a subsequent Bombay case, Uderam Kesaji v. Hyderally Abdul Kayum (2) by Macleod, J., who adopted the rule laid down by the Calcutta High Court in Rash Behary Dey v. Bhowani Churn Bhose (3) and Mungle Chand v. Goval Ram (4) that the powers of the High Courts to grant a temporary injunction are not confined to the terms of rules 1 and 2, and that these Courts have inherent powers under their general equity jurisdiction to grant such an injunction independently of the provisions of the Code.

These rulings, however, deal with the jurisdiction of the High Court on the original side, and it is clear that the three High Courts at Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, having in the exercise of their original jurisdiction inherited all the jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Courts, can exercise powers similar to those of the Courts of Equity in England. Other High Courts and Courts subordinate to High Courts do not, however, possess the same jurisdiction, but it was pointed out, even when the old Code of Civil Procedure was in force, that the Code was not exhaustive and that the Court possesses an inherent power to act ex debito justitiæ in order to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone it exists; vide, inter alia, Hukum Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (5). This principle now finds expression in section 151 of the new Civil Procedure Code, which enacts that nothing in the Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Courts to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Courts.

We are, however, not satisfied that the appellant has succeeded in establishing any ground which would warrant our interference with the judgment of the learned Judge in Chambers. In Kitts v. Moore (6) the Court of Appeal no doubt held that the Court has jurisdiction to interfere by injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding to arbitration, where an action has been brought impeaching on equitable grounds the instrument containing the agreement for reference. But as pointed out by the learned Judge in Chambers, the main ground, upon which the plaintiff claims relief against the defendant, is that there was never a contract between the parties. Now, the Courts, while granting a temporary injunction to restrain arbitration proceedings in a case in which the contract containing the arbitration clause is impeached on equitable grounds such as fraud or misrepresentation, have declined to exercise their power where the plaintiff's case was that the matter sought to be referred to arbitration was not covered by the arbitration clause, although such arbitration proceedings may be futile and vexatious, vide North London Railway Company v. Great Northern Railway Company (7). The principle of this judgment has been applied by the Calcutta High Court to a case in which the existence of the contract itself was denied: See Sardarmull Jessraj v Agar Chand Mahata & Co. (8). In the same volume of the Calcutta Weekly Notes there is a judgment of a Division Bench of that Court reported at page 258 [Bai Nath v. Mansukrai Panna Lall (9)], in which the contract was attacked on the ground that the transaction embodied therein was a gaming and wagering transaction, and consequently the clause relating to arbitration was void. The learned Judges declined to apply to that case the rule in Kitts v. Moore (6), holding that it was not a question of attacking the contract upon an equitable ground.

The principle of law is firmly established that a person asking the Court to exercise its discretionary jurisdiction must make out a strong case and must show that there is no other remedy open to him by which he can protect himself from the consequences of the injury complained of. Now, the learned Judge points out that the plaintiff will have an opportunity to contest the award, if the defendant seeks to enforce it by asking the Court to pass a decree in accordance therewith.

Further, the plaintiff can appear before the arbitrators under protest and raise such objections as are open to him. We are not impressed by the argument advanced by Mr. Moti Sagar that, as the refusal of temporary injunction would render the relief as regards permanent injunction abortive, the Court should stay arbitration proceedings pending the decision of the suit. This contention, if accepted without any qulification, would amount to this. A plaintiff has only to include in his plaint a prayer for a permanent injunction, however unfounded that prayer may be, and the Court is bound to restrain the defendant from proceeding with the arbitration. The sound doctrine applicabe to cases of this kind is that to justify a temporary injunction, the plaintiff must show not only that an injunction is the appropriate relief, but that unless the defendant is restrained forthwith by a temporary injunction, irreparable injury or inconvenience may result to the plaintiff before the suit is decided upon the merits. This requirement the plaintiff has failed to establish.

We see no adequate ground to dissent from the conclusion of Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12—Copying agent, status of—Delivery of copies to copying agent—Time between date of application and date of delivery, exclusion of.

The plaintiff's suit having been dismissed on the 11th of December 1918, he filed an appeal to the District Judge on the 21st of January 1919. It appeared that the copies of the decree and judgment were applied for by the copying agent on the 18th of December and were attested on the 23rd idem, but were not made over to the copying agent till the 2nd of January 1919:

Held, (1) that the copying agent must be taken as an agent of the appellants and delivery of the copies to him must be regarded as delivery to his principal, who was entitled to deduct the whole of the time from the 18th of December 1918 to the 2nd of January 1919; [p. 407, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 26th June 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Gujrat, dated the 11th December 1918.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Appellants.

Maulvi Ghulam Mohyud Din, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Karam Ilahi and others sued Faiz Ahmad and others for possession of certain land. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the 11th of December 1918 and the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the District Judge which was accepted, and posession of the land decreed, on the 26th of June 1919.

Faiz Ahmad and the other defendants have preferred this second appeal to this Court through Dr. Muhammad Iqbal and I have heard Maulvi Ghulam Mohyud Din for the plaintiffs-respondents.

The only point taken in the appeal is that the appeal to the learned District Judge was barred by limitation. As stated above, the suit was dismissed by the trial Court on the 11th of December 1918—the appeal to the District Judge was filed on the 21st of January 1919 and was time-barred unless it can be held that the then appellants were entitled to the benefit of the days occupied in obtaining copies of the decree and judgment appealed against. These copies were applied for on the 18th of December 1918 and were attested on the 23rd of December 1918. Even if this period of 6 days be allowed them, the appeal, of the plaintiffs was barred. The learned Vakil for the respondents, however, produced a copy of a register in which it is entered that owing to the Christmas holidays the copies were not made over to the copying agency till the 2nd of January 1919 and claims that his clients are entitled to be allowed these extra ten days.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, however, contended that as the application for copies had been made to the copying agent, no time should be allowed at all and bases his contention on a Division Bench decision of the Chief Court reported as Ashiq Hussain v. Ali Bakhsh (1). In that case the decree appealed against had been passed on the 24th February 1908 and the appeal should have been filed by the 24th May 1908—as a matter of fact it was filed on the 29th May 1908, i.e., five days after the period of limitation had expired. It was found that the appellant had come to Lahore from Delhi and had here engaged a Counsel, who on the 16th of May 1908 wrote to the copying agent of the Delhi District asking him to supply him with the necessary copies. No copying-fee was, however, sent with the letter and the copying agent replied that he could not make the necessary application for the copies asked for until the necessary money had been remitted to him. A money order for the amount was sent to him on the 21st May 1908, which he received on the 23rd May 1908. He filed an application for the copies required on the 25th of May 1908, received them the same day and despatched them to Lahore, and the appeal was filed on the 29th of May 1908. It was held that the appeal was time barred as no proper application for copies had been made till the 25th of May 1908, i. e., after the period for filing the appeal had expired, and that no days of grace could be allowed. It was held that the copying agent was not such an officer of the Court to whom an application could be made, but was a mere agent of the would-be appellant. In the present case I think the copying agent must be taken as an agent of the then appellants. He, however, made the application he was asked to make on the 18th December 1918, i. e., before the period for filing the appeal had expired. Though the copies were ready on the 23rd of December 1918, they were not delivered to the said agent till the 2nd of January 1919. Assuming that delivery to him must be regarded as delivery to his principals, it seems to me that the said principals can claim to be allowed the whole of the period from the 18th of December 1918 to the 2nd of January 1919, and this would bring their appeal within limitation. I accordingly hold that the appeal was within time and dismiss this second appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 91—Alienation by guardian of minor—Death of minor—Suit by reversioners to recover possession—Limitation—Hindu Law—Widow, decree against, whether binding on reversioners.

Though a person suing for possession of immoveable property whose right to possession is blocked by an instrument must set aside that instrument, the necessity does not arise, and time under Article 91 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act does not begin to run, until the necessity to sue for possession accrues. [p. 410, col. 2; p. 411, col. 1.]

A person who has had no occasion to sue for possession of property cannot have his right to property extinguished by the lapse of three years under Article 91 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 411, col. 1]

A decree fairly obtained against a female restricted owner as representing the estate is binding on the reversioners, unless it can be shown that there was not a fair trial of the right in the suit against the female owner [p. 409, col. 2.]

Where, however, the female owner failed to raise a plea owing to a misconception as to her locus standi to raise it:

Held, that the decree was not binding on the reversioners. [p. 410, col. 1]

SPESHRAO v. MAROTI.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants plaintiffs sue as reversioners, who have succeeded to the estate of the last male holder, to recover possession of immovable property sold by Musammat Muktai when she was holding the estate with the limited powers of a Hindu female, on the ground that the alienations were not for legal necessity. Various alienations were the subject of the suit. I will deal first with the first two grounds of appeal as against the 4th defendant Tukaram, dealt with in paragraphs 12 to 14 of the District Judge's judgment. Purnaji was the owner of the property. On his death prior to 1904, he was succeeded by his minor son Fakira, whose guardian was Fakira's mother Muktai and one Ganpatrao held a power-of attorney from Fakira through his mother. On 13th May 1904 Ganpatrao mortgaged Survey Nos. 60 and 48 of Sonari in favour of Ganpat Raghoji by a simple mortgage, the consideration set out in the deed, Exhibit F-3, being Rs. 900 cash. The mortgage-deed was executed by Ganpatrao as Muktyar for Fakira minor, guardian mother Muktai. Fakira died while still a minor in the beginning of 1906. In March 1909 Ganpat Raghoji assigned his rights under the mortgage to Tukaram. On 23rd January 1911 Tukaram sued Muktai and her assignor in Suit No. 16 of 1911, Muktai being sued as the successor in interest of the mortgagor Fakira. He got a preliminary decree for sale on the 18th July 1911. On 16th September 1911 Muktai sold one of the two fields, Survey No. 60, to Tukaram, by Exhibit 4 D I, the consideration expressed in the sale deed being Rs. 2,000, made up of Rs. 1,900 due under the preliminary decree for sale and Rs. 100 cash. Even the decree in Suit No. 16 of 1911 is not on the record of this suit, but I have called for the records of Suit No 16 of 1911. I find that the following was the sole plea raised by Muktai:—

"I admit the execution of deed and receipt of consideration, only I repaid Rs. 300. Rupees 300 were repaid to Ganpat Raghoji in presence of Abhiman Ganesh Puri. No receipt was given. The balance of the claim is admitted."

Muktai did not even take the necessary steps for producing witnesses to prove the alleged repayment, and the whole claim was decreed against her The learned District Judge held, without going into the question of the legal necessity for the mortgage of 904, that the sale of field No. 60 was binding on the reversioners. He gives his reasons as follows in paragraphs 12 to 14 of his judgment:—

"It is contended that the decree passed against Muktai in her capacity of legal representative of the previous male owner is binding on the reversioners unless, it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the suit and the decree had been obtained by fraud and collusion. The mortgage on which the decree was based was not by a Hindu widow but was on behalf of a full male owner Fakira. Supposing that Fakira had been an adult and had executed the mortgage deed himself and after his death a decree had been obtained against Muktai, a Hindu widow, as his mother and heir, could it be argued that the decree against the widow did not bind the reversioners? It is argued on behalf of the appellants that it does not matter that Fakira was a minor. He was at all events a full male owner and his alienation or alienations made on his behalf by his legally constituted guardian for the time could not be questioned by his heirs. If Muktai had not been his guardian but some one else had been his guardian and had in that capacity mortgaged the property and afterwards Muktai had succeeded him as heir and was sued as the legal representative of the minor mortgagor, would not the decree have been binding on the reversioners?

"I think these arguments are unanswerable and were not met by the other side in the course of the arguments at the Bar. It was laid down in the celebrated case of Katama Natchiar v Rajah of Shivaganga (1) that a decree fairly obtained against a female restricted owner as representing the estate is binding on the reversioners, "unless it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right in that suit." See also Madan Mohan Lal v. Akbaryar Khan (2) to the same effect. Where plaintiff's case has been fairly and properly stated and the widow had reasonable opportunities of contesting the suit, the decree against her is binding on the reversioners, Gur Nanak Prashad v. Jai Narain Lal (3). It was argued that in Suit No. 16 of 1911 Muktai could hardly have raised the question that the mortgage executed by her as guardian of her minor son on a representation that it was for legal necessity was not so, as soon as the property descended to herself as heir to the late minor. She would have been estopped, but the estoppel would have been purely personal and would not have bound any one claiming by an independent title, Dharam Kunwar v Balwant Singh (4). Had the suit been decided on the pure ground of estoppel, perhaps it could have been held that the decree had been decided on a ground personal to the widow and was not binding on the reversioners. See Richards, C. J.'s judgment in Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (5) and Banerjee, J.'s observations on page 510.* But as the suit was decided on general grounds, it must be held that the widow represented the estate in that suit, vide the judgment of the majority in Risal Singh v Balwant Singh (5). I am of opinion that Tukaram's decree in the mortgage suit No. 16 of 1911 was binding on the estate and, therefore, the alienation by way of an out and out sale of one of the two fields for the satisfaction of the mortgage decree is binding on the reversioners.

"No doubt when a person dies during minority, the persons entitled to succeed to his property can avoid an unauthorised act of his guardian. The plaintiffs in the present case can question the mortgage on the ground that the mortgage debt was not incurred for legal necessity or for the minor's benefit, Dalchand v. Chand Khan (6). But it was open to them to have done so within three years of the execution of the mortgage deed, Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliar (7). A suit to set aside the alienation would be time barred now. The alienation, not having been avoided, held good. The decree based thereupon bound the estate and the alienation by Muktai of one of the fields to satisfy the decree was a prudent act, as otherwise both fields would have gone to the mortgagee. The sale-deed, dated 16th September 1911, of field No. 60 in favour of defendant No. 4 Tukaram Sheoram Korde is, therefore, valid and is binding on plaintiffs."

It will be observed that the learned District Judge makes no reference to the nature of the defence actually made by Muktai in Suit No. 16 of 1911 and it appears doubtful if he perused the records of that case.

The decree against Muktai would be binding on the reversioners, according to the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Katama Natchiar v. Rajah of Shivagunga (1), if there had been a fair trial of the right in that suit. I have no doubt that if Muktai had pleaded, and had properly supported her plea, that the mortgage by Fakira's guardian was not for any purpose binding upon the minor, the decision of the question against her would have been binding upon the reversioners. I agree with the District Judge, on the authorities cited by him, that Muktai was probably not estopped from pleading that the guardian, who happened to be herself, had exceeded his authority as guardian since she was a defendant in the suit as successor of Fakira, and it was open to her to raise any pleas that would have been available to Fakira. She did not raise any such plea, and the question whether the mortgage was for legal necessity binding on the minor was not decided. It is argued for the respondents that the appellants are bound by the rule of constructive res judicata contained in Explanation IV to section 11, Civil Procedure Code, since Maktai ought to have raised this defence, and reliance is placed upon Gur Nanak Prashad v. Jai Narain Lal (3) in support of the view that a decree against a Hindu female may be binding on the reversioners notwithstanding that the widow did not contest the suit, provided that the plaintiff's case was properly and fairly stated and the female had reasonable opportunities of which she did not choose to avail herself and of defending the suit. In Suit No. 16 of 1911 the plaintiff did not state that the mortgage by the minor's guardian was for legal necessity. In the case cited the circumstances were different and there was in fact no valid defence available to the widow. On the other hand it has been held in Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee (8) on a review of all the authorities that a consent decree, based on a compromise passed against a widow, cannot bind the reversioners, and a similar view has recently been taken in Rama Santu Randive v. Daji Naru Randive (9). A decree obtained against the widow obtained in the circumstances of Suit No. 16 of 1911 cannot possibly in my opinion be called a decree obtained after a fair and full trial. Muktai may not have been estopped, but she naturally never dreamt of saying that in receiving the consideration and entering into the mortgage she had exceeded her own authority as guardian. I have no hesitation in saying that the decree in Suit No. 16 of 1911 must be left out of consideration and the question whether the mortgage and the sale resulting from it were for legal necessity must be decided on the merits, subject to any question of limitation.

The lerned District Judge also held that the mortgage not having been set aside by a suit within three years, it is binding on the reversioners, who cannot now sue to avoid it. In support of this the respondents rely on Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliar (7). If the mortgage had been by the widow herself, the suit would fall under Article 144 of the Limitation Schedule and would be in time, vide Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (10). The dates affecting the question of limitation are as follows. Fakira's guardian mortgaged the fields on 13th May 1904. He died early in 1906. Muktai sold the filed No. 60 on 16th September 1911 and re married on or about the 13th June 1912. This suit was instituted on the 8th January 1913. The learned District Judge does not expressly say under what Article of the Limitation Schedule the limitation for a suit to set aside the mortgage ought to have been filed within three years, but presumably the Article he means is Article 91, since Article 44 applies only to a sale by a guardian.

The facts in Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliar (7) are quite different from those of the present case. There a guardian mother alienated the property in 1861, the minor, as heir, died during his minority, and his mother died in 1890, while the suit was brought in 1891. The property alienated was in the possession of the alienees ever since 1861 and presumably for more than 12 years after the death of the minor. In the present case the field came into possession of Tukaram at the earliest on the 16th September 1911. The arguments for the respondents may be summed up in the words that if it was necessary for the minor to set aside the deed, it was necessary for his heir to do so, and Muktai, being capable of representing the estate, should have sued to set aside the mortgage deed as being beyond the competence of the guardian. On the other hand, it is argued for the appellants that they are suing not on the mortgage, but on the ensuing sale of 1911, and that if Article 91 is applicable, time begins to run when the plaintiffs became aware of the facts entitling them to have the mortgage set aside, since they had no right to sue for possession until after the death of Muktai. The case that in my opinion is most similar to the present is Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Hurrihur Pershad Narain Singh (11). In that case there was an Ikrarnamah by the last male holder in 1857 and after his death his widow remained in possession for a time at any rate, and after her death the defendant was in possession claiming under the Ikrarnamah. It was held that Article 91 applied and that the time began to run only from the date of the death of the widow, since no benefit could be gained by any one seeking to impugn the Ikrarnamah during her lifetime and any alienation by her would be valid until her death, and since it was impossible to predict during her lifetime whether any person claiming to be a reversionary heir would occupy that position on the widow's death. The case affirms the principle that though a person suing for possession whose right to possession is blocked by an instrument must set aside that instrument, the necessity dose not arise, and time under Article 91 does not begin to run, until the necessity to sue for possession accrues. Moreover in the present case Muktai might have redeemed the mortgage before 1911. The principle that persons who have had no occasion to sue for possession of property cannot have their right to property extinguished by the lapse of three years under Article 91, has been affirmed in Baji Rao v. Harpal (12), though that was a case of nominal sale.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the suit as regards field No. 60 is not time-barred.

Ground No. 4 of the appeal is to the effect that the District Judge is wrong in holding that the mortgage deed dated 12th October 1904 executed by Muktai as guardian of Fakira in favour of Ramroa Ghadiatchi was binding on the reversioners as it had not been set aside. This ground of appeal affects the 2nd defendant Maruti Balaji, and relates only to the item of Rs. 2,200 evidenced by Exhibit P-5 and Exhibit 2 D 4. By Exhibit P-5, dated 12th October 1904, Muktai as Fakira's guardian mortgaged six fields and borrowed Rs. 2,000 from Ramrao Ghadiatchi to pay off Ganpat Raghoji and other creditors. By Exhibit 2 D-4, dated 5th June 1906, Muktai sold four of the six fields to Maruti Balaji for Rs. 8,000, Rs. 2,200 of the consideration to be paid to Ghadiatchi in satisfaction of Exhibit P-5. Ghadiatchi sued Muktai and Maruti Balaji, and got a decree, the judgment being Exhibit 2 D-3, dated 8th July 1910, in which it was held that Muktai received only Rs. 1,800 of the mortgage money of Rs. 2,000. Maruti Balaji paid Ghadiatchi sometime before the present suit.

In paragraph 19 of his judgment the learned District Judge holds that the mortgage deed of 12th October 1904 not having been set aside it was binding on Muktai and the reversioners, and gives the same reasons as in the case of Ganpat Raghoji's mortgage. The circumstanes of the two mortgages are similar, and I hold that the question of legal necessity must be decided on the merits. It is also argued for the appellants that as the money was borrowed under Exhibit P 5, partly to pay off Exhibit P-3, there cannot be legal necessity to make alienation to pay off both Exhibits P 3 and P 5 and also attention is drawn to the fact that it was found in Exhibit 2 D-3 that only Rs. 1,800 out of the consideration of Exhibit P-5 were paid. These are matters which must be gone into by the District Judge in deciding the question of legal necessity.

As to ground No. 3, in Exhibit 4 D 1 out of the consideration of Rs. 2,000, Rs. 1,900 represented the decree, while Rs. 100 were paid in cash. If it is found that Rs. 1,900 were for legal necessity and Rs. 100 not, then the appellants would like to pay Rs. 1,900 and get back the land. This is also a question for the District Judge.

The 5th ground as to mesne profits is not pressed.

The 7th ground is that the District Judge was wrong in paragraph 21 of his judgment in correcting 5/9 to 1/2. The learned Advocate for the respondents admits that this ground of appeal must prevail. The correct figure is 5/9 of Survey No. 47, and the figure 1/2 in the plaint is a clerical error, vide Exhibit 2 D 4.

The 6th ground refers to paragraph 22 of the District Judge's judgment. There is no force in this ground. I can see nothing illegal or improper in a guardian carrying out the wishes of the minor's deceased father. This ground fails; it is in respect of Suit No. 3.

The total claim in appeal is valued at Rs. 2,890, being Rs. 115 in respect of field No. 60, Rs. 2,200 ordered to be paid to Maruti Balaji, Rs. 75 in respect of field No. 3 and Rs. 500 mesne profits. The appeal is dismissed as regards field No. 3 and mesne profits. As regards field No. 60 and the sum of Rs. 2,200, the appeal is remanded for further trial by the lower Appellate Court. The appellants will pay their own and respondents' costs as on Rs. 575, there will be a refund of the Court-fee paid on Rs. 2,315, and the other costs on the claim in respect to Rs. 2,315 will be costs in the suit.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Fraud —Ex parte decree obtained by fraud—Suit for setting aside decree, maintainability of.

A regular suit lies to set aside an ex parte decree obtained by fraud

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Multan, dated the 2nd January 1918

Babu S. C. Chatterji for Babu M. N. Mukerji, for the Appellants

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs' suit, as described by the learned Subordinate Judge, is to obtain a declaration that a decree of Rs. 5,499 passed against him in 1911 is not capable of execution. The learned Judge, after referring to several authorities, held it to be a suit which interfered with the execution of the decree and to be barred by section 47, Civil Procedure Code. Against this decision the plaintiff has appealed.

The money for which the decree was granted was apparently due on some brick contract. According to the plaint, the present defendant sued the present plaintiffs for the money on account of which the decree had been passed and obtained an ex parte decree on the 22nd of March 1911. The plaintiff No. 1 now states that as he was going to Multan to conduct his case, he was met by the defendant who agreed to drop his suit if plaintiff agreed to continue the supply of bricks. In spite of this promise, however, the defendant went to Multan and obtained an ex parte decree, of which plaintiff was not aware till June 1914. He was, however, induced by this promise of withdrawal to refrain from contesting the suit and to continue his supply of bricks much to the advantage of the defendant and the whole of their accounts have been settled. The plaint, it is true, is badly drafted but it clearly alleges that the original decree was obtained by fraud. The lower Court was obviously wrong in thinking that the suit was merely one for a declaration that an adjustment of account had taken place. It did not consider in any way the allegations of fraud or even take the statements of the parties thereon, which was most essential in view of the somewhat vague allegations in the plaint.

It is well established law that a regular suit lies to set aside an ex parte decree obtained by fraud and the decision of the lower Court, based as it is upon a misunderstanding, must be set aside. The appeal is accordingly accepted and the case is remanded to the lower Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for a decision on the merits. Costs to be costs in the cause. Court-fee on appeal to be refunded.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 9th May 1918, confirming the decree of the Probationary Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 5th March 1918.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. N. Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Niamatullah, for Respondent No. 4.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this appeal arises were Inder Singh and Chandika Singh, the sons of Bhawani Charan Singh and Baij Nath Singh. Baij Nath Sirgh is the son of a brother of Inder Singh and Chandika Singh. Bhawani Charan Singh was one of the sons of Sheodat Singh. It is perfectly clear from the pedigree that two of the sons of Sheodat Singh died issueless and that the property which belonged to Sheodat Singh would ordinarily have been divided into four equal shares each, one of which would have descended to the descendants of his four surviving sons. The property consisted of 21 shares, but for some obscure reason the Bhawani Charan Singh branch was recorded from 1901 onwards as the owner of 5 shares and not of $5\frac{1}{4}$ shares. The case stands that they owned $5\frac{1}{4}$ shares, though they were not recorded as owners thereof. So long as nobody interfered with their possession and enjoyment of $5\frac{1}{4}$ shares, it was immaterial to them what happened to be recorded in the revenue papers. But when recently a partition was applied for by another branch of the family, it became essential to have the question of their title cleared up. In the proceedings for partition in the Revenue Court one of them objected that the entry was inaccurate and he was directed to institute a suit in the Civil Court, if he desired to have his share properly determined. Accordingly the present suit was instituted. The Courts below have dismissed this suit, on the grounds that only one person objected in the Revenue Court and three have instituted the suit and that the matter could not be re opened because the inaccurate entry has been in existence since 1901.

I do not consider that there is any force in the objections which the Courts below have taken. The three plaintiffs are joint and an objection made on behalf of one was made on behalf of all. With regard to the second point, the suit is not one for the correction of the old entry in a Khewat. As soon as the partition proceedings had taken place, new entries must necessarily be made in the Khewat. The suit is to enable the plaintiffs to obtain in partition the shares which actually belong to them and of which they are in possession. It is established satisfactorily that they own $5\frac{1}{4}$ shares and that they must own $5\frac{1}{4}$ shares. The Revenue Courts have requested the Civil Courts to settle the shares that they actually own and it is the duty of the Civil Courts to determine the matter. The appeal is filed by only one plaintiff but it must succeed under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 4, with regard to all.

I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and direct that a declaration be passed that the three plaintiffs are the owners of the $5\frac{1}{4}$ shares in question. The contesting respondents will pay their own costs and those of the appellants in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 62, 97, 116—Mortgage, possessory Mortgagee unable to get possession—Suit for refund of mortgage money—Limitation.

Defendant, an adna malik, mortgaged certain land with possession to plaintiff for Rs. 500 on 30th August 1912 and agreed to refund the money in case the mortgagee lost possession for some legal defect in the owner's title. The land being in possession of various persons who refused to allow plaintiff to get possession, he, on the 14th April 1913, brought a suit against the mortgagor and one A, for possession of such part of the land as was in A's possession. This suit having been dismissed, plaintiff sued for refund of his money with interest. It was found that there was a genuine contract of mortgage at the time when it was effected but that consideration failed subsequently:

Held, that under the circumstances Article 97, read with Article 116 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, was applicable to the case [p. 415, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Jullundur at Ludhiana, dated the 31st October 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Nawanshahr, District Jullundur, dated the 22nd March 1918.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellants.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Additional Judge, while deciding upon the merits in plaintiff's favour, has held that his suit is barred under Article 62 of the Indian Limitation Act and has dismissed it with costs throughout.

The facts briefly are that Mahant Sundar Das, defendant, as adna malik, mortgaged 74 kanals 17 marlas of land to Milkhi Mal, plaintiff, for Rs. 500 on the 30th August 1912. It was agreed that the mortgagee should be given possession of the land and also that if for some legal defect in the owner's title the mortgagee lost possession of the land, he should be entitled to claim a refund of the purchase-money from the mortgagor. The land happened at the time to be in possession of various persons who refused to allow plaintiff to get possession of any part of it, and as a result plaintiff on the 19th April 1913 brought a suit against the mortgagor and one Attar Singh for possession of such part of the land mortgaged as happened to be in Attar Singh's possession, this being regarded as a test case which would apply to all who held land mortgaged to the plaintiff. Plaintiff's suit was dismissed by order of the Munsif, 2nd Class, dated the 29th November 1913, and the ground upon which the Munsif decided the case was that there was no bona fide mortgage between the plaintiff and Sundar Das, and that the two were acting in collusion, Sundar Das's object being to eject proprietors from the land through plaintiff. The ground upon which this conclusion was based was that the mortgage-deed contained a covenant to the effect that the mortgagor would bear all expenses of any litigation that might arise with regard to the property. This the Munsif characterised as an unusual stipulation which must excite suspicion. As a matter of fact the stipulation is not of a very unusual character and under section 65, clause (b), Transfer of Property Act, "In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagor shall be deemed to contract with the mortgagee that the mortgagor will defend, or, if the mortgagee be in possession of the mortgaged property, enable him to defend, the mortgagor's title thereto"—a clause which is very similar in terms to the covenant which roused the suspicions of the Munsif.

The District Judge on appeal in that case dismissed plaintiff's claim on an entirely different ground. He held that Attar Singh was an ala malik who had continuously occupied the soil without paying rent and that there was nothing to show that he was liable to be dispossessed by the mortgagee of a Malguzar's rights. Plaintiff, having lost his suit for possession, has now sued the mortgagor for refund of the principal amount, Rs. 500, and interest due under the terms of the mortgage contract and also for expenses incurred in the previous suit. The Munsif, 1st Class, granted plaintiff a decree for Rs. 800 with costs against the mortgagor defendant but the Additional Judge, as above pointed out, has dismissed the claim as barred by limitation, though upon the merits he finds an amount of Rs. 741-4-9 to be due to the plaintiff.

Plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court, and admittedly his suit must be held to be within time unless it is found that the contract of mortgage between him and the defendant mortgagor was a void transaction. In the latter event Article 62 would apply and the suit would be barred, otherwise Article 97 read with Article 116 of the Limitation Act would be applicable and the claim would be within time. Somewhat lengthy arguments have been addressed to me on the question whether the plaintiff was aware at the time of the mortgage that the mortgagor had no title to mortgage the land in plaintiff's favour and Mr. Faqir Chand lays great stress on the findings in the previous suit as shewing that plaintiff had full knowledge of all the facts and that the mortgage transaction was fictitious and speculative. As a matter of fact I can find no justification for holding that plaintiff knew that the defendant had no right or title to mortgage the land or that the contract between them was a mere nullity. It is true that the Munsif in the former suit held that the transaction was fictitious, but the reasons given by him for so deciding were unsound and erroneous. The District Judge in that suit certainly did not hold that the transaction was other than genuine, and the Munsif in the present case found distinctly upon this point in plaintiff's favour. It seems to me that plaintiff was more or less aware that he was taking upon himself a somewhat risky bargain, but I am by no means satisfied that he knew that the mortgagor had no title or that he and the mortgagor devised this transaction as a means whereby the easy-going and indolent mortgagor should be relieved of the necessity of suing for possession by getting the plaintiff to do that work for him. This appears to be a somewhat fantastic theory, for which there is no real foundation. I hold, therefore, that there was a genuine contract of mortgage at the time when it was effected, but that consideration failed subsequently when the District Judge in the former suit held, on the 14th December 1914, that the defendant, Attar Singh, could not be ejected from the land which Mahant Sundar Das had mortgaged to plaintiff. Upon this finding Article 97, read with Article 116 of the Limitation Act, is applicable and the suit is within time. Plaintiff is clearly entitled to the sum of Rs. 500, being the principal amount due on the mortgage, and I see no reason why he should be deprived of Rs. 250 allowed to him by the lower Courts as interest. Plaintiff is also entitled to costs incurred in the previous suit as set fourth in Exhibits P-6 and P-7, showing a total of Rs. 42 4-0 and also to Rs. 68 allowed by the Additional Judge. The total amount due to him, therefore, comes to Rs. 860-4-0 but from this must be deducted the sum of Rs. 112 which plaintiff has received as the produce of the land. The net balance, therefore, due to plaintiff is Rs. 748-4 0.

I accordingly accept the appeal and grant plaintiff a decree for the said sum with proportionate costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 497 OF 1917.

February 24, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Mittra, A. J. C.

Musammat MASUMBI—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

versus

DONGAR SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 2 AND 3—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. III, r. 4—Vakalatnama—Pleader's name omitted from body of vakalatnama—Appeal, presentation of, by Pleader, whether proper.

Under Order III, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, the appointment of a Pleader should be in writing signed by the person for whom the Pleader is to appear and act; every such appointment, when accepted by a Pleader, must be filed in Court. [p. 416, col. 1.]

Where a party delivers a vakalatnama to a Pleader duly signed by himself, but omits the name of the Pleader in the body of the vakalatnama, the latter has implied authority to fill in the details, and if the Pleader simultaneously accepts the vakalatnama and signs his name in token of acceptance, this is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law. [p 416, col 1.]

If in such a case the Pleader presents an appeal, the omission of his name in the body of the vakalatnama would not invalidate the presentation of the appeal. [p. 416, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, in Civil Appeal No. 93 of 1917, decided on the 27th July 1917.

Mr. C. B. Parikh, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. R. Prodhan for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4 and Mr. P. P. Vandya for Respondents Nos. 6 to 8.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been raised on behalf of the respondents that the appeal was not properly filed, inasmuch as the name of the Pleader who filed it has been omitted in the body of the vakalatnama. In support of this reliance is placed upon Mohammad Ali Khan v. Jasram (1). The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court follow an earlier ruling of that Court in Pokhpal Singh v. Damber Singh (2). I have not been able to trace that ruling and as no reasons are given in the decision reported in the Indian Law Reports (1), I must decide the case upon a construction of the Civil Procedure Code bearing on the point.

(2) 6 A. L. J. 110 Notes.

MASUMBI v. DONGARSINGH.

Order III, rule 4, requires the appointment of a Pleader to be in writing signed by the person for whom the Pleader is to appear and to act, and every such appointment, when accepted by a Pleader, shall be filed in Court. Where a party delivers a duly signed vakalatnama to a Pleader without putting his name in the body of the vakalatnama he impliedly authorises him to fill in the detail, and if, as in this case, the Pleader simultaneously accepts the vakalatnama, and signs his name in token of acceptance, the provisions of the law have been sufficiently complied with. The acceptance is in writing and was made in the presence of the party's agent who executed the power-of-attorney. The irregularity passed unnoticed in the office, otherwise the appellant's Pleader had sufficient time to have the oversight rectified. I hold, therefore, that no objection can be successfully taken to the proper presentation of the appeal.
